The Use and Abuse Of Truth Telling

By Mrs. FRANK LESLIE

TRUTH, like love, reaches at its one extremity to the very zenith and at the other sinks to the darkest depths. Love is the chief attribute of the deity, and debased possession is the delight of devils. So TRUTH, DIVINE AND GODLIKE IN ITS HIGHEST EXAMPLES, IS MADE A VERY INSTRUMENT OF DEMONS IN ITS DISTORTED FORM.

You know and I know that sort of truth teller, the malicious gleam of the eye, the fiendish gleam of the smile, the false ring of the voice, the stereotyped phrases and the inevitable result. Perhaps it is only a petty little sting after all, such as:

"Yes, dear, I thought you ought to know, and of course it is my duty to tell the truth, but she did say that your conduct on that occasion was very remarkable."

Or perhaps:

"They were admiring that gown of yours, and I felt obliged to tell them that it was made over from two others and not a Worth at all. I had to tell the truth, you know."

Or:

"Too bad your sister has married into an insane family. Oh, didn't you know it? Yes, indeed. His aunt on the father's side is in an asylum at this minute. I don't believe in suppressing the truth, do you?"

And perhaps it is SOMETHING FAR MORE DEADLY THAN THESE—a stab instead of a pin prick—as:

"Yes, a very pleasant man, as you say, but did you never hear that he was a convicted criminal?"

Then when you demand the full details of the unpleasant "truth" you find that long years ago, when this middle aged man was a lad, he had been tempted and in a moment of weakness appropriated moneys not his own, had been convicted of the offense and suffered the penalty. Shame, penitence and a life of undeviating probity have followed, and the sometime culprit has lived down his error and become a worthy citizen, but the truth teller will not let him escape and perhaps succeeds BY THIS DIABOLICAL FORM OF FRANKNESS in ruining his social prospects and the peace of all who have learned to love him.

I DON'T MEAN THAT ANY ONE SHOULD TELL LIES. NO, INDEED. I, TOO, AM A GREAT STICKLER FOR TRUTH, AND I, TOO, HAVE A WASHINGTONIAN OBJECTION TO TELLING A LIE. BUT THERE IS ALL THE DIFFERENCE IN THE WORLD BETWEEN TELLING A LIE AND NOT TELLING THE TRUTH.

Perhaps we are apt to lose sight of the three divisions of truth as set forth in the legal exhortation to tell "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." After all, however, the only part of this that applies to secular life is the last clause of the three. IF YOU TELL "NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH," YOU MUST USE YOUR OWN JUDGMENT AS TO "THE WHOLE TRUTH."

How to Make Knowledge A Power -:-

By Rev. Dr. LYMAN ABBOTT, Editor of the Outlook

KNOWLEDGE alone is not power. Wisdom alone is not power. Knowledge and wisdom are not identical. In order to make knowledge a power THERE MUST BE FORCE TO USE THAT KNOWLEDGE. Intellect is not enough. There must be a motive power to direct. It is sometimes said that reason governs. That is a mistake. Reason guides, but does not govern.

A simple proposition well put by Huxley is THE BEST DEFINITION OF EDUCATION I know: "Education is the instruction of the intellect in the laws of nature and the fashioning of the will to move in harmony with those laws. If it does not harmonize, it is not education." So if you are to be educated you must not only have a knowledge, but you must have the desire to move in harmony with the laws of the universe.

Law is a force in obedience to us which we use in accomplishing our purposes. Thus we have the laws of gravitation and of electricity. Our success in dealing with nature lies not in our knowledge of it, but in OUR SPONTANEOUS OBEDIENCE that enables us to make its laws serve us. The laws of nature are unchangeable, and for this reason we can make a multiplicity of changes in applying them. We compel electricity to obey us because we obey it.

IN THE SCIENTIFIC WORLD IT IS NECESSARY TO LIVE IN HARMONY WITH THE LAWS OF NATURE TO BE SUCCESSFUL. THIS IS JUST AS TRUE IN OUR INDIVIDUAL LIFE.

All of us violate the laws of nature. We learn that the laws are irreversible and then submit. Then we learn that if we live in harmony with them we become strong and vigorous.

This is just as true of the soul as of the body. We must understand the interrelationship of all the elements of our being. Every power we possess is splendid if well used, evil if badly used. Whether a quality is base or noble depends upon its adjustment to other qualities. The training of the motive power is what we call religion.

WHAT THE WORLD WANTS IS ACCOMPLISHMENTS, ACHIEVEMENTS, AND FOR THESE FORCE IS NECESSARY.

Not Many Can Stand Prosperity

By Rev. Dr. CHARLES A. EATON, Baptist, Cleveland, O.

WE are, perhaps, inclined to think that prosperity is always good, yet we have all seen something of THE FEARFUL HANDICAPS UNDER WHICH THE CHILDREN OF THE WEALTHY LABOR.

Most of us can stand adversity fairly well, but not many can stand prosperity. Doubtless we all think ourselves of the few who can stand prosperity, and certainly there are not many of us who would not be willing to undertake the trial of such a test. BUT GOD SEEMS TO KNOW BEST WHAT IS GOOD FOR US, for to most of us he does not give an opportunity to be so tested.

Elisha at Dothan

Next to an actual defeat for a commanding officer is the humiliation of having his strategic movements anticipated by his enemy. Here is an old Bible story of how a certain king of Syria was thus put to confusion. He said in the secrecy of his council of war, "I will make an ambuscade for the unwary Israelites at such and such a point." But his intended victims evaded his well-made p. Again he said, "I will make a predatory incursion upon the enemy's territory at such and such a point." But, behold, to his confusion he found the Israelites entrenched at that very point, at the very hour, in overwhelming numbers and in battle array.

The quaint narrative says this occurred not once nor twice. It happened continually and persistently. So much so that the king knew it could not be a coincidence. He could only account for it by treason among his staff officers. So he cried in rage, "Who of us is for the king of Israel?" Someone in Benhadad's council of war knew how the enemy was informed of the Syrian's movements, for he said, "There is no traitor among us, O king, but Elisha, the prophet, that is in Israel, telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bed-chamber." Benhadad showed characteristic obtuseness of a heathen when he undertook to cope with the infinite power and wisdom of God. As if the Omniscience which had kept Elisha informed of the king's secrets could not acquaint him with the danger of his own person! As if Omnipotence could not rescue him!

At break of day the prophet and his servant go to the hilltop to pray. They look down at Dothan, nestling there on the bench of the hill, an emblem of peace and security. The keen eye of the young man pierces beyond the city wall and through the gray of the morning. His eye dilates with wonder. His cheek blanches with fear. What has he seen? The city invested, the Syrian cohorts gleaming with purple and gold and the sheen of their spears! There stand the chariots of brass, with the pitiless sickle-blades in their wheels. It would be a forlorn hope that would cast itself against the impenetrable living fortress. A cry escapes the young man's lips, "Alas! my master! How shall we do?" The prophet does not upbraid his timorous servant. He has a kindly sympathy. He is solicitous that he shall be confirmed and established.

The prophet himself is fearless. His faith is as immovable as the mountain on which he stands. But this triumphant courage was not born of an instant—it is an evolution of years. He has witnessed the faithfulness of God in the emergencies of the sixty-three years in which he has held the prophetic office. How confidently can he say to his trembling servant at his side, "Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." The prophet commends his servant to God. He asks for him that which he does not need for himself—some visible manifestation of Divine power to offset the brave array of the enemy. "Lord, I pray Thee open his eyes that he may see."

The prophet's prayer is quickly and graciously answered. The protective forces of grace and providence for the time take visible and martial form. It is a brilliant and inspiring panorama. Pictures of flaming chariots with angel charioteers move before the wondering eyes of the prophet's servant, seraphic guards mass about the two who stand so solitary and defenseless on the mountain top. Again it is shown that the unseen is real, the invisible the mighty.

How changed the scene! These rocks, that lately lay
Opaque and dull beneath the sky,
Are robed in glory that outshines the sun.
Embattled legions gird the prophet round
With blazoned banners and heaven-tempered spears.
Horses and chariots, in whose fiery sheen,
The pomp of Syria's army but appears
Like a dim candle in the noonday blaze:
The mount is full of angels."

The Teacher's Lantern.

Benhadad and his secrets discovered is a parable of the human soul surprised that God can find it out.

This incident remarkably illustrates the omniscience of God. The Syrian monarch, in the seclusion of his harem—in his palace at Damascus, as he lay on his ivory couch, meditating his movements against Israel, speaks in soliloquy of his plans. The God that made the ear hears him in Damascus, and communicates the king's purpose to his servant, Elisah, in Samaria.

Linnaeus placed above the door of his lecture-room the motto, "Live Guiless: God Observes You."

The slowness of the human heart to apprehend God is further indicated by the next step taken by the Syrian king. He sends an army to make the prophet a prisoner. He had learned nothing in his failure to cope with the Omniscience of God. He challenges Omnipotence.

This effort to arrest the prophet set forth at once the temerity and impotence of the soul in its fight against God.

The timorous servant well represents some believers when they find themselves beleaguered by temptations and unfavorable conditions.

Too much literalism spoils the force of this incident. Horses and chariots only represent the forces of providence and grace which are available.

Well said Felix of Nola: "Where God is, a spider's web is as a wall; where He is not, a wall is as a spider's web."

There is a foregleam of the millennium in the prophet's merciful defense of his blinded enimies. He said to the king, "Thou shalt not smite them."

DOES JUDGE PARKER HOLD THESE VIEWS?

"I think that a dollar a day is enough for any man, provided that his work is steady. Any man can live on that, and that is all unskilled labor is worth. I am sorry to have to pay more than that, and wouldn't if we had a better supply of labor herabouts.—Candidate Parker two years ago.

"STAND pat."

STIR up your enthusiasm and attend the meeting in Oakland Saturday night. Everything is in readiness and a good old fashioned gathering is expected. Come!

GET READY FOR ELECTION DAY.

The main thing, now, is to make sure to get to the polls on election day. We don't need much more discussion or campaigning. The people have their minds pretty well made up what they intend to do on Election Day.

Be sure that you do it, that's all. Don't imagine that your vote is not needed.

The "issues" of the campaign have been thoroughly gone over. As far as Republicans, Independents and Gold Democrats are concerned, they did not need much discussion, for the issues as they see them are the same that were presented to the voters in 1898, 1900 and 1902. The only interest aroused among these voters was whether the Democratic party had any new issue to present. It did not have and was not even united in its opposition to the issue presented by the Republican Party.

So the question comes back to this: Shall we vote as we have voted in the recent past and keep the party in power which has a definite plan of government and legislation that has been tried and received the approval of the people, or shall we seek a change, split up Congress and install in power an unknown quantity?

There is little doubt as to how that question will be answered, if the voters go to the polls. The only fear is that through over-confidence the men who have sustained the hands of McKinley and Roosevelt may not turn out on Election Day and the opposition thereby be permitted to take the prize by default.

Turn out and vote for your Republican candidate for Congress and for Republican electors on the Presidential ticket. More than that, not only take yourself to the polls but get your neighbor to go with you. The result means undisturbed business conditions and continued peace and prosperity as well as safe, stable, and wise government.

ROOSEVELT AND HEBREWS.

The London Jewish Chronicle in its last issue commended upon the friendliness President Roosevelt has shown in Jews and the interest he has evinced in the oppressed of our race. Our contemporary says:

"Jews would be churlish ingrates if they did not recognize the efforts that the United States continue to put forward on behalf of their race. Opinion in England has differed since Lord Palmerston's day as to the desirability of a nation sallying forth like a knight-errant among the people of the world, in order to protect the weak and right the wrong. But the United States are still ready to break a lance on behalf of the oppressed, and after making all due allowance for electoral exigencies, we may hail President Roosevelt as the nearest approach to the political knight-errant that exists in the latter-day world. We do not forget his manly stand for the Roumanian Jews and his attempt to bring the signatory Powers of the Berlin Treaty to a sense of their obligations under an instrument to which his government was not a party. Some dispatches which were printed only last week bore striking testimony to the deep interest which the President still takes in the situation of our Roumanian brethren. Nor will Jews forget the part Mr. Roosevelt played in the Kishineff agitation. The President refers to his action in the course of his letter of acceptance of the Republican nomination. With perfect justice he remarks that 'no other administration in our history, no other government in the world, has more consistently stood for the broadest spirit of brotherhood in our common humanity—or has had a more resolute attitude of protest against every wrong that outraged the civilization of the age, at home and abroad.' The President's uniformly kind attitude towards our people has earned him, in the columns of the Siecle—a friendly journal—the title of "The New Moses.' His conduct probably springs not so much from a love of Jews, as from a passion of right. But Jews will not, on that account withhold from him the gratitude due for his labors in their behalf."

This testimony from the chief organ of English Jewry is eloquent evidence of how our brethren abroad regard President Roosevelt's endeavors to be of service to our people.—American Hebrew.

THE Democrats are not agreed among themselves whether they want a protective tariff or a modified system of free trade. In West Virginia they do not dare to advocate removing protection from home industries. The Southern Democrats, however, are thirsting to tackle the tariff law. If the Democrats should carry the House it would be the Southern free traders who would rule the roost, and not the conservaties. The Southerners would wipeout every industry in West Virginia in a jiffy if they could.

COL. GEORGE A. PEARRE has gained a national reputation during his three terms in Congress, for his ability as a speaker and as untiring worker on behalf of his district, and the State of Maryland. It is confidently believed that he will be re-elceted by over 3,000 majority. He will be in harmony with the national administration, as the election of Roosevelt and Fairbanks is practically conceded by well-posted, candid Democrats. He may not be able to speak in Oakland during the campaign, but has heretofore spoken here and is known personally to most of our people. They will give him a rousing vote and it is believed that he will receive the votes of many Democrats in this county.

OCTOGENARIAN DAVIS is declaiming against Davis' parsimony.

DAVE HILL AND FREE COAL.

David B. Hill's campaign speeches are typical of the Democratic campaign which is "all things to all men" and reckless personal abuse of the President. Mr. Hill is a tariff reformer. He is a free trader regarding everything not produced in New York. In the Fity-third Congress, he favored putting coal on the free list and two years ago he drafted the New York Democratic platform in favor of condemning the anthracite coal mines and having the Government take possession of them. And yet Mr. Hill condemned Mr. Bryan as a socialist because Mr Bryan favored the government ownership of railroads. New Yory has railroads, but not coal mines.

Last week Mr. Hill went all over West Virginia campaigning with Henry G. Davis without even mentioning tariff in his speeches. The Democratic candidate for Vice President lives in a coal producing State, interested in coal mines and is not in favor of free coal. Mr. Hill could not abuse the hospitality of his candidate for Vice President by attacking his business interests while riding through his State with him. So the great New Yorker confined himself to petty slanders against the President.

Out in Indiana Mr. Hill again became a tariff reformer and demanded that coal be placed on the free list. There he spoke his own and his party's true sentiments. The Democrats would take the tariff off all coal and let in the bituminous coal from New Brunswick to compete with our own. The Wilson bill had coal on the free list when it passed the House. The self-interests of Senator Gorman prevented the Senate from passing the bill in that form. He secured a duty of forty cents a ton on bituminous coal and even with that duty the production of coal in the United States fell off 10,000,000 tons in the year 1894. Thousands of miners lost their jobs, and lockouts, no strikes, prevailed throughout the coal regions.

The election of a Democratic Congress in 1894 was the greatest disaster that has come to the coal miners in the last twenty-five years. The election of a Democratic Congress this year would bring the same conditions we had in 1894. No Democratic tariff bill would be Democratic without taking the duty off coal. Anthracite coal has always been on the free list because there is no other such coal anywhere else in the world to compete with it. But bituminous coal is as abundant in Europe, China and Japan as in this country, and in China, where the greatest coal fields in the world exist, there is the cheapest labor in the world. Free coal would place the American miner in competition with Cooley labor in China. A Democratic Congress would mean free coal and equal competition of Chinese Cooley laber with that of the coal miner in the United States. Do the miners want that kind of competition?

IT IS a long and tedious process to build up prosperity in a nation through wise legislation. It is very easy to demolish the work of years in a short time by unwise legislation. The Democratic tariff act of the last Cleveland Administration paralyzed business even upon the prospect of its enactment. The Republican tariff act that was passed after Cleveland's Congress went out relieved the depression and started industries going. Don't let the Democrats have the House of Representatives this fall. It is true they could not enact anything but they would scare the country and frighten employers of labor.

DAVE HILL is old enough to know that the people appreciate the difference between argument and coarse, vulgar, passionate abuse.

NON-PROTECTED INDUSTRY.

In 1896, the last year of Clevelandism and the operation of the Wilson-Gorman law, the freight carried by the railroads of this country amounted to about 700,000,000 tons. The freight carried during the year 1904 under Republicanism and the operation of the Dingely tariff law, will amount to fully double that number of tons. In 1896 the wages paid railroad employees amounted to $468,000,000. In 1904 the wages paid to the railroad employees of the United States will exceed $800,000,000, or almost double the wages paid under free trade.

The number of employees in 1896 was 826,620. In 1904 the number of employes is 1,400,000, or an increase of nearly 600,000 men. In 1896, 58 railroads with about 13,000 miles of track, representing over $1,000,000,000 of stocks and bonds, were sold under foreclosure. During 1903 roads representing only $15,000,006 of stocks and bonds were sold. While 74 roads in 1893, with stocks and bonds representing nearly $2,000,000,000 were placed under receiverships, yet at the present time only three or four roads, with stocks and bonds representing only $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 and with less than 100 miles of track, are under receiverships. Thus we see that under the administration of the Republican party and under the operation of the protective tariff our railroad statistics, whether we consider the shareholders or the employes, or the amount of business done, are fully double today what it was during the administration of Grover Cleveland and the operation of the Wilson-Gorman tariff law.

REPUBLICAN zeal has not been slackened by the efforts of the Democrats to make a "Roosevelt issues." Their faith is supported by his works.

THE JUDICIAL CANDIDATE.

We have already characterized in suitable terms Judge Parker's deliberate repetition at Esopus of his grossly false assertion that in addition to an original outlay of $20,000,000, this country has "wasted more than $650,000,000 of the people's money" on the Philippines. The original statement, wrong to the extent of about $450,000,000, as the official records prove, was presumably a blunder due to sheer ignorance. Its reaffirmation after exposure cannot be accounted for except on an hypothesis which it would be painful to suggest.

But this wild perversion was not the only amazing feature of Judge Parker's speech. He quoted from an unnamed observer a description of conditions in the Philippines which, according to the latest and most authorative testimony, bears not the remotest resemblance to the truth, and much of which, indeed, is preposterous on the face of it. Yet the Democratic candidate is not ashamed on the basis of these fantastic inventions of one unknown witness, to pronounce judgment and demand redress.

Is this the course which Judge Parker has been in the habit of pursuing on the bench? Was it his custom, as a trial judge, to ignore all the rest of the evidence, accept as conclusive a single individual's unsupported allegations and order a verdict to correspond? Did he make it a practice during the latter part of his judicial career to apply that treatment to cases on appeal, and vote for affirmation or reversal, according as a fragment of the evidence harmonized with his sympathies or interests? Has Judge Parker unlearned in three months the judicial methods of twenty years? Or was he merely successful while on the bench in concealing the proofs of his prejudice and partisanship?—New York Tribune.

MISREPRESENTATION and personal abuse has never formed a ladder strong enough to support a national party in its ambitious climb to power.

The New York Herald last Wednesday said editorially that the election of Mr. Roosevelt appears probable and is an almost foregone conclusion, and that his chances are increasing every day. The New York Herald a few months ago was inclined to the position that Parker might win. Its change of opinion is significant. A few days ago Judge Parker gave utterance to a speech on the Philippines that was dangerous to the peace and welfare of those islands. His speech was condemned throughout the land and found few responsive chords in the breasts of American citizens, who realize the grave and difficult problem this Government has to face in the East. In direct reply to this speech of Judge Parker the New York Herald says:

"Judge Parker, for example, must surely realize that he cannot arouse the American people over the Philippines or the Filipinos. For good or for evil and with the sacrifice of American blood the islands have been acquired, and the United States can abandon them no more than Germany could abandon the annexed provinces of Alsace and Lorraine.

"Such questions do not concern practical politics; they are of interest only to debating societies, and the question of home rule for the Filipinos has only a theoretical importance. Political considerations have compelled Germany to maintain a distinction between Alsace-Lorraine and the remainder of the empire. Yet the people of those provinces have as high a conception of their civic duties as other inhabitants of Germany. One cannot say the same of the Filipinos as compared with the American people. Even Judge Parker would not argue that the general levels of intelligence and education or the standards of industry and enterprise are as high in the Philippine Islands as they are in the United States. It would be more practical, threfore, and more beneficial for the Filipinos than to indulge in oratory about their thoretical right to autonomy and independence."

The New York Herald recognizes that the American people will not elect as President a man who offers nothing except a rebellion against the authority of the United States with all the consequent loss of life and expenditure of money.

If Judge Parker speaks again he will lose the few remaining friends he has. The New York Herald says also that "Mr. Roosevelt's chances are increased by the people's misgivings as to the reality of the 'change of heart' that the Democratic leaders profess to have experienced. Mr. Bryan's grip upon his party has been ostensibly shaken off, but have all traces of his disorganizing reign been eradicted? Have the leaders of the Democratic party definitely foresworn populism, silverism and other utopianisms which the American people as a whole will never sanction? Sufficient time has not yet elapsed since the Democracy recovered its senses to permit of a trust-worthy reply being given to such questions."

In other words, the country has not been mislead by the Hill-Parker telephone-telegraph trick. The people have had time to see through that smooth, little vote-catching game ahd will look elsewhere for a man for President, not one nominated by Dave Hill and given to making speeches calculated to incite sedition.

IT MAY be strange, but you never hear Democrats warning each other of the danger of over-confidence.

IT IS funny how little interest a Democrat has in bulletin boards the morning after election.

JUDGE PARKER advises young men to begin at the bottom and work up. We would like to see a well digger following that advice.

POLITICAL independence can not become entirely secure without industrial independence. The protective tariff insures industrial independence.

COST OF PHILIPPINES.

The avidity with which Judge Parker and ex-Secretary Olney swallowed the statement that the Philippines had cost this country $650,000,000, and the pertinacity with which they cling to it, after its falsity has been proved again and again, are past the comprehension of persons in Washington who are familiar with the real conditions in the Philippines.

That the cost of the Philippines, including the $20,000,000 paid to Spain, amounted, up to May 1, 1902, to $186,000,000, has been established beyond dispute. No Democratic member of either house of Congress has dared to challenge Secretary Root's statement to that effect. The cost to this country for the following year has been shown to be $3,080,000, and for the year just ended $2,100,000, a total of $794,180,000. That has been the actual cost of the Philippines up to June 30, 1904.

The statement Mr. Parker permitted himself to repeat when he declared that "over 200,000 lives have been sacrificed" is equally false. The total loss of life of American troops and Filipinos in the American army from all causes has amounted to 4,067 privates and 155 officers, a total of 4,222 men. Even adding to this number the loss of Filippino insurgents, a liberal estimate of which is less than 10,000 the grand total aggregates 14,000, against Mr. Parker's 200,000. Moreover, the totals here given include deaths from wounds, sickness, drowning, and other accidents, and, an important contributory causes, the contagious diseases which, unrestrained, ravaged Americans and Filipinos when American occupation began. Only 126,000 American soldiers all told have been sent to the Philippines.

As an offset to this loss of life should be set the magnificent work of the army medical corps, and of the health officers of the Philippine Commission, whose unremitting efforts have stamped out the plague, reduced smallpox and other contagious diseases to a minimum, and rendered the Philippines as healthful as Cuba.

That unintelligent campaign speakers should quote the extravagant charges of the partisan press without taking the trouble to investigate them, may not be surprising, but that men of higher standing should reiterate them, especially in the face of the testimony of high minded and unimpeachable witnesses, is a source of amazement. The Insular Bureau points to the interview with the Most Reverend J. J. Harty, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Manila, cabled from the Philippines, as indisputable evidence of existing conditions in the Philippines. Archbishop Harty's testimony agrees with that of Dr. Brent, the Episcopal Bishop of Manila, who is now in this country. The Archbishop, after returning from an extended tour through the Islands, declared his hope that Theodore Roosevelt would be elected President of the United States, and said:

"I was impressed during my journeyings by the progress of American institutions among the masses of the people, the general happiness, the security of person and property, and the supremacy of order and justice. I believe that under divine guidance the benificent rule of America is destined ultimately to place the Christian Malay race on a moral and political plane that as yet has never been attained by an Oriental people. This task that the Americans have assumed they cannot shirk or abandon. This work that Governor Taft so auspiciously began and that Governor Wright continues, must be carried to a triumphant conclusion."

Archbishop Harty is eminently qualified to judge of the situation. In his nine months' residence at Manila he has held exhaustive conferences with the bishops and provincial priests. He has spent months living with the people, travelling practically alone and unguarded even in the remotest provinces, inspecting parishes and visiting the people in their homes. In some of the districts he visited it had been thirty years since a bishop had been there.

Nor is the testimony of these churchmen isolated. Every one who has had an opportunity to judge of conditions in the Philippines as they actually exist, brings to Washington the same story of progress. The Philippine government is being judiciously administered, the people are prosperous, Christianity is thriving under the freedom of American policies, and the pernicious influence on a few excitable Filipinos of the false assertions of Democratic candidites and speakers is now the only menace to uninterrupted peace and prosperity in the Philippines.

THE "Forget It" clubs may look for a marked increase in membership from Democratic quarters after November 8.

THERE can never be any lack of humor in the campaign, so long as the Democrats insist upon taking themselves seriously.

THE producers should receive consideration. Industrial policies can not be planned in the interests of those who produce nothing, who contribute nothing to the commonwealth.

AMERICAN workingmen are not afraid of competition with each other. They will take their chances. Its the low priced fellows on the other side the water that they fear.

IF WE have high wages and high civilization for the masses in this country, then in order to keep wages on a high plane a tariff is indispensable.

A good story is told on a well known Grantsville inebriate who recently went to Johnstown, Pa., got drunk, bolted into the Cambria steel works, laid down in a corner and went to sleep. Some time later he was discovered by an employe who roused him from his drunken stupor, saying: "What in the h—l are you doing here?" The Grantsville man answered: "Nothing as yet, and it may be that I'm in the wrong department." The questioner then asked the Grantsville man where he was from: "Well," said the poor fellow as he viewed with a horrified expression of countenance the blazing fires and the rain of sparks falling all around them, "I lived at Grantsville, Md., before I died."—Salisbury Star.

JUDGE KEEDY'S NEW RULE

About Selecting Jurymen is a Good One.

Judge Keedy drew the jurors for the November term of court in Washington county Saturday afternoon. Before doing so he made an important announcement in regard to the drawing of juries which will govern this duty hereafter. He said that personal requests to have names put in the box had been of frequent occurrence, but the Court of Appeals, in 76 Md. 510, has decided in effect that the judge must not place a name in the box at the suggestion of anyone, and that a jury so drawn is illegal. The judge must select the two hundred names from the tax lists and poll books, and in order that the legality of a jury drawn by him may not be questioned he would not use the name of any person by request. The reason given is that the person interested may be interested in securing the attendance of certain persons to serve on the jury. The law is strictly followed in other counties, and Judge Keedy said he proposed to adhere to it here.

THREE FIRE ALARMS IN ONE DAY.

Friday the Volunteer Firemen Had a Strenuous Experience Answering Alarms.

With three fire alarms sounded inside a space of a few hours and all of them caused by a fire originating in the old Walker house at the head of Second street, the volunteer firemen of Oakland had a strenuous day. The building is now owned by Mr. E. S. Green and occupied by his family.

The first alarm was made about nine o'clock in the morning. The fire was discovered in an unoccupied room over the kitchen and had burned through a door leading from the room into the hallway and was makconsiderable headway when the department arrived. The fire was soon put out and little damage resulted. The second and third alarms took place within a few minutes of each other about three o'clock in the afternoon. This time the fire was discovered at the foot of the back stairway and some distance from the first fire. This was also quickly put out, slight damage resulting

The room is very handsome and Mr. Hart and his efficient clerk are correspondingly happy.

She Took His Advice.

"I am so very unhappy, Mr. Brief," said the fair petitioner for a divorce to her lawyer.

"Have you anything in particular wrong?" the legal gentleman asked sympathetically.

"No, nothing in particular," sighed the fair petitioner. "I am simply miserable, and I am seeking for which you cannot advise."

"Well, madam," said the lawyer, swinging around in his chair, "I will advise you to go out and drink two or three or four cocktails. But, as it is, I am afraid I am not competent to deal with the situation."

The fair petitioner wept after she left petitioner again called at the office of her lawyer. This time she was all smiles.

"And, oh, Mr. Brief," she said when she arose to go at the end of the conference, "you were just lovely to be so much for your advice as to how to get rid of the blues. Like all your other advice, it was excellent."

"You—you—" gasped the lawyer.

"Yes, I said the very lady. I took them."—New York Press.

Jack's Prayer.

Five-year-old Jack is very brave in the daytime, but is very much afraid when it is dark. The other night after having prayed for all his relatives he mournfully concluded his supplication in the following words:

"And, dear God, please do take care of Jack when it gets dark and the light is all gone. Don't let anything hurt him, please, and don't let anybody get him. Then changing his tone to a cheerful one he added: "And you needn't bother about him in the daytime, Lord. Just let him alone and he can have a good time and take care of himself."—Philadelphia Press.

A Habit With Her.

"There goes Mrs. Giddegh," remarks the woman in the wicker rocker on the porch of the summer hotel. "One hears a great deal about her flirtations. They say she got acquainted with her husband by flirting with him."

"Humph!" says the callow lady on the settee. "That's how she got acquainted with mine.—Judge.

In the Shadow of the Dollar

By HOWARD FIELDING

Copyright, 1904, by Charles W. Hooke

WITH his jaw laid in the hollow of his hand as if he had a toothache, Dr. Willard Kirby paced the floor of his office. He was a tall young man, high shouldered and bony, and he had a loose jointed gait, slightly suggestive of a skeleton propelling itself without the usual assistance from the softer fabric of the muscles. His face was intelligent and rather pleasing, except for the deep lines across the forehead, which were partly fixed and partly the result of his strenuous mental effort of the moment.

Dr. Kirby was grappling with a remarkable problem, which gripped him in return as if with a dozen strong hands. It took hold upon his heart, his pocket, his professional honor and his private conscience. It arose out of the following facts:

In the early spring he had been called to attend old Putnam Durland, incomparably the best patient that had ever come his way. Upon this occasion the regular family physician was not to be found, and therefore the millionaire's grandson, Robert Walbridge, had summoned Dr. Kirby, with whom he had a slight acquaintance. It was not a great emergency, except as all illness is serious to a man of ninety years, but Mr. Durland was well pleased with the young doctor and angry with his former medical adviser, whom he promptly discharged and appointed Kirby in his place. The advantages, emoluments and incidental consequences of this appointment had changed the face of the world for Kirby, and he had expressed a hearty gratitude to Bob Walbridge.

Under the venerable Mr. Durland's roof there dwelt a strange and inharmonious assemblage of prospective heirs. There was Mrs. Rebecca Durland, dark and tragic, a picture all in straight lines—straight black eyebrows, straight thin lips, straight meager shoulders and a perennial black dress that hung straight down as rigid as iron. She was the widow of the old man's eldest son. There was Mrs. Julia Starr, daughter of his sister, long since deceased. Mrs. Starr was a weak woman of a straw yellow hue who seemed to be listening and waiting and always sat on the extreme edge of a chair so that she might jump up the quicker to claim her share of the money. There was a Mr. Starr, brother of Mrs. Starr's deceased husband. Mr. Starr naturally had no great expectations, and he revealed that fact by the settled melancholy of his visage. He was and had been for many years a clerk in a broker's office, and he sometimes spoke of Wall street operations with the air of one who directed them.

Robert Walbridge has been mentioned already. He was a big, handsome, reckless young fellow, a close pattern of his grandfather at the same age.

Lastly there was Celia Graydon, a very lovable girl with violet eyes and fine spun red hair of the sort that seems softly self illumined. Her relationship to Mr. Durland was exceedingly remote, but she was dear to his heart. He looked forward to her marriage with Robert Walbridge when the young man should have proved his capacity to strive with the world and subdue the perils of a hasty disposition. The attitude of the young people toward this match was somewhat indeterminate. It was viewed by the other heirs with natural disfavor. Mrs. Rebecca Durland had a son in the west; Mrs. Starr had two daughters at boarding school, "and, for goodness' sake," as she expressed it, "what do we want of any more?"

Early in the summer there had been an ebullition in the Durland household, and Robert Walbridge had boiled out over the edge of the kettle. He had a way of disappearing at such times, to the grief of Celia and the wrath of Mr. Durland. The others would always be anxious, though sustained by hope of the worst, and on the occasion in question they had good grounds, for it was reported that Robert had gone back to certain political associates whom his grandfather especially despised. Shortly after graduation from college the young man had developed a taste for politics and had not only chosen the wrong side (as his grandfather viewed it), but had formed friends who were not considered reputable even by one another.

The first direct communication between Robert and any member of the household took the form of a note which Celia received one afternoon in August. It ran as follows:

Dear Celia—I am in a terrible mess of trouble—under arrest and all that. You will get a better story from the evening papers than I can write, for, upon my word, I don't yet understand it myself. Worthington Winslow accuses me of something, but whatever it is I didn't do it. I want you to trust me and believe in me, yet that is not what I am going to ask of you.

Don't let my grandfather hear of this. I have been trouble enough to him, heaven knows why or how, but I have. I don't want to add this to it. I hear that he is ill and confined to his room. At his age there is danger that even a slight illness may take a fatal turn, and I wish that he might go to his rest—if he must go now—untroubled by any further cares on my account. Please do your best. Dr. Kirby will help you. ROBERT.

Celia ran out to get the afternoon papers, but they contained nothing about young Mr. Walbridge. When she had satisfied herself of this she hurried to Dr. Kirby's office and laid the matter before him.

Even at that early date Kirby's self interest would have prompted him to permit the disclosure of this news to Mr. Durland and secure the disinheritance of Robert and his final banishment from the house. Kirby was already in love with Celia, though he had as yet no more than a hint of the burning fire that subsequently fed upon his heart. Of course he promised to assist her, for he could not set himself up as one of the enemy. It was better to be on her side and fail with her. Failure seemed certain to him at that time, for there was no news which Mrs. Rebecca Durland would more gladly carry to her father-in-law than the story of Robert Walbridge's disgrace.

However, the most terrible thing about Mrs. Rebecca was her own New England conscience, and Kirby had a faint suspicion of this truth. It was at least possible that he could frighten her into silence, and this should be a great service to Celia, who was doubly anxious to obey the instructions of the letter, first, because she did not wish to see Robert cut off from his inheritance, and, second, because she truly believed that the shock of such news might kill Mr. Durland.

The result of this situation was a conspiracy between Celia and Kirby, by means of which Mr. Durland was kept for more than a month in ignorance of the fact that his grandson was under arrest. Kirby succeeded in frightening Mrs. Rebecca Durland, and she controlled such other members of the household as might have had an interest in bearing the story into the room to which the patient was confined during this period.

Circumstances greatly assisted the plot. The news of Walbridge's arrest was withheld from the newspapers through the exercise of mysterious influences. It was a political affair in one sense and was buried so cleverly that Kirby had great difficulty in getting at the facts.

It appeared that a political contribution in the form of a check for $12,000 had been drawn as usual to the order of "the bearer." This had come into the care of Worthington Winslow, an important personage at the headquarters of his party. It was through Winslow's "pull" that Walbridge obtained his position, and he acted as a minor assistant to that exalted individual. By means of the opportunity thus afforded he obtained possession of the $12,000 check, cashed it at the bank and gave the money to a confederate waiting outside. Then he returned to the political headquarters, where he was subsequently arrested.

This was the accusation in the rough. If Walbridge had made any defense Kirby could not learn what it was. His lawyers advised absolute silence and told Kirby that if he was Walbridge's friend he couldn't do better than to let the whole matter alone.

"The man who drew that check," said they, "won't let this case come to trial. Even if the money doesn't show up Walbridge will be released in a little while. It's in the interests of both sides that this case should be 'on the quiet.'"

Kirby conveyed this view to Celia, and, though she raged against it and protested her confidence in Robert's innocence, she did not know what else to do. The case remained strictly "on the quiet," as the young man's lawyers had expressed it, and Robert was buried in the city prison as if it had been the old bastile. His name, however, remained in his grandfather's will, set opposite a sum decided upon in the days of the closest affection between them.

Mr. Durland was no better in health, and for all that Kirby knew he might be worse. Kirby had had very scanty experience with patients of advanced age. He was assiduous and sincere in his efforts. He pretended to understand everything, to have foreseen everything, to be prepared for everything, but in reality he was sorely puzzled. He should have called in a more experienced physician, but he dared not do so, having always in mind the fate of his predecessor.

Meanwhile he was falling more and more deeply in love with Celia, and fears were besetting him. The specter of Robert Walbridge haunted him. He was afraid that Mr. Durland would die suddenly and leave Robert a fortune. He was afraid that the case against Robert would lapse and that he would come home and be forgiven. How should it be prevented? How should Celia and Robert be separated forever? That was the problem that racked Kirby's brain as he paced the floor of his office on that October afternoon.

His decision surely did him no credit, for it was false, tricky and dishonorable. He decided that the news must come to Mr. Durland's ears. That Robert had remained so long passive under the accusation was proof of his guilt. It was not just that a thief should inherit a fortune in the dark.

As a result of his strenuous meditations Kirby thrust on his hat and went to a public telephone, where he called up the office of Stanley Curtis, who was Mr. Durland's attorney. Pretending to be a reporter, Kirby inquired about Robert Walbridge, rumored to be incarcerated in the city prison. Mr. Curtis had not heard the rumor; he was amazed by it; he would investigate immediately.

Kirby took a long walk and then went to the Durland house as if upon his usual late afternoon call. Mrs. Rebecca met him in the hall, her face wearing a cast iron smile.

"Mr. Curtis just called by telephone," said she. "He has heard about Robert."

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Kirby. "You haven't told Mr. Durland?"

"HERE, YOU!" HE CRIED.

"No," she replied. "I was waiting for you. I told Mr. Curtis what you had advised."

"And what did he say?"

"He only said 'Nonsense!'" retorted Mrs. Rebecca, smiling somewhat more broadly.

At this moment Celia came flying down the stairs.

"Who are all these men?" she cried. "All these men who are coming into the yard?"

"Bless my soul!" exclaimed Kirby. "I don't know."

The bell rang sharply. A servant opened the door. A voice without said: "I would like to see Mr. Durland. I represent the Herald."

Then there was a confused murmur out of which, as it seemed, the tall form of Stanley Curtis emerged as if he had broken his way through a mob.

"Mr. Curtis," cried Kirby, "if I were you I wouldn't"—

The lawyer was already halfway up the stairs.

"We have done our duty," said Mrs. Rebecca, folding her hands upon her bosom.

Celia was busy with the reporters, and Kirby with his own nerves, which were jumping out of his body. Presently a noise above attracted the attention of all. Celia turned about, and a gust of wind blew the front door open as the girl's hand slipped from the knob.

The majestic form of old Putnam Durland appeared upon the stairs, his white hair waving behind him.

"Here, you!" he cried, waving his hand to the reporters on the steps. "Come in here. I've got something to say to you. And to you," he cried, catching sight of Kirby—"you've known of this from the beginning, and you've kept it away from me. That's settled your case. Send in your bill, sir; send in your bill. As for you, Celia, I forgive you. Women are not supposed to have any judgment; they're better without it. And now, boys," he added, turning to the reporters, "I'm ready for you. It appears that a crooked old rascal named Worthington Winslow, whose unsavory record I know from 1868 down to the present time, has got my boy Robert—Robert Walbridge, my dead daughter's child—into a peck of trouble. Well, gentlemen, I'm going to get him out again. You may say in your paper that every dollar I have in the world is back of this.

"I know where that money has gone. It has gone into Winslow's greasy pocket. My lawyer here, Mr. Curtis, got wind of this thing an hour ago, and he has seen my boy, who has been wrongly advised by a couple of crooked political lawyers. He says that Winslow gave him that check and told him to give the money to a certain man. Simple, perfectly simple! How was my boy going to prove it? Nobody saw Winslow give him the check; nobody knows who got the money. Winslow has influence; Robert hasn't any—or wouldn't have if I were on my deathbed, as Winslow supposed me to be. But I'm very much alive in spite of a bad doctor, and if you gentlemen will watch the developments of the next few days you will see the last of Mr. Worthington Winslow. That's all at present. For further particulars see Mr. Curtis."

The reporters exchanged glances; they scented a fine fight. Unfortunately, however, the game was spoiled by Winslow himself, who decamped next day, leaving a shortage in his accounts, which explained the desperate trick he had played on Walbridge.

Robert came home and was forgiven, and there was general amnesty all around, except for poor Kirby, who was a victim of justice blindfolded.

"If he hadn't sense enough to know what I'd do in a case of this kind," said Mr. Durland, "he hasn't sense enough to be my doctor, so there's the end of him, and there's no need to discuss the matter either."

Cavalry Raid on Gunboats

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

November 4, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

FORREST crowned a dashing raid along the Tennessee river in rear of the Federal army by attacking and destroying the fortified post and naval armament at Johnsonville on Nov. 4, 1864. The patrol of the Tennessee by hostile gunboats had seriously interfered with the freedom of Forrest's guerrilla warfare in west Tennessee, a fact which stirred him to unusual deeds of desperation, incredible as this may seem in view of his past exploits. Covered by their gunboats, the Federals, who were in strong force east of the river, could cross and recross at will.

The first collision between the raiding cavalry and the gunboats took place near Paris, where Forrest had stationed Buford's mounted division with orders to "blockade the river." Batteries of horse artillery were posted in some old Confederate works at Fort Heiman and Paris Landing. A victim soon appeared before the well masked guns in the shape of the Federal transport steamer Mazeppa, heavily laden with army stores. A heavy fire speedily crippled the steamer's machinery, and she drifted ashore, abandoned by her crew. Some of Buford's men swam to the wreck and got her to the western bank, where busy hands were unloading her rich cargo of hard bread, blankets, shoes and other military stores when three Federal gunboats hove in sight and opened fire upon the captive ship. Buford promptly fired the transport, and the gunboats dropped away down the river.

Another transport came on the scene, but managed to escape in spite of the heavy fire poured upon her. Next came the transport Venus, convoyed by the tin clad gunboat Undine. The raiders permitted the Undine to pass by the guns a short distance, then opened fire. The little ship fought for half an hour, then dropped down and took shelter in a bend in the river between two hostile batteries. Meanwhile Forrest in person came on the scene and ordered a fresh attack in true cavalry style. Two light guns were brought to bear, and several companies of troopers dismounted and worked their way through the brush to the river bank, where they plied their carbines at the portholes of the steamer. The men on the Undine attempted to make a fight, but were compelled to close their ports against the rain of sharpshooters' bullets. Finally a well aimed shot passed through her from stem to stern, and the survivors of her crew escaped to the shore.

The Undine drifted to shoal water, and two companies of raiders rushed aboard and hoisted the stars and bars. She mounted eight guns and, with the captive transport Venus, was instantly manned and armed for battle against her former owners. After raising steam the new crew, all landsmen from the cavalry ranks, steered for Paris landing, cheered by the whole cavalcade which flanked the novel fleet on both banks of the river. Meanwhile another Yankee gunboat hove in sight, having been drawn by the sound of Forrest's cannon, and began to shell the Confederate batteries on land. By shifting their guns the raiders drove this boat back up the river. The Undine had had in tow two barges, one of which was laden with sutler's stores, and these the raiders appropriated individually. This was the first occasion since the destruction of the Confederate fleet at Memphis in 1862 when the cavalry had seen their flag floating over a warship, and, as the captive needed repairs, the day was given over to merrymaking and tinkering up the tin clad Yankee gunboat. At nightfall Forrest made ready for a descent upon the Federal post at Johnsonville.

In anticipation of serious work on the water the cavalry ranks were scoured for men with some knowledge of seafaring. A Kentucky captain took command of the eight gun ship Undine, and a lieutenant colonel hoisted a pennant over the two gun transport Venus. Forrest went on board the tin clad, and the novel fleet started on a trial trip over the stretch of water between Paris landing and Fort Heiman.

One incident of this trip was the loading on board the Venus of the military stores taken from the Mazeppa. Next day, however, the little flotilla ran into three Yankee gunboats, and the Venus, with all the plunder, went back to its original owner. Forrest had already planted a brigade with a battery of horse artillery in the bushes opposite Johnsonville, and the Undine, with all the land forces, rallied at that point to wait for a favorable opportunity to attack.

The new post at Johnsonville, with that at Paris Landing, several miles distant, completely blockaded the river, but five Federal gunboats roamed the channel between these points. Before Forrest was ready for the grand swoop of the raid these gunboats began a wild shelling of the shore, and a day was spent in skirmishing, in which the Undine took part. Finally two gunboats came up from Johnsonville on one side of the Undine while she was under fire from the boats on the other side, and her crew of amateur sailors turned the head of the ship into the bank, set her on fire and made off for their horses, preferring saddle, carbine and saber to anything afloat just then. This ended Forrest's naval operations, but not his warfare on the navy of his foes.

During the course of the war the Federal post at Johnsonville had been fortified by a strong, heavily armed redoubt, built upon a hill commanding the river. The vast military depot was inclosed with a long line of rifle pits, and at the time Forrest arrived three gunboats lay in the river, which at that point is 800 yards wide. Forrest attacked from the opposite or west side of the river, which was under the guns of the Federal redoubt.

The scene where Forrest was compelled to operate had already been looked to by the Federals. The bank is abrupt and about twenty feet above water level. Inshore the land falls away, and a forest of large trees had been cut away close to the river to prevent a hostile approach of the kind Forrest was attempting. But the old raider never flinched from impossibilities and sent a man of deeds, General Lyon, to the spot to establish guns within range of the enemies' gunboats and other shipping at the landing.

Lyon and his men hauled four guns by hand through the woods and stumps to the natural rampart formed by the high bank. Working all night, the raiders excavated chambers in the bank and cut four embrasures opening on the river, which they hid from the foe by transplanting bushes in front of them. Just below the town six more guns were hauled to the front in the same way and screened by bushes, but were not sunk, for Forrest wished them ready to speed away after any gunboats which should attempt to escape down the river when the bombardment opened. While this work was in progress the colonels and brigadiers posted their best shots in the timber lining the west bank behind logs and in ravines where they could have range on the gunboats.

At 12 o'clock on the 4th all was ready on the Confederate side. Forrest ordered the guns to open at 2 o'clock, and to secure uniformity all the watches of the officers were set uniformly. The enemy little dreamed of the tempest ahead. Some gunboats cruising around dropped down the river, but three at the landing were resting idly with steam up, their sailors washing their clothes on deck. Soldiers were moving about and passengers, including ladies, were taking steamers to depart. Says an eyewitness: "Forrest anxiously surveyed the scene until the moment for action had come. Then, aiming with his own eye and hand a piece in the lower battery, at the appointed instant ten pieces, carefully trained upon the gunboats at the landing, were discharged with such harmony that it could not be discerned that there was more than one report—one heavy gun. Immediately steam and smoke poured forth from the boats and at every aperture from one of them, while her crew were seen jumping into the river nearest the shore and swimming for the landing, showing that her steam apparatus was mortally hurt. Another of the gunboats turned toward shore. The ladies just approaching the transports rushed excitedly up the hillside toward the fort. Only one of the gunboats returned the fire, but the redoubt burst forth with a storm of shells thrown with much precision. The Confederates plied their artillery with unabated energy, and, the sharpshooters joining in, their unerring rifles kept up a fierce and deadly fire at the ports of the gunboats."

FORREST'S CRACK SHOT.

At the end of an hour two gunboats were in flames and the third was run ashore and deserted. The burning gunboats set several barges afire, and in two hours from the time the first shot was heard every vessel in sight was blazing. A pile of hay and a row of filled whisky barrels were set on fire by shells, and when the raiders moved off at dark they left behind a conflagration which licked up everything combustible at Johnsonville. The loss was estimated at $8,000,000 and included three gunboats, eleven transports, eighteen barges, besides buildings and stores. GEORGE L. KILMER.

DEER PARK JOTTINGS.

Again, Mr. Editor, we give you some of the events transpiring in our town and vicinity, and although somewhat depressed owing to so much sickness in our town for the past two weeks, which has saddened many homes, yet some events occur as the days pass by, as the storms of winter approach and our citizens busily preparing for home comforts during the months that will intervene before the "spring time comes again," yet they find time to take a lively interest in their respective political parties before the great "battle of ballots" comes off on the 8th of November.

Passing by the local happenings of comers and goers, our thoughts turn to a visit to "Truesdell Heights" the past few days by special invitation of Mr. Wm. H. Chadderton, the efficient manager of this noted farm, and through his kind courtesy we were shown all the produce grown the past season on this up-to-date farm, and although in a former communication we spoke of the growing crops on this farm, we had no idea our eyes would behold the immense yield. After visiting the large bins of potatoes in the cellars containiug hundreds of bushels of the finest potatoes we have ever seen, weighing from one to three pounds each, were informed that three car loads had been shipped to market; and as we passed from one to four of the great barns filled to overflowing with hay, crimson clover, oats, rye and other provender and after inspecting the machinery used in cultivating this immense farm, consisting of plows of various kinds by the dozen, harrows, cultivators, weeders, reapers, grain drills, feed cutters and other implements of all the modern improvements; but the most attractive piece of machinery was the electric engine which runs the thrasher and other machinery such as a large grindstone, a cutter for beets, turnips, cabbage, pumpkins and other vegetables. After going through all the vast departments of these immense barns, the manager took me to his office and explained how he kept his accounts of the varions products of the farm and the outlay for all labor, and it will be gratifying to Col. Truesdell when he returns from Europe to know that a handsome profit will be shown over all the outlay of this season, all due to his having one of the most practical and honest farmers of which Garrett county can feel proud in the person of the gentleman referred to as manager. But the most pleasing surprise of all awaits Col. Truesdell when he hears that his faithful Shepherd, Mr. Hugh Calderwood, has returned from the World's Fair where he had been entrusted with a car load of the finest sheep this farm produces and has taken first and second prizes on all that was entered in competition with other prize winning sheep of the world, taking in prizes alone over six hundred dollars besides selling some eighty head, some for as much as one hundred dollars each, bringing back only his prize winners. On receiving a letter announcing this wonderful result and stating that they would be home in a few days, Mr. Chadderton with just pride arrangod to give this trusted shepherd and his assistant, Mr. Clark Rodeheaver, a fitting ovation on their return, and on last Thursday on their arrival he and the assistant shepherd on the farm, Mr. William Crawford, another gallant Scottish chief from the Highlands of Scotland, a companion of the efficient "Hugh" and from his own native heath, determined to give them a surprise. They secured the Deer Park band and with wagons decorated to convey the "prize winners" and a band wagon for the Cornet Band, all decorated with flags and with that military genius of war, Sergeant John Landis leading the advance with a large United States flag, and keeping time with the music, they marched to the hotel siding playing for the benefit of the love sick Hugh the tune "The Girl I Left Behind Me." He was aroused from his car by the sounds of "Home, Sweet Home" as he and his friends grasped each other's hands and many congratulations were poured into his ears on account of his great success. He bore it all with the manly grace and modesty of a true Scotch gentleman, well worthy of a Wallace or a Bruce. After greetings the famous sheep were loaded in crates and the march back to town and through the principal streets, with men cheering, ladies waving, boys yelling and Sergeant Landis with his superb uniform and boot on one foot and shoe on the other, and calling the attention of spectators with the words: "Ladies and gentlemen and citizens of Deer Park, we exhibit to you in this parade the world's famous prize winners, raised on 'The Altamont Springs Farm,' Col. George Truesdell, proprietor, Wm. H. Chadderton manager, and Hugh Calderwood and Wm. Crawford shepherds." Arriving at the B. & O. station just as the morning accommodation pulled in another cheer from the passengers greeted this returning victor. We noticed the genial face of our friend the chairman of the Democratic committee peering from a car window and we know he, with his just pride for the success of his adopted county and State, feel as we do, in lauding everything that is for the betterment of Garrett county and Mr. Editor we know you feel the same lively interest in the progress of all enterprises by progressive people.

Fearing I will weary you on this one theme, yet before giving you some of recent events would like for the benefit of our farmers to say out side of the products mentioned, nigh state of cultivation of this, now famous sheep farm enables the manager to raise cabbage by the eight and ten acres and rutebago turnips in fields of six and seven acres growing to the immense size that the average would not go in a half bushel. The yield can't yet be computed as they are not yet gathered but they can be proximated by the tons and thousands of bushels, and are all fed on the farm save the potatoes referred to above.

The Republican meeting in the town hall last night 24th inst. was largely attended by ladies and gentlemen of both political parties, and the most perfect order prevailed. Many encomimums were paid to ex-Senator Dick, late of Allegany county but now of Baltimore, for his fair and gentlemanly references to his opponents, using no vile epithets, or abusive language. This is as it should be and we all feel better to have speakers to come among us who have been trained in political a school that has learned to know the meaning of the word gentleman.

The good ladies of our town are to be congratulated for the nice manner in which they decorated the speakers' stand and the courtesy they extended to Senator Dick and his wife, who accompanied him, on this their first visit to our town. Our venrable friend, Rev. Wm. E. George, also Rev. Wm H. Clary and Rev. W. H. Faust were present at this meeting and enjoyed both the speech and the excellent music by the band.

The sick of our town are improving and thus far no serious results have followed, thank to Doctors Lininger and Laughlin.

We have just heard of the death of Mr. Michael Garrett's wife who lived near Baltimore. Mr. Garrett is an older brother of our fellow townsman P. J. Garrett.

Mrs. Clara McRobie, wife of Joseph H. McRobie, is also reported to be ill with scarlet fever and this just as her children are convalescing.

Miss Grace Marley, after a sickness of some two weeks with scarlet fever and quinsy, is recovering and she and her sister, Mrs. Philip Hess, have our sympathy in this their first experience of a serious disease.

With kindest regards and with health permitting, will give you items before the great battle.

Dear Sir: Would you rather have your customers speak of your shoes as wearing well, as not running down at the heel, as turning water, and taking a shine; or wag their heads and say nothing?

We'd rather have ours, at long intervals, say: "We want some more paint, and we want Devoe." We know it isn't in human nature to paint very often; we don't expect them to come very often; don't want 'em to. All we want is to paint what they have to paint, whenever they paint it; the longer the time, the surer they are to come back. There's business enough in the world; there are houses enough to paint; let 'em take their time.

If we were a shoemaker, we'd make shoes to last half a lifetime, and shoe the whole town.

Yours truly

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 28. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1904. NUMBER 36

SOUND ADVICE BY SENATOR M'COMAS.

His Able Address to the Republicans of Oakland, Saturday Night.

PEARREASTRONGREPRESENTATIVE

Principles Which Parker and Democracy Represent Would Result in Calamity To The Country If Allowed to Triumph.—Senator Dick's Address.

The greatest Republican meeting ever held in Garrett county was that which assembled at the Opera House in Oakland last Saturday night when speeches were made by Chairman of the meeting Scott T. Jones, Senator Louis E. McComas and ex-State Senator David E. Dick.

The hall was crowded to the doors with representative business and professional men of Oakland and near-by towns and farmers from the country for many miles around.

In opening the meeting Mr. Jones made a short address upon the political situation as it now is, referring to the work done by Senator McComas as Representative and as a member of the Upper House, paying him a glorious tribute for the efforts made in behalf of his constituents.

Senator McComas was greeted with prolonged applause and for more than an hour held his audience spellbound by his eloquence and the masterly manners in which he handled his subject.

In his addresses Senator McComas said:

You are asked to vote the Republicans out and to vote the Democrats in. Before you do that I want you to remember what happened the last time you voted the Republicans out and voted the Democrats in. Benjamine Harrison, when defeated, in his last message to Congress 12 years ago, portrayed to you the most marvelous prosperity we had ever known. Mon- in manufactures had more than bled and the number of employes had more than doubled; the wages earned were nearly threefold, and the value of the products had doubled. President Harrison's last message justly said "the comparison of the existing conditions with those of the most favorable period in the history of the country will show that so high a degree of prosperity and so general a division of the comforts of life were never before enjoyed by our people."

Then, as now, Mr. Cleveland told you in the height of your prosperity that protection was robbery, and you voted heedlessly against Harrison and protection. As Harrison retired he warned the people that for more than 30 years of our legislation protection had been a mighty instrument for the developement of our national wealth and a most powerful agency in protecting the homes of our workingmen from the invasion of want. His solicitude was to preserve to our working people rates of wages that would not only give daily bread, but supply a comfortable margin for those attractions and family comforts and enjoyments without which life is neither hopeful nor sweet.

Then followed Mr. Cleveland and the Wilson-Gorman tariff, and the society of the unemployed by hundreds of thousands continuously paraded the streets and thoroughfares of America. The wives and children of workingmen in want and woe welcomed the soup-houses as an American institution. Dust thickened on on the idle wheels and looms. Our factory chimneys were smokeless; spiders wove their webs over the mouths of our mines. Our crops fell in value and our farmers stood as paupers in the midst of their golden sheaves.

President Harrison's prophecies were all fulfilled. Will you try it again? You voted out Harrison and prosperity you voted in Cleveland and calamity. You voted protection robbery. Will you now vote out Roosevelt for preserving McKinley's prosperity and vote in Parker because protection is robbery?

You did not sin against your own experience when you heedlersly, by the misuse of your suffrage 12 years ago, brought on your country pan c and hard times. You had yet to learn that four years of incapable Democratic rule was the limit of endurance. You have been taught by the impaired national credit, by the ruined business, by the hungry homes, by the idle labor, by the rising discontent, by the ever-increasing unhappiness of eight years ago—I say that you have been taught by these successive milestones of the last Democratic administration that there may be even lower depths of want and loss and suffering in another change from Republican achievement to Democratic failure.

Let well enough alone. The farmers on our 6,000,000 farms produce products worth $4,000,000,000 and the increase of our manufactures has kept pace with the growth of their farms. The enlarged home market keeps pace with agricultural productions. In 1900, 52 per cent. of our total farm products was consumed as the raw materials of the factories. The manufacturer is the farmer's best and most direct consumer, and he is steadily moving into the centers of agriculture. Because nine-tenths of the raw materials of American manufacture are of American production, every time you plant a factory among the farms you greatly increase the value of the farms themselves. You should not experiment with your great prosperity. You will vote against a change.

Senator McComas further discussed the home market and its value to the farmers and the dwellers in towns. He contrasted parties and the candidates, and paid a warm tribute to President Roosevelt and said:

I came here especially to speak for my friend and our Congressman, George A. Pearre. His eloquent voice and his charming personality we all missed in this campaign. We deplore his absence. We rejoice that he is steadily regaining his health; that in December he will be in his place as vigorous, as faithful, as industrious, as watchful as ever, and that by your new selection he will continue for another Congress to guard ably the great interests of this busy and important congressional district and the interests of his state and country.

We are proud of our distinguished representative. He is the foremost representative, not only from our state, but from all the old slave states. He is one of the strongest men in Congress. Brilliant and attractive in debate, always eloquent of speech, his influence has grown rapidly. His increasing weight and usefulness is attested by his advancement to more important committee service. He is already on the Judiciary—one of the three great committees of the House of Representatives—and he will continue to advance.

Unbroken service brings experienced members to leadership; in no other way can that responsibility be reached. It would be folly, when you consider the varied and important interests of this district, the communities which you and I hold dearer than all others, to give up a tried and influential member to experiment with a any new man.

Colonel Pearre is in the prime of life. A man of thought and of action, of stainless public career, constantly growing in power to do, to say, to achieve. Continue him in your service, and he, who is already the most conspicuous member from your state and the leading Southern Republican in the House, will soon stand forefront of that great assembly.

Since he is sick and cannot care for himself, let us remember he was stricken with nervous exhaustion while working for you and for me, for his state and country. I appeal to you to give a day's work to him and for him and re-elect him by a magnificent majority.

Following the address of Senator McComas, Mr. David E. Dick, ex-State Senator from Allegany county, was introduced, his speech being reproduced in full below:

It is especially gratifying to me to be present with your people to night, and I feel deeply impressed, as I am sure you all must be, with the able, convincing and eloquent address by our friend, the senior United States Senator of the State of Maryland. He has made a lasting impression upon the minds of all of us as to the importance of Republican success in the great political struggle in which we are at present engaged. Most of the momentous questions which have figured in the national arena of politics during the last eight years are either directly or indirectly involved in this campaign.

As our thoughts center upon this great national contest and the issues involved we cannot but dwell upon the lesson taught the American people by what can be properly termed the final message of President McKinley to his constituents, the citizens of this grand and glorious Republic. We cannot but remember that on the day preceding the awful tragedy at Buffalo, our greatly beloved President delivered an address, in the course of which he emphasized the policies necessary for a successful government of our nation's immediate future such as they had enjoyed under Republican administration for the four and a-half years preceding.

When the mantle of the lamented McKinley fell upon our young and patriotic vice president he admonished the people on taking the oath of office to have no fear that the policies of the beloved McKinley would not be fearlessly and thoroughly executed by him. As we glance over the developments of our nation during the past three years we know how well and truly that promise has been fulfilled. Those policies are still in vogue and the industrial, financial and general prosperity that has through them, under the leadership of McKinley and Roosevelt, blessed America in the past eight years is and ought to be the most weighty consideration with the freemen of our country in this pending contest.

President Roosevelt, as the candidate of the Republican party, pledges a continuance of these beneficent policies with as free and full guarantee of such other protection as our nation may need during the next four years.

The Republican party, under such magnificent leadership, with its wise and sagacious policies has stimulated every phase and feature of American industry for the eight years agone and promises similarly great blessings for the years to follow. Upon this record we must pass as contrasted with that of the Democratic party during the last term of President Cleveland's administration, the only opportunity that party has had in the last forty-four years to demonstrate the practical effect of its policies. The developments of that period from 1892 to 1896 are still rife and vivid in the minds of our countrymen. Their free trade policy blighted every branch of industry throughout the land; her wheels were suddenly and painfully stilled; labor in all parts of our nation was idle and unemployed; coal miners lost full 20 per cent. of their wages; other important industries suffered to a still greater extent; the dinner pail was empty. The wail of grief and misery could be heard upon every hand. General Coxey, with his army of unemployed, ragged and penniless, wended their way to Washington on foot, to show Grover Cleveland and the Democratic party a living example of what free trade meant to American industry. Andrew Carnagie appropriated one dollar for every dollar given by the city of Pittsburg for the improvement of Schenley Park in order to provide employment for her suffering thousands, and the papers of that hour recorded men as engaging in individual combat to get hold of a shovel to earn the small pittance of a dollar a day. Twelve thousand men clamored at the State House in Boston, Mass., in a vain endeavor for an opportunity to earn a crust of bread. Riot and internal disturbances of all sorts made the heart of our nation throb with apprehension and fear. Dark and threatening clouds were lowering over and about us. Soup houses were provided in many of our cities in a useless struggle to appease the cry of the hungry for bread. Our glorious institutions of liberty were tottering and about to fall, when the eloquent and majestic voice of that great apostle of protection, the ever to be remembered McKinley, commanded his countrymen to replace the bars of protection to American labor. Then the dark and threatening clouds were wafted away; the wheels of industry were set in motion and the hearts of the laborer, miner, mechanic, farmer and business man were thrilled with unexampled joy. The sunshine of prosperity, peace and plenty blessed our nation and has continued so bless it to the present hour. Shall this continue or will it be changed? The freemen of our country alone can answer.

What do our opponents promise you? Their pet issue of 1896 and 1900 has gone to its grave, silenced by the wisdom of the American people through the instrumentality of the Republican party. Even Judge Parker in his famous telegram pronounced the gold standard to be finally and irrevocably settled. The Judge, in his eagerness to say something startling, forgot that it was impossible to finally and irrevocably settle any great question beyond the power of a subsequent congress to repeal. He, however, in that telegram, paid a great tribute to the Republican party. They gave us the gold standard and promise to maintain it, and they received no assistance from the Democratic nominee, as he voted for free silver in both campaigns. He now admits he was wrong, the Republican party right and asks the people of his country to put him and his party, who were wrong for eight years, in possession of this government and displace those who were right during that period. "Consistency, thou art a jewel," but how woefully lacking is our enemy in possessing it.

On entering the hall here I was handed the following poster, taken from a pole opposite the hall where the Democrats have their meeting in this city to night: "The latest—How to stop the drain on your pocketbooks—Offutt's Hall—To-night." They could have worded their notice more effectually and decidedly more appropriately by having it read: How to stop the use of pocketbooks—Offutt's Hall—To-night. They could have made this promise with assurance of positive fulfillment in the event of their election by pointing without pride to the fearful record of their party in 1894, when the American people had no use for pocketbooks because of having nothing to put inside of them. The drain had then ceased as there was nothing else to drain and the pocketbooks were laid aside until the reign of prosperity again began in 1896, through the beneficence of Republican policies.

So much for a moderate reduction of the protective tariff—a promise they again make us in this struggle.

Imperialism—another of their last campaign issues is before us, in their cry of self-government for the Filippinos. The are pleading for the Filippino to have a voice in his government, notwithstanding he is nearly as dark in color and proportionately speaking more illiterate than the American Negro, from whom they say the right of a voice and vote in self-government should be taken. A case of working both ends against the middle. The Filippinos, like the Cubans, who today enjoy their new Republic, will be given this glorious privilege by the Republican party as soon as they evidence fitness for it, and over a thousand American teachers are now at work in those islands educating them. When qualified the Republican party will give them self-government, and under the leadership of such men as Roosevelt, Fairbanks and Pearre protect them in the exercise of its functions, defying the slightest invasion upon the part of any or all nations of the world.

Official honesty in governmental spheres is another of their issues. If one thing is stronger than another of the many good things that can be said of Mr. Roosevelt it is his fearless and rigid government of every department, and the punishment of any and all officials, either high or low, who failed in the honest and faithful discharge of their official duties.

Can as much be said of the other party? Certainly not in the State of Maryland. Pitiable spectacle indeed for the managers of democracy in this State to plead for official honesty! Was it official honesty they gave us in the seventies, when the late Eugene Higgins, of Baltimore, led a gang of ruffians up in Howard county and polluted the ballot box, receiving afterward as reward for his services the appointment of Secretary of the Maryland Senate? Is it official honesty that still further complicates the ballot in the county of Garret today?

The present democratic nominee for Congress, Mr. Johnson, voted for the present law in the Maryland Legislature and took from your ballot here the party designation while leaving it on the ballot in his own county of Montgomery, where there are decidedly more illiterate voters than there are in the county of Garrett. This is another example of their official honesty and consistency. This is the reflection cast upon you people, and yet he begs your support as against our present brilliant, able and eloquent representative, Col. Geo. A. Pearre.

THE REPUBLICAN MEETINGS

Being Largely Attended In All Sections of the County This Week.

The interest in the cause of Republicanism is not lagging at any point in the county where meetings are being held this week by Chairman Brown and Hon. D. E. Dick.

Monday night at Sang Run a tremendous outpouring of Republicans attended the gathering which was duplicated at Accident the following night. Last night at Bittinger the school house was inadequate to hold the big crowd present, more than three hundred voters being there to hear Mr. Dick.

To-night a meeting will be held at New Germany, Friday night at Grantsville and on Saturday night the campaign will be wound up with a demonstration at Friendsville which promises to eclipse any previous meeting ever held in that town. A good orchestra has been secured to render selections in the hall during the speaking. Before and after the meeting the Friendsville band will be present and enliven the occasion with some good music.

DEMOCRATS THINK MONTGOMERY SAFE

Oasis of Party Enthusiasm and Confidence in the Sixth District.

GARRETT WILL GO REPUBLICAN

Giving Her Usual Majority—Rival Claims of Both Parties Indicate A Plurality For Pearre of 1600—Garrett His Stronghold.

A correspondent of the Baltimore News, writing to that paper from Rockville, Montgomery county, said in Tuesday's edition of that paper:

"A Democrat who traverses the Sixth Congressional district of Maryland may find at various points indications of party activity and 'straws' of more or less value in stimulating his hope for victory in Western Maryland, but he does not come into contact with the real "unterrified" spirit of Democracy until he enters the "good old county of Montgomery, sah." For the first time in his journeying he meets fellow-Democrats who say they will carry their county, and say it without qualification or reservation. This is the home of Hon. Walter A. Johnston, the opponent of Colonel Pearre.

If Mr. Johnston reduces Colonel Pearre's plurality below 1500 he will greatly surprise not only the Republicans, but the Democratic leaders as well, notwithstanding the predictions that he has an exeellent chance of winning. It is possible, though not at all probable, that Mr. Johnston may develop more strength in Frederick and Washington than he now shows and he may be aided by circumstances in cutting down the Pearre vote in Allegany. But among the rock ribbed mountains of Garrett there is a Republican majority as strong and as enduring as the mountains themselves. Garrett is the Gibraltar of Maryland Republicanism, and the most discouraging feature in the Democratic situation there is that increase in the population means, politically, increase in the Republican poll. A steady stream of staunch Republican voters is pouring into the county across the Pennsylvania line. Capital and labor, attracted by the vast physical resources of Garrett, are connected by the closest ties with the economic principles of the national Repvblican party. The race question has no effect there in favor of the Democrats. On the contrary it can be raised only to their detriment through reviving in the breasts of the opposition a sense of the "duty" owed by Republicans to the "brother in black," so of a registration of 4000 votes the negroes contributed last year only 25.

"The Republican majority in Garrett in the last Presidential year was 962, Two years ago Pearre's majority was 797. The Democrats have been hoping that the candidacy for Vice-President of Hon. Henry G. Davis would aid their vote in Garrett and other Western Maryland counties, but it is hard to discover any external evidence of such a tendency. A Davis-Parker instead of a Parker-Davis ticket might have appealed more strongly to Republicans in Garrett. As matters appear to stand, this county is "safe" for Roosevelt and Pearre by 1000 votes—a few more or a few less. The most sanguine Sixth district Democrats do not care to assert that Montgomery will balance Garrett, although it is tolerably certain that the former will give Parker and Johnston 200 popularity, with a likelihood of an increase over that figure in case of aggressive Democratic effort until election day. The Republicans, knowing that they can get votes in Garrett easier than elsewhere, having there no factional differences to heal nor toe-treading to avoid, have been making the hottest kind of campaign in the county, and confidently expect to poll their full strength."

ON GUARD, REPUBLICANS!

A campaign of slander and abuses has been inagurated by Mr. Parker and his managers for the closing days of the campaign. Every statement given out by the Democratic candidate should be well weighed and investigated. Desperation will stop at nothing, and Republicans should be on guard. Falsehood and vituperation must not defeat Roosevelt and Fairbanks next Tuesday.

Hard to Understand.

PAW says th' folks 'at runs th' schools
Will drop old fashioned ways
An' train each boy by some new rules—
He's mighty glad, he says.
He says schools run like they have been
Will never make boys good;
That whippin' boys or keepin' in
Won't do it—never would.
But often paw has said he guessed
When he's at school he was th' best.

Paw says th' way they'll teach us now
Will teach us how to act—
To be po-lite an' how to bow
An' give us things we've lacked.
He says th' way things has been run
For years an' years an' years
Has harmed th' children every one
A awful lot, he fears.
But paw he was a model youth
At school—he says that is th' truth.

Paw says that as th' twig's inclined
Th' tree is sure to grow.
An' proper trainin' of th' mind
Con-trols how much we'll know.
He says th' schools has all been wrong.
An' now they will commence
To push each boy an' girl along
An' give 'em lots o' sense.
But paw—he used to be so smart
An' had his lessons all by heart.

Paw says he's glad th' old time ways
Won't be used any more—
They was no good at all, he says,
An' should have gone before.
He says th' schools was out o' date
For twenty years or so;
That people tried to ejjucate,
But never did it, though.
But when he went to school, he said,
He always stood right at th' head.

A Chance Too Good to Lose.

Before going to a class where he was to test the power of laughing gas Dr. B. overheard a student say that under its influence no one was responsible for what he said, and he was going to take advantage of this and tell old B. what he thought of him.

After the class assembled the doctor quietly announced that for the purpose of illustration he would like to administer gas to some member. The scheming student volunteered, and the leather bag was connected with his mouth. He soon showed evidence of much excitement and began to express his opinion of Dr. B. in language punctuated by much profanity.

Having allowed him to proceed for some little time, the doctor then said that he needn't be so irresponsible, for the gas had not yet been turned on.

The uproar that followed can be imagined better than described.—Philadelphia Press.

One Fight Forrest Didn't Win

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

July 14, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

GENERAL N. B. FORREST, the noted western Confederate leader, was defeated at the battle of Tupelo, Miss., on July 14, 1864, by the Federals under General Andrew Jackson Smith. It was a good, sound thrashing that the "wizard of the saddle" received that day.

Smith's men had no fortifications. They had an excellent position on a knoll, almost clear of trees. Forrest's men had the cover of timber behind which to form lines of attack. A portion of Smith's line found some shelter behind a fence, and in other places there were bushes and tall, standing corn to shield his men. A little imagination makes any screen hiding a man with a musket formidable. It may be only a sheet, but if the man behind the musket is a good one he can make himself a terror to the fellow who has to come up in front of his shooting iron and return his shots at random.

Smith's victory at Tupelo was a stunning blow to Forrest in more ways than one. He flanked Forrest and got into a good position, compelling Forrest to attack him. That was all there was to it. Forrest's men were fighting on their own soil.

But the usual dash with which Forrest's men attacked and which he himself always encouraged amounted to rashness in front of Smith's line. Forrest himself described it as rashness.

Forrest's artillery was handled with the usual accuracy, but it was fairly matched by Smith's batteries. The Kentucky brigade, led by Colonel Faulkner, charged the batteries, fighting on foot, as did Forrest's entire command that day. After checking the Kentuckians Smith's men charged them and drove them back with great slaughter. Faulkner was killed. Forrest appeared upon the scene, seized the colors and appealed to the men to rally, but it was useless. They had to be withdrawn from the field. Forrest changed his mind about attacking these batteries and called off another brigade which he had ordered in to support the Kentuckians. In almost every line of Forrest's report of the battle are found the terms "furious cannonade," "terrific fire of small arms," "unprofitable slaughter." In the face of all this his men were "compelled to fall back" and even to "retreat."

It was a fair stand up fight. Forrest was not used to that sort of battle. His biographer said he found it impossible to entice his enemy from cover or to assume the offensive. In other words, his enemy would not do what he wanted him to—play into his hands, as the enemy so often had done.

The Confederate historian of the battle also writes of "scorching fire" and "terrific torrent of fire" poured upon the Confederates by Smith's soldiers. In one of Forrest's brigades four field officers were killed and six wounded. Whole batteries were destroyed.

General Mower's division of Federals received the brunt of the Confederate attack. As viewed through Federal eyes, the performance of Forrest's men was just what might have been expected under the circumstances. They were not trained to fight real battles. General Smith's description suggests the fighting of a mob rather than of an army, although valor was not wanting in individuals. He says:

"The battle opened by the enemy attempting to secure a commanding position on our left. They drove in our skirmishers and were allowed to come to within about 100 yards of the main line, which was the First brigade of the Third division at this point, when they rose and delivered one volley at short range and then charged with the bayonet, driving the enemy, with heavy loss, from the field, killing more even as they were running than they did in the first volley. Here General Faulkner of Kentucky was killed. Passing toward our right, they rallied at the edge of the timber and were reenforced and supported by their whole available force and once more returned to the attack, which this time was made on the First division, Brigadier General Mower commanding. At first their lines could be distinguished separately, but as they advanced they lost all semblance of lines, and the attack resembled a mob of huge magnitude. There was no skirmish line or main line or reserve, but it seemed to be a foot race to see who should reach us first. They were allowed to approach, yelling and howling like Comanches, to within canister range, when the batteries of the First division opened upon them. Their charge was evidently made with the intention to capture our batteries and was gallantly made, but without order, organization or skill. They would come forward and fall back, rally and forward again, with the like result. Their determination may be seen from the fact that their dead were found within thirty yards of our batteries."

General Mower says that he used up the Confederates [illegible] to hold their [illegible] by directing his men close up. [illegible] until the enemy was close up. [illegible] then opened with shell, cannon and musketry. When he saw that Forrest's men would no longer come and take their punishment he ordered one of his brigades to charge them. The charge was carried home, but the Confederates showed no disposition to keep up the battle in open ground.

"IT SEEMED TO BE A FOOT RACE TO SEE WHO SHOULD REACH US FIRST."

On Mower's front the battle lasted two hours and a half. It was a musketry fight the greater part of the time. Bullets, not breastworks, downed the enemy. Mower's soldiers fired on an average 100 rounds of ammunition per man. When one regiment had exhausted its ammunition another took its place and was in turn relieved by a regiment with full cartridge boxes.

The Confederates made use of every argument to take the sting out of their defeat. The repulse of their men was attributed to the intense heat that prevailed that day, but the Federals were more susceptible to the heat than the southerners. Forrest's men were Mississippians and Tennesseeans and familiar to that climate. Mower's men were from Illinois and Missouri. Mower's men reached the field through marshes on foot, while Forrest's men rode there and were fresh.

Again, the Confederates claim to have been outnumbered three or four to one. This is wrong. Smith's entire force numbered about 14,000 men, including guards of the line of communication. He was invading the enemy's country. Forrest brought to the attack 9,000 men.

Forrest himself and his admirers laid much stress upon the fact that Smith returned to Memphis, whence he came, soon after the battle at Tupelo. They called it a hasty retreat. They also spoke of energetic pursuit. The fact is that Smith on two or three occasions invited Forrest to renew the battle. Vagrant attacks with a small force were all that the southern leader risked. Smith made his way leisurely back to Memphis, and the real reason of his retrograde movement was the fact that supplies of rations and ammunition were low. The bread which had been brought along had been spoiled, and his soldiers were upon the point of starvation. Moreover, he had accomplished the purpose of the campaign. He had kept Forrest away from Sherman's rear. He had defeated him in open battle in his own territory, where he assumed to be master. In brief, Smith defeated Forrest as he had never been defeated before. He did it with foot soldiers against cavalry used as mounted infantry.

PROSPERITY is the life of the Republican party and the death of the Democratic organization.

TOM WATSON wants Judge Parker to retire. Watson need not worry. The people will attend to that.

THE bacillus of worry about the Constitution has been operating in the Democratic blood ever since the birth of the party.

EVEN the drought and the chinch bug have abandoned their old-time ally, the Democratic party, in this year 1904.

AMERICAN voters are too shrewd at bartering to fall into the Democratic error of expecting something for nothing.

OWNERS of property who are disposed to listen to Democratic appeals should think of how values shrunk under the last Democratic administration.

"NONE of the trusts is helping Judge Parker's candidacy," says the New York Times. That sounds like a charge of treason against the Belmont trusts.

THE manufacturing industries of the South have prospered under Republican administrations as never before. The Republican party is not a party of sectionalism.

A MAN in Passaic, N. J., who had been unable to get any sleep for twenty years, has been cured. Probably read Octogenarian Davis' speech of acceptance.

THE most disastrous panic in American history followed the Democratic tariff tinkering in 1893. The Democrats promise to tinker some more if they win at the polls this year.

JUDGE PARKER has been making another speech on the Philippines. We suppose he will follow his usual plan now and write to some friends explaining what he meant when he said it was the first time.

THERE will be no prospect of Democratic success until the party can offer the American voters something better than a promise to destroy what the Republican party has done to make the nation great and prosperous.

BRYAN is for Parker and is incidentally assuring Bryanites that their principles will triumph if Parker is elected. That ought to cinch the vote of the Gold Democrat. Yes?

A PARTY must be pretty hard up for issues when it has to accuse the opposition candidate, not of doing anything, but only recognizing the possibility that something must be done and refusing to do it, which is about what the Democratic exploitation of the President's Panama letter means.

AFTER November the 8th William Jennings Bryan will be about the only Democrat of national dimensions left, and he is already promising to reorganize his party on the old radical lines.

IF Republican apathy means filling Madison Square Garden with a crowd that nearly cheered the roof off, perhaps the Democrats would like some of the same brand for use in their business.

THE right of American citizens to vote is the one Constitutional provision that is being persistantly violated in Democratic States, and yet Judge Parker would have us believe that the Constitution will be in danger is he in not elected.

A CONUNDRUM which is going the rounds out West is this:

"Why is the letter 'R' the most important in the alphabet?"

"Because it is the beginning of Roosevelt and the end of Parker."

THE Democrats who appeared at the opening of the campaign with their blacking pot ready to attack the personality of President Roosevelt, seem to have succeeded only in smearing themselves.

UP to date, no Democratic spellbinder has been honest enough to call attention to the increasing revenues of the government and to admit that the much talked of "deficit" has gone the way of other Democratic issues.

THE American people have confidence in President Roosevelt's integrity, in the unstained honor of his service and in his courage. Democratic attacks upon the man resolve themselves into boomerangs.

THE Democratic idea in regard to the Panama matter seems to be that they think the canal was stolen, but are willing to become the fence for the stolen goods, with Judge Parker on the fence.

JOHNSTON VOTES TO DISCRIMINATE AGAINST GARRETT COUNTY.

The great object of the Wilson Bill that was passed at the bast Winter's Session of the Legislatnre was to confuse the voters of certain counties in Maryland. To do that the party designation was removed, and assistance to the unfortunate and unlettered in marking their ballot, by the clerk of the election reading over the names of the candidates to them, was denied. Under this law a man must not only be intelligent, but he must also have a good memory, for there is nothing to go on the ballot showing the candidates' politics, and when there is a large ticket to be voted, you can readily understand how difficult it will be for the voter to properly mark his ticket.

Now Ballimore city with its large foreign and colored vote was EXEMPTED, so was Montgomery county with its large colored vote.

MR. JOHNSTON, COL. PEARRE'S OPPONENT VOTED TO EXEMPT THOSE SECTIONS, BUT HE VOTED ALSO TO PLACE THAT INFAMOUS LAW AROUND THE NECKS OF THE VOTERS OF GARRETT COUNTY.

Isn't a poor white man as good in Garrett county as in Montgomery, or Baltimore city? There is not so much trouble this year as the ticket is short, and the Attorney-General has given an opinion that interferes with the program of these enemies of the people, but next year will show up its iniquities.

Come, Brother Johnston, explain why you discriminated against the decent people of Garrett county? Were you afraid to "do" your own people as you "did" us? Yet you want to represent us in Congress! WE—RATHER—THINK—NOT!

For his vote on this Bill see the Journal of the House of Delegates 1904, page 1856.

TIME for Tom Taggart to prepare for "a masterly retreat" to French Lick Springs.

AN EFFECTIVE REPLY.

The political mistake of Judge Parker's address on the Philippine question to the visiting delegation of Boston "anti-imperialists" is put under a scorching light by the effective reply which Secretary Taft has elicited from Gov. Wright. Those who regarded the Democratic candidate for President as a man who is conspicuously calm, moderate and fair in his statements and dispassionate in his judgment must have been surprised and disappointed at the extravagance of his language on that occasion. Those who have kept the closest watch upon affairs in the Philippines and taken the most interest in them discerned at once the gross exaggeration, not only in his statement of what the possession of the islands has cost this country, but in his declaration that those employed in the government service have been at the best inefficient and at the worst "dishonest, corrupt and despotic," that the situation in the islands is "so terrible that it passes the comprehension of our people at home," that agriculturally "the country is for the time ruined," the land going out of cultivation, the population ill fed and in some places unable to get work; that the country is overburdened with taxation, disease is prevalent, the farm animals are dead, towns in many places in ruins, whole districts in the hands of ladrones, the price of products poor and unremunerative; that public opinion has no free expression, newspapers are bought up or browbeaten in to silence, men of influence who criticise the commission are ostracized, play at the theatres censored, every organ of expression of the popular voice controlled, men in private life subject to a "complete, far-reaching, through espionage," &c., &c.

This picture of conditions brought about in the Philippines by our possession was not based upon any fair consideration of evidence, but was conjured out of fragments of irresponsible statements relating to occasional or isolated events in a long period of disturbance. It had the elements of the worst form of sensational misrepresentation in which evidence of fact is completely ignored. It was unworthy of Judge Parker and mortifying to many who admired his character as they previously understood it. The statement, as a whole, is easily refuted by the calm and moderate representations of Gov. Wright in his reply to Secretary Taft, who is himself able to judge of the merits of the case and not addicted to distorting or concealing facts.

It is a pity that Judge Parker should have been so "grossly deceived," as Gov. Wright mildly puts it, and that he should not have given closer attention to the real mistakes that have been made in dealing with the Philippines, made mostly at Washington, and devoted to them a keen and discriminating criticism. He could gain nothing by gathering up all the sensational charges that have appeared in the past four years affecting civil and military conduct in the islands and all the extreme statements regarding conditions there, and making a highly wrought picture of imagined consequences to the dishonor of the government and the discredit of the nation. Nothing could well have been farther from judicial or judicious than that speech to the self-styled anti-imperialists. Such political blunders always help opposition to the party making them.—New York Journal of Commerce (Ind and Free Trade.)

THERE is no doubt that it is better to be right than President, but when we get a man who is both it is just as well to appreciate our luck and hold on to him.

WITH a viewless candidate, a meaningless platform and a spiritless campaign, the Democratic party is prepared for a voteless election.

NO less an authority than Grover Cleveland denounced the Democratic action on the tariff in 1893 as marked by "perfidy and party dishonor."

WHY STANDARD OIL BLACKLISTED ROOSEVELT.

"WE ARE OPPOSED TO ANY ANTI-TRUST LEGISLATION. OUR COUNSEL, MR. ——, WILL SEE YOU. IT MUST BE STOPPED.

"JOHN D. ROCKFELLER."

The foregoing telegram was received on February 7, 1903, by six United States Senators. The occasion for the telegrams was the anti-trust legislation which had passed the House, and in the early days of February, 1903, was pending in the Senate. The feature of this legislation which especially distressed Mr. Rockfeller was that enforcing publicity on great interstate corporations.

One of the six Senators to whom the telegram was sent was Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts. He told the President. The matter immediately became public. When the telegrams became public the passage of the pending anti-trust legislation became inevitable. On February 14 all three features of Roosevelt's anti-trust programme were enacted into law. The three laws were against railroad rebates, for publicity and for the expedition of anti-trust litigation.

The inference that Standard Oil is for Parker rests upon several distinct bits of evidence, says the Chicago Tribune.

1—ROOSEVELT HUMILATED STANDARD OIL WHEN THE JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER TELEGRAM OF FEB. 7, 1903, WAS PUBLISHED, STANDARD OIL NEVER FORGETS A HUMILATION.

2—Roosevelt injured Standard Oil when his influence forced the three laws, providing against railroad rebates, for publicity and for the expedition of anti-trust cases through both houses of Congress. Standard Oil never forgives an injury.

3—Judge Parker was nominated by occult influence. There was no popular movement in his favor, because he was not known. "The nomination," in the words of Bryan, "was gained by corrupt and indefensible means. It required the strength of some great interest to engineer such a deal. Standard Oil alone combined the strength and the motive.

4—After Hill, the most active and effective figure above the surface in the nomination of Parker was State Senator McCarren, of Brooklyn. McCarren has publicly acknowledged that while State Senator he received an annual salary from Standard Oil. He is still State Senator.

4—THE VISIT OF JOHN D. ROCKFELLER, JR., TO ESOPUS, AND HIS TWO-HOUR CONFERENCE WITH PARKER TWO DAYS AFTER THE ADJOURNMENT OF THE CONVENTION.

6—The categorical statement by Thomas W. Lawson, former personal and business intimate of H. H. Rogers, that Standard Oil is determined to beat Roosevelt at all costs.

7—The statement made to "Raymond," the Chicago Tribune correspondent, by one of the best known Democratic politicians in the country that Standard Oil was determined to beat Roosevelt at all costs.

EVERY factory wheel is turning and every willing hand is busy. Do the workmen want "a change?"

DEMOCRATIC apathy has been succeeded by Democratic hopelessness.

DID PARKER FORGET THE TARIFF OF 1894?

The careful reader of Judge Parker's recent speech on the tariff, which was simply a condensation of Professor Taussig's tariff history of the United States, fails to find any allusion whatever to a most interesting and important tariff law which was enacted during the memory of every living voter. How interesting reading it would have made had Judge Parker called up the Wilson-Gorman tariff of 1894, which his friend Cleveland refused to sign because it was a "measure of perfidy and dishonor." How interesting Judge Parker might have made the paper had he insisted that that those who prepared it for him attempt a defense of the workings of that tariff which brought such ruin and misery to our industries and our people.

There is yet time for Judge Parker in his speeches during these closing days of the campaign to tell the American people if he would advocate a return to such conditions as those under which we lived during those trying days from 1893 to 1897. There is yet time for him to tell us if he should prefer that we should import during a period of two or three years 800,000,000 pounds of wool instead of growing that wool in our own States. There is time to tell us if he should like to throw out of employment the three millions of men who were idle during those years, and to put on half pay three million more, thereby reducing the puschasing power of our people to the extent of from five to ten billions of dollars. It would interest us to know how, when it became necessary for Judge Parker to issue bonds, as it seems to have been necessary for James Buchanan and for Grover Cleveland, to tell us in what way and by what method these bonds would be issued in order that we might anticipate their sale. Mr. Cleveland has most fittingly compared Mr. Parker to Mr. Buchanan, and as the reign of Buchanan is remembered only for the poverty and bankruptcy which accompanied it, we should well like to know what Judge Parker is going to do when his party puts on our statute books a free trade law such as the tariff of '57 or the tariff of '94 to avoid a repetition of the conditions of commerce and finance under those tariffs. The American people are extremely are extremely interested in Judge Parker's views, and here is a subject which has not yet been touched upon by him, but will bear a considerable elaboration.

WORKMEN who have bank accounts will not seek a return of Democratic rule, if they stop to remember how, under the Cleveland administration, they were compelled to live upon the money they had saved under the preceding Republican administration.

REPUBLICANS are not responsible for good crops, but they are responsible for the policy which furnishes good markets for good crops.

BRYAN AND HIS FRIENDS.

William J. Bryan says that all signs as he sees them point to the election of Judge Parker. In the same breath, however, Mr. Bryan admits that he read the signs in the same way four and eight years ago. Mr. Bryan may be in earnest in his effort to help Judge Parker's candidacy but he has been remarably frank in most of his utterances in The Commoner regarding Judge Parker, both before and after the St. Louis convention. He has said that Judge Parker was unfit for President or to have the nomination of any party believing in honesty and fair dealing, and he has said since the convention that Parker's nomination was made through trickery and by fraud.

There are a great many people who believe Mr. Bryan a sincere as well as a great man. These people followed Bryan through two campaigns and they could not have done that without believing him an honest advocate of the policies he represented. They cannot now believe Mr. Bryan an honest advocate of those policies and at the same time an honest advocate of the cause of Judge Parker whose nomination meant the overthrow of those policies as Democratic doctrin. Mr. Bryan's friends have a right to distinguish between his expressions as the leader of his party and his expressions as a man who has been turned down and compelled to support an unworthy candidate or get out of his party.

The great majority of Bryan's old followers will no doubt exercise this right and take their choice of his expressions. They believed him when he said that Judge Parker was unworthy to be the candidate of the Democratic party or any other party or any other party believing in honesty and fair dealings. They may sympathize with Mr. Bryan in his embarrassment in finding excuses for supporting Judge Parker but their sympathy does not require them to do violence to their own convictions by voting as Mr. Ryan advises them when he is not a leader and not free to give honest advice. They will vote as they please, not as Bryan advises.

Democratic denunciation of the sugar trust must seem funny to the trust magnates who remember how the Democratic Congress in 1893 increased the sugar duty.

IS HE "GUM SHOEING."

Many persons are wondering why Walter A. Johnston, Democratic nominee for Congress, does not appear on the stump in this county. He is spending three days here. Aside from his address before a limited number at the Parker and Davis League and his speech at the organization of a league in Mt. Savage, his voice has not been heard. These were for Democratic voters. There has been nothing to prevent Mr. Johnston airing his views before the whole people. Is Mr. Johnston conducting a "gum shoe" campaign?—Cumberland News.

TOM TAGGART should understand that November is not a good month for rainbow chasing.

IF the birds had votes they would be for the Democratic ticket. They can make nests in factory chimneys under Democratic administrations.

ONLY TWO CROSS MARKS WILL BE NECESSARY.

Attorney General William S. Bryan and Mr. W. Starr Gephart, counsel to the Board of Supervisor of Elections, of Baltimore have agreed as to how the ballots shall be marked by the voters at the coming election. Only two cross marks will be necessary—one to the right of the names of the candidates for president and vice president, and the other to the right of the favored candidate for Congress.

Mr. Bryan's letter to Mr. Gephart, which will be incorporated in the instructions to be issued to the judges of election by the supervisors, is important to each voter in the State, and is as follows:

If a voter should make a cross mark (X) opposite the surnames of the presidential and vice presidential candidates of a party; and should also make a cross mark (X) opposite the name of one or more of the candidates for presidential elector of the same party, the vote could be counted only for the elector opposite whose individual name the ballot was marked. For example, if a voter should make a cross mark (X) opposite the surnames of Parker and Davis, the Democratic candidates for president and vice president, and should also make a cross mark (X) opposite the name of Mr. Frank Brown, one of the Democratic candidates for presidential elector, the ballot would count for Mr. Frank Brown, but for no other elector.

If a voter should make a cross mark (X) opposite the surnames of the presidential and vice presidential candidates fo one political party and should also make a cross mark (X) opposite the names of one or more of the candidates for presidential elector of some other party, the whole ballot would be thrown out.

For example, if a voter should make a cross mark (X) opposite the surnames of Roosevelt and Fairbanks, the nominees for president and vice president of the Republican party, and should also make a cross mark (X) opposite the name of Mr. Frank Brown, a Democratic candidate for presidential elector, the whole ticket would be thrown out for all offices, members of Congress as well as presidential electors.

TO VOTE THE ENTIRE REPUBLICAN TICKET, MAKE ONLY TWO X MARKS, ONE WHOLLY IN THE SQUARE AFTER THE NAMES OF ROOSEVELT AND FAIRBANKS AND THE OTHER WHOLLY IN THE SQUARE AFTER THE NAME OF GEORGE A. PEARRE.

WHY ROOSEVELT?

Because when McKinley was stricken down, he stepped into the breach and has gallantly held the fort since.

Because the promise he then made to carry out the policies of his fallen chief, has been faithfully kept.

Because he has filled, honorably and ably, each one of the many offices of public trust, for which he has been chosen from time to time.

Because his yea is yea, and his nay is nay when problems arise for solution.

Because he has convictions and the courage of his convictions.

Because he is not the tool, and cannot be made the tool of any set of designing politicians.

Because he knows what to do, when to do it, and does it.

Because when the crisis of the Spanish war was upon us he sacrificed his personal comfort and rushed to the firing line.

Because he is a kind neighbor and a faithful friend.

Because he meets every emergency without flinching or hesitating.

Because his first thought is for his country, his country's needs, and his country's honor.

Because, as president, he has to his credit, among other things, the settlement of the coal strike, the American Panama canal, the revival of the Hague tribunal, the prosecution of the post office offenders, the merchant marine commission, the Merger case prosecution, and pension order No. 78.

Because he is an American of the Americans; a stalwart of the stalwarts, a republican of the republicans and last, but not least, because the people want him.

That's why Roosevelt.

The members and friends of St. Paul's M. E. congregation on last Thursday night tendered a donation to the new pastor, Rev. J. B. Workman and family. The evidences of the pranks of some boys and young men who were out Monday night having a good time by piling lumber, hauling wagons and vehicles of all descriptions from one part of town to another and depositing them in unheard-of places, were plainly to be seen the following morning. At the corner of Second and Alder streets a huge bull pen had been erected with the lumber from the Ravenscroft building at that point. Instead of having a bull inside it, however, 'Gene Baumgartner's donkey occupied the structure. A few dilapidated platforms in different sections of the town were ripped up.

The farmers of Garrett county, Md., ought to keep their shotguns well loaded with buckshot and lay for the poultry thieves from this vicinity. Some of the farmers near Salisbury should do the same thing. There are a lot of idlers in this vicinity that are striking two ways. They are striking against mining coal for 55 cents a ton, and they are also striking out every day to shoot poultry in Garrett county, of which they bring in large supplies. They also forage for other things that they can swipe from the farmers, and the absence of the union label on the stolen property is no objection.—Elk Lick Star.

Manheim Cement Plant Crippled by Fire.

Fire Sunday broke out in the storage room of the Manheim Portland Cement Company's plant at Manheim, a few miles west of Rowlesburg, W. Va., and caused $40,000 damage to several of the fine stone buildings that go to make up one of the best plants in the country. The entire plant is valued at several hundred thousand dollars and had it not been that most of the buildings are fireproof, it would have been entirely destroyed. The fire will cause a shut down of some weeks. The plant has been running to its full capacity. Hon. John T. McGraw is heavily interested. The flames set the woods surrounding the plant on fire.

CHANGE IN THE BALLOT.

Arrangement of the Official Ballot Will Be Different From That Published.

Since the list of nominations as published elsewhere in this paper was printed the Board of Supervisors has made a change in the arrangement of the same as follows:

In the first column the Democratic and Republican nominees for Electors will appear one beneath the other. Following the Republican nominees in the same column will be the nominees for Congress, Col. Pearre's name appearing next to the bottom in the list.

Voters will note this change and make their cross marks accordingly, both crosses coming in the same column but in separate squares.

INSTRUCTIONS BY SECRETARY OF STATE

Form of Ballot Described and Information Given for Benefit of Voters.

The Secretary of State has issued the following letter to the several Boards of Supervisors of Election in the State:

"As the election law, as recently amended, gives to the Supervisors of Elections the right of arranging the groups of presidential electors as they see fit, it is not possible to issue from this office a sample form of ballot. It has, therefore, been suggested to me by the Attorney General to call your attention to certain important provisions of Section 50, under which the form and arrangement of the ballot is directed. While the law makes no provision for filing in this office certificates showing the names of the presidential candidates of the several parties, the law is plain in requiring these names to be placed on the ballot under section 50, which says: The surname of the candidates of each political party for the office of President and Vice-President shall be placed above the group of candidates for electors of such party."

"The surnames of presidential candidates are as follows: Parker and Davis, Democratic; Boosevelt and Fairbanks, Republican; Swallow and Carroll, Prohibitionist; Debs and Hanford, Socialist.

"Supplementary to my letter to you of the 21st inst., in the matter of the error in the name of the Democratic presidential elector from the Second Congressional District, I beg to say that it is clearly your imperative and legal duty to print Mr. Shriver's name on the official ballot as it appeared on the original certificate as T. Herbert Shrive: and not as it appeared on the original certificate as E. Herbert Shriver.

"While no legal authority exists for the following arrangement of the groups of presidential electors, it is suggested, however, that in order to uniform the ballot throughout the State the order of groups be arranged alphabetically in the name of the party, to-wit, Democratic, Prohibition, Republican, Socialist.

The secretary has also framed instructions for the voters. In the matter of making the tickets the instructions say, in paragraph two.

"Upon receiving your ballot retire to one of the booths or compartments, and prepare your ballot by marking with an indelible pencil after the name of every person, except presidential electors, for whom you wish to vote, and to the right thereof, in the blank space provided therefor, a cross mark (for example, X.) and in case of question submttted, to a vote of the people by marking likewise in the appropriate space a crossmark (X) against the answer you desire to give.

"In the case of presidential electors you can either make a separate crossmark (X) opposite the name of each of the candidates for presidential electors (not exceeding eight in number) for whom you wish to vote or if you wish to vote for the presidential electors of any political party you can make a single crossmark (X) in the square opposite the surnames of the nominees of that party for President and Vice-President.

WHY IS it that Allegany, Washington and Montgomery counties were exempt from the workings of the Wilson ballot law as far as the removal of party designations from the ballot is concerned and Garrett and Frederick counties made to feel the force of the iniquitous measure. Walter A. Johnston, Democratic nominee for Congress, voted for this law.

His own county of Montgomery is exempted. Why? Because it is a Democratic county and it would militate against the Democrats. But how do the Democrats of Garrett and Frederick, especially those, unable to read or write, like Johnsten's act? He can not plead getting after the negro in this matter, for the negro vote in both counties is comparatively small. It is the most pliable law ever heard of. Senator Lewis had Allegany county excluded from the operations of the law in deference to the Republicans, whose votes elected him to the State Senate.

A VERY SUDDEN DEATH

Attorney Edwin L. Mitchell, Stricken with Appoplexy.

The citizens of Oakland were shocked and pained to learn Tuesday afternoon about one o'clock of the sudden and wholly unexpected death of Mr. Edwin L. Mitchell, a practicing attorney of Oakland, whose inanimate body was found at the foot of a stair way at the Schley Hotel at that hour. Physicians who examined the body gave it as their opinion that the deceased had suffered a stroke of appoplexy while descending the stairway and had fallen to the ground.

Mr Mitchell was a man of many noble characteristics, being charitable to a fault. It is not known that he had an enemy in the world, being a friend to everybody and everybody's friend.

He was nearly fortyfour years of age and was married some five years ago to Miss Eva Button, daughter of Dr. E. J. M. Button, of Oakland and sister of Mrs. Edward H. Sincell. He leaves, besides his widow two children, a daughter and a son, a brother, Mr. John T. Mitchell, of Oakland, his mother, two brothers who reside in the west and one sister.

His funeral will take place this afternoon from the residence of Mr. Edward H. Sincell and will be conducted by Rev. J. B. Workman, pastor of the M. E. church, of which the deceased was a member. The interment will be made in the Oakland cemetery.

COGLAN—MARONEY NUPTIALS.

Celebrated In the Catholic Church This Morning.

This morning at nine o'clock in St. Peter's Catholic church in Oakland, Miss Rosalie Maroney, daughter of Mrs. Bridget Maroney, was united in marriage to Mr. William Coglan, also of Oakland.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Connell, pastor of the church in the presence of a very large congregation. The groom accompanied by Dr. R. F. Bartlett, entered the church from the vestry room and in front of the altar was joined by the bride, who was accompanied by her sister, Miss Alice Maroney, the bridesmaid. The ushers, Messrs. Matthew and Patrick Maroney, brothers of the bride, and Bowie Johnson and Bernard Gonder preceded the bride to the altar. The bride was handsomely gowned in white crepe de chine over white silk. The groom was attired in a black sack suit as were also the ushers. After the ceremony the bridal couple were driven to the residence of Mrs. Maroney where breakfast was served and where the congratulations of their many friends were showered upon them. They will leave this evening on train No. 55 for St. Louis, where ten days will be spent at the Fair.

DIRTY METHODS.

The Frederick Examiner prints the following:

Certain political opponents of Colonel Pearre have been industriously circulating various reports as to his health, both mentally and physically, for the purpose of bringing about his defeat. They realize that it requires desperate means to defeat this able and faithful representative of the people of western Maryland, but in the end it will avail nothing. It is true Col. Pearre has been a very sick man, but that illness has been so serious as represented is not true. By an untiring devotion to the discharge of his duties as a Congressman from this district, he became ill and worn out, and has been compelled by the advice of his physician to abstain for the present from the excitement and labor of a campaign. There is no question about the cause of his condition, for we all know how prompt he was at all times to respond to the inquiries and wants of his constituents regardless of party affiliation. No letter was ever left unanswered without a quick response, and we venture the assertion that the public never had a better servant in the Halls of Congress than George A. Pearre. He is entitled to the sympathy of the people, and we hope that these slanderous enemies will be roundly rebuked as they deserve on the 8th of November next.

We are in position to know his condition, and the following extract from a letter to a personal friend of his in this county speaks for itself. Speaking of the reports that are in circulation he says—"If there be anything in the indications I am no where near death's door, as I weigh 176½ pounds, and am going about here as an entirely rational being, as you may well judge from this letter. No man knows what awaits him on the morrow, but as I say, if present indications count for any thing, I will be able to let my people see that the stories are false. I am improving, but am not yet well, and my physician thinks it unwise for me to take an active part in the campaign, and thus be subjected to its labors and excitement at this time. I shall follow his advice and will not, therefore, make any speeches while I am in the district. To be absolutely on the safe side I should not leave this place for the present, but I feel that I owe it to my friends and myself to set at rest these falsehoods. Trusting that you are well, and with kind regards to all my Frdderick county friends,

I am very truly yours,
GEORGE A. PEARRE.

Dinner On Election Day.

The ladies of the Oakland Lutheran congregation will serve meals on election day at the West Hotel. Oysters in every style. Cream will be served in the evening. The charges will be reasonable.

SUNNYSIDE.

The general health of the community is good excepting a few cases of scarlet fever at this place.

Miss Lucile Coombs, of Mt. Lake Park, was a pleasant visitor at the home of the Misses Hutson last week.

We are very sorry to lose our friend and neighbor Mr. Daniel Orendorf, who will move near Mt. Lake Park on what is known as the Kilburn property.

A very pretty home wedding took place last Wednesday evening at the groom's residence.

The contracting parties were Mr. Bliss Haun of near Red House and Miss Grace Whitehair, of Amboy, W. Va. Only the near relatives and most intimate friends were present. Rev. Emory Fike, of the German Baptist church, performed the ceremony.

Mr. Edward Weimer, of near this place is erecting a fine dwelling which will be ready for occupancy in a few days.

Mr. Henry Eggers and family, of near Crellin, will shortly move to this place, having sold his farm to Mr. Holbrook of Maine.

Mr. Bert Leighton of Mt. Lake Park has moved his saw mill on the Jonas Orendorf tract of land where he will manufacture a large quantity of hard wood lumber.

The cider, jelly and apple butter manufacturing establishment located near Gortner, and operated by the Swartzentruber brothers has been very profitably handled for the last six weeks. Truly the operators of this plant were public benefactors.

WANTED—Special Representatives in this county and adjoining territories, to represent and advertise an old established business house of solid financial standing. Salary $21 weekly, with expenses advanced each Monday by check direct from headquarters. Horse and buggy furnished when necessary; position permanent. Address Blew Bros. & Co., Dept. A. DO WE WANT THAT AGAIN.

Republican President Harrison had $389,000,000 government receipts in his last fiscal year, 1893. The next year Democratic President Cleveland was only able to show $298,000,000, a decrease of $88,000,000. Do we want that again?

Republican President Harrison had an excess of receipts over expenditures of $2,341,000 in his last fiscal year, 1893. The next year, Democratic President Cleveland had an excess of expenditures over receipts of $69,803,000. Do we want that again?

Democratic President Cleveland also had an excess of expenditures over receipts of $42,000,000 in 1894, and of $25,000,000 in 1895. Do we want that again?

Republican President Harrison had $75,896,009 postal receipts in his last fiscal year 1893. The next year Democratic President Cleveland had nearly a million less. Do we want that again?

Democratic President Cleveland in his four fiscal years, 1894 to 1897, had $1,132,000,000 of railway securities wiped out by receiverships. Do we want that again?

Democratic President Cleveland can only show $821,000,000 of manufactures exported in his four fiscal years, 1894-1897, against $1,672,000,060 so exported in Roosevelt's four fiscal years, 1901-1904, a shortage of $851,000,000. Do we want that again?

Republican President Roosevelt shows $3,300,000,000 on deposit in our savings banks while Democratic President Cleveland could only show $1,939,000,000 so deposited in his best savings-bank year, 1897. In other words, $1,261,000,000 less of such deposits. Do we want that again?

Republican President Roosevelt can show $5,748,000,000 total exports in his four fiscal years, 1901-1904. Democratic President Cleveland in his four fiscal years, 1894-1897, only reached a total export of $3,632,000,000, or $2,117,000,000 less. Do we want that again?

Republican President Roosevelt can show a total foreign commerce of $9,490,000,000 in his four fiscal years, 1901-1904. Democratic President Cleveland for his four fiscal years, 1894-1897, can only show $6,559,000,000, or $2,932,000,000 less. Do we want that again.

Democratic President Cleveland, in 1895, had $1,015,000,000 less money in circulation than Republican President Roosevelt has now. Do we want that again?

Democratic President Cleveland in 1896 was paying $19,000,000 more annual interest on our public debt than is now being paid. Do we want that again?

Democratic President Cleveland, in 1896, had $614,000,000 less gold in the treasury than Republican President Roosevelt now has. Do we want that again?

Democratic President Cleveland, in 1896, had $4,757,000 less total bank deposits than Republican President Roosevelt can now show. Do we want that again?

Democratic President Cleveland, in 1896, had $5,000,000,000 less life insurance in force than is now protecting those dependent upon us. Do we wantthat again?

Democratic President Cleveland, in 1896 exported $78,000,000 more gold than he imported, while Republican President Roosevelt, in 1904, imported $17,000,000 more than he exported, thus making a showing against Cleveland of $95,000,000 in a single year. Do we want that again?

Democratic President Cleveland hauled down his country's flag at Honolulu. Judge Parker and his party say they will do the same in the Philippines. Do we want that again?

Republican President Harrison's last calendar year, 1892, was one of the most prosperous years the country had enjoyed. Democratic President Cleveland and his tariff-for-revenue free trade policy destroyed that prosperity, undoing in a few months the good Republican work of the years since Lincoln's first election. Do we want that again?

Democratic President Cleveland's entire second term engagement was played to the accompaniment of weeping women and wailing children, hungry for food. Do we want that again?

Joash, the Boy King.

It all came of a bad marriage. For reasons of State, the good king Jehoshaphat married his son to the daughter of Jezebel. The chronicler speaks of Alhaliah as "that wicked woman." Her phenomenal fierceness was all the more conspicuous because it appeared in one whose very sex is supposed to stand for gentleness. She was as unscrupulous as she was ambitious. In opposition to all Hebrew law and precedent she seated upon the throne of Judah and fortified herself in her usurpation by cruelly murdering all possible claimants, among them her own grandchildren, thereby proving herself atrocious and unnatural. Never was royal blood so profusely shed. All kin to the crown were supposed to by out of the way. Thus, this Lady Macbeth of Jewish history began her course of tyranny and debauchery. Under her reign Baalism had its innings, so much so that a temple to the foul Sidonian god is known to have been built in Jerusalem, if not within the temple precincts. The temple was robbed of its furniture, if not of its very stones and timbers, to build the shrine to the rival of Jehovah. No wonder it was "a time of trouble, rebuke and blaspheming:" Athaliah was wicked daughter of wicked mother. She was even more fierce, powerful, and unsparing than Jezebel.

But there was one unsuspected flaw in the iron of her tyranny. In the slaughter of the innocent, one little intended victim was overlooked. Jehosheba honored her sex as Athaliah disgraced it. What she did stands high among daring deeds of patriotism. By her loyalty and courage, she preserved the royal house of David from extinction. In the midst of the carnage, at the risk of her own life, she hurried the infant prince and his nurse into a little-used storeroom of the temple. Her husband, the high priest, was a party to this merciful plot, and from his commanding position was able to insure the success of it.

For six years the little prince was hid away in the secret of the tabernacle. The temple was a place which Athaliah seldom troubled, and it is easy at any rate for parts of a great building to be overlooked. In this obscurity Joash lived, although all the while entitled to a crown. He was faithfully guarded as the nation's greatest treasure. In his remarkable preservation the prophecy that David's lamp would never go out had fulfillment. But in this instance the lamp was perilously near extinction.

Jehoiada is a star in the Hebrew priesthood. Zadock and Abiathar are the other exceptions to the rule of dullness. The nature of the office is not such as to bring its holder into prominence. In this instance Jehoiada could not prevent the general destruction of the royal stock. The crime was so unnatural that it could not have been suspected. What he did do was to bide his time and organize a counter revolution. And this he did with a prudence, caution, and sagacity unsurpassed. The disinterested character of his patriotism did not admit of question. He aimed at nothing for himself. He averted civil war and achieved a bloodless revolution.

The story is told with pictorial power. It makes one of the most vivid and dramatic pages of human history. The queen was allowed to weary and wear out the nation by her despotism. At the same time she was encouraged in a sense of security. Jehoiada, on his part, was all the while fostering the Jehovistic party. This he could do the more effectively since the queen had inadvertently left him in possession of the temple with its treasury, armory and fortress. When the time was ripe Jehoiada took the five captains of the royal guard into his confidence and showed them the infant heir to the throne. Now, soldiers who were willing to serve under Athalia as long as they thought the house of David extinct, would waver in their allegiance when they learned that a scion of the old royal stock survived. The next step was to secure the presence of the largest company possible in the temple to witness the coronation and protect the king's person. This would be done without creating suspicion by detaining the Levites who, according to their course, would be going off duty. Attention did not need to be attracted either by the carrying of arms into the temple inclosure. A sufficient supply could be had from the votive arms hung there by David after his victories. The deploying of his forces by Jehoida would have done credit to one of largest experience in military affairs. The chief object was protection of the person of the little king. The coronation was effective and spectacular. Standing on a raised platform between the two great pillars of the court, "Strength and beauty," the boy prince was in sight of all. When the crown was placed on his fair brow another thing was done which, under the circumstances, was very significant. The yellow scroll of the law was laid upon his head. He was to be under, not above, the law. He was to govern religiously. When this was done, hands were clapped, trumpets blown and the cry, "God, save the king!" was raised.

At sound of the tumult, the queen rushed upon the scene. She came alone. If guards had accompanied her from the palace, they had been stopped at the temple gate. Athaliah took in the import of the scene at a glance. She made one last and furious drive to recoup her fortunes. She stood upon her imperial majesty, and ignored the illegitimacy of her own authority when she cried, "Treason!" No one came to her side as she hoped. Through open ranks she was allowed to leave the temple which could not be polluted by her blood. At "the way of the horses' entry," like her mother, this crowned monster, usurper, and murderess met her well deserved fate.

The Teacher's Lantern.

Half measures are usually weak measures. All Athaliah's cruelty counted her nothing, because she was not quite cruel enough. If she had killed Jehoiada together with the others, she might have reigned longer. After all, she was too unsuspicious. She left the old high priest in posession of the dilapidated temple. That was her undoing.

Eight words suffice to describe the evilist attitude a woman can assume toward her offspring. "His mother [Athaliah] was his (Ahaziah) counselor to do wickedly." She was the empress dowager of her day.

This account and the parallel one in Second Chronicles are evidently from the same original manuscript. They afford an excellent example of the manner in which some parts of the Bible are made up of excerpts from lost and forgotten originals. The two accounts supplement each other in a helpful manner, and on their very face give evidence of the honesty of the editors.

The high priesthood, like the Vice-Presidency, was a sort of negative office. It needed a positive character like that of Jehoiada to lift it aboye inanity. He stood pure and blameless in the midst of a bold, difficult, and far-reaching enterprise.

This romantic story of the hiding of this boy prince in the temple is altogether credible. Parts of a great building can be overlooked for long periods. It is said that the very existence of one of the chapels of the Vatican was forgotten for a series of years after its entrance had once been bricked up for some ceremonial purpose.

Hatred and resentment against tyrants is always cumulative. Athaliah's regency was oppressive. It was correspondingly unpopular. Its coming to an end was hailed with delight.

Those were probably old-fashioned weapons with which the Levites armed themselves out of the temple armory. But their historic associations put extra courage into the hearts of those who wielded them. They were the swords, spears, and shields which David had wrested from the hands of the aliens, and had hung up as votive trophies in the temple.

The temple was an asylum for one boy (Joash). Every boy should have right of asylum in the Church. It should be chief shelter and resort of youth.

Dear Sir: Good yarn: How we got our agent at Delhi, N. Y.

Gladstone & Paine were agents for ——; we mustn't tell names. We wanted 'em. Paine was painting his big Colonial house. Said it took 10 gallons of white for the trim.

We sent him 10 gallons and said: if you get it all on, no pay; if you have any left, return it and pay for the rest. Agreed.

He returned four gallons and took the agency. Four or five years ago. He knows now that his old paint was and is adulterated; that's why it took ten gallons to equal six of ours.

Go by the name; there is but one name to go by: Devoe lead-and-zinc.

COMMUNICATED.

Protect Your Own Home.

To the Editor of the Republican.

Kindly allow me space in your columns for a few hints to the farmers and citizens of your community, Democrats as well as Republicans.

The Republican party, whose principles were upheld and maintained by that great statesman and noble character, Abraham Lincoln, himself a farmer, and by that loyal, generous, and true hearted American, William McKinley, a man of exalted ideas and justice who held the welfare of his country to be of vital importance to himself, and whose every effort while in the service of his country was for the betterment and uplifting of his fellowman These men supported the principles as laid down by the Republican party; and where can you find the man that can truthfully speak ill of either of these magnificent characters.

I ask you my farmer friend, which is it best for you to do, sell your product, or keep it? You answer: sell it, of course. This is true, as any sane man will tell you. But I ask, if you are not protected against free trade (the foundation of the Democratic party) and against the low wages and pauper labor of foreign countries, where will you find a ready market for your output?

The Republican party stands to day, and always has stood, for protection of our own interests. Protection of the farmer and his welfare. Protection of the free people of this grand old Republic against the pauper labor and sweat-shop systems of foreign and servile nations.

Now, why are we for protection?

"Because it promotes the prosperity and welfare of the country."

"Because our country has always been prosperous under a protective tariff, and has languished and withered without it."

"Because it relieves wage earners from foreign competition, and thereby enables them to become liberal consumers of the home product."

"Because it steadily and surely enlarges the home markets for our own products."

"Because we want labor to get the best wages possible for its efforts."

"Because by protecting ourselves, agriculture will find a sure, rich market at home."

"Because every dollar we send abroad to purchase that which we can produce at home, makes us just one dollar poorer."

"Because protection in this country gives better wages than free trade."

"Because it is better for this country to feed and clothe its own labor, than it is to support labor in foreign countries with our money."

And last, but not least:

"Because we love our own country better than we do foreign countries."

These I think are good and sufficient reasons why, we as a party, uphold and support a tariff for protection.

Look at the newspaper files of the country during the last Democratic administration, from 1892 until 1897. Is it not a fact that conditions then were quite different from those which prevailed since 1898, under a Republican administration?

Are the years of 1893-4 still fresh in the minds of my readers?

Have we forgotten the universal cry of thousands of honest, hard-working men and women in the streets of our large cities, clamoring for employment when none was to be had?

Have we forgotten the thousands of forlorn and helpless women and children crying for bread, while the father sat in his poor and desolate home, sorrowful and dejected, as he looked upon the pinched and drawn faces of those around him, shivering from cold and hunger?

Is our memory so short that we do not remember the great armies of the unemployed, as they sought day after day for something to do, by which they might earn a few dollars in order to keep the wolf from the door?

Have we forgotten the numerous suicides that were the direct result of all this misery and wretchedness? I say, have we forgotten these things?

If we have, let us look at the files and see what story they have to tell.

Take Harper's Weekly for January 13, 1894, and look at this picture: "Free food for Chicago's poor." Long lines of hungry men, women and children waiting in the cold for their poor allowance of a bowl of soup and a piece of bread, just enough to keep soul and body together through the long cruel winter. At night, the street is their bed. Hundreds of homeless and miserable men and boys huddled into some doorway or alleyway, where they can get slight protection from the cold and wet.

Men! did I say? ah, yes, and women also with their infant babes held close to their breasts to protect them as much as possible from the cold, wandered through the streets bedless, hungry and homeless.

Look again at the issue of Leslie's Weekly for January 18, 1894, "The Lakeside Free Kitchen" that was opened for the homeless idle workingman. 75,000 idle men, able-bodied and willing, working on the streets, shovelling snow or chopping wood for a few paltry pennies.

Again, Harper's Weekly for January 6, 1894, showing a multitude of idle men and hungry, forlorn and destituted women, waiting in the streets of New York for admission to the "Free Dining Room on the Bowery."

I might give many, yea, hundreds, of such instances, but surely we have not forgotten that winter.

No! we have not forgotten, and we will not forget. Then I say: protect your interests; protect your family; protect the women and children of your own country against the repetition of such disgraceful scenes.

Let us continue the prosperity which our land is now enjoying, and on the 8th of November, let us march to the polls in a solid phalanx and cast our ballots for ROOSEVELT, FAIRBANKS and PEARRE.

H. E. Flowers.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 41, 1904.

DEER PARK JOTTINGS.

The days and weeks pass so rapidly this beautiful autumn weather that we hardly realize our promise to give some items before the election, and on the beautiful 1st day of November we know that but one week intervenes when the voters will meet in their respective states and cast their ballots according to the dictates of their conscience, and to their mandate we must yield.

We are glad to report the sick of our town all improving and hopes are entertained that the most malignant cases of this dread disease are in a fair way of recovery if proper care is taken.

Miss Florence Thrasher, daughter of postmaster L. D. Thrasher, is visiting friends at Cameron, W. Va., and will visit relatives at Wheeling and Morgantown before returning home. We wish her a pleasant visit in the "West Virginia Hills," and from reports a royal welcome was given her by Miss Floe Zimmerman, of Cameron, a young lady friend who often visits her aunt and uncle at this place, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Wheeler.

Mr. George Coffman, an old veteran of the Civil war, met with a severe accident on Saturday last while helping a friend living near town haul some straw. The horses became unmanageable and Mr. Coffman was thrown from the wagon and considerably bruised and shaken up, but Dr. Lininger thinks no serious results will follow. At this writing he is resting much easier.

Mr. Gay Wheeler returned last week from a very enjoyable visit to Pittsburg, Pa., and other towns in West Virginia. We know of no young man in this place whom we miss more than this promising young gentleman when he is away. We are glad he had such a deserved outing after his close attention to his duties at the B. & O. Hotel where he was a trusted and favorite employe.

Col. W. E. Burwell was up last week looking after the vast interests of the B. & O. Hotel property here, but made his stay short on account of the contagious disease in our town. We are always glad to meet and greet this practical hotel manager, with his unassuming western manners and friendly greetings to all with whom he comes in contact, whether it be one of his employes or the wealthy guest at this famous hotel.

Quite a number of our citizens visited your city on Saturday evening last to attend both Democratic and Republican meetings, but owing to the sickness of some of the band boys they were unable to attend, much to their regret, but we were glad the Oakland band reorganized and was on hand to cheer both the speakers and audiences.

Mr. G. J. Walter, who has been quite unwell with quinsy for the past week, is much better this morning and we hope the other members of the band may be well enough to play for the Democratic meeting on Wednesday (2d inst), as Judge Williams is expected to address this meeting.

At all times taking an interest in all laudable industrial pursuits, your correspondent's attention was called to a new and novel industry, and this not of man's inventive genius, but of the gentler sex, fair women and noble young girls; and, Mr. Editor, when I mention the enterprise don't think it is done for an advertisement and to use your columns gratuitously, but simply on my part, as an incentive to others, and I fully realize that you will heartily concur in lauding and giving publicity to every vocation which commends itself to the frugal and industrious of our town and community. On or about September 1st Mrs. J. K. Mitchell and other ladies suggested a "Village Improvement Society," and the young ladies of the town organized a club known as the "Vimps Rug Factory Club," with Mrs. Elmer Haulenbeek as instructor and Mrs. J. K. Mitchell as saleslady and the following young ladies as members of the club: Miss K. Nevins, Misses Sadie, Amelia, Vauda, Helen and Florence Thrasher, Miss Irene Haulenbeek, Miss Lulu Marley Miss Amie Clary and Miss Grace Walters. After perfecting the organization Mrs. John W. Williams, of Philadelphia, tendered the use of her hall, known as the "The Friendly," and formerly used for moral and religious training of young girls. With this generous offer, free of rent, and with Mrs. Mitchell's efficient aid as saleslady for city orders, the young girls of this "Industrial Club" launched out on their new and novel enterprise. They rented and purchased four looms of the old time variety for weaving rag carpet. While we had heard of this enterprise casually we had no idea it had become a substantial and profitable enterprise. By special invitation of Miss Sadie Thrasher the writer visited this Club and was most agreeably surprised to find some five ladies busy at work weaving rugs of the most beautiful patterns for the city trade, and having on hand at this writing some sixty rugs to fill orders coming from their saleslady from Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. The members inform me that the ten active members alternate week about and that the work of over sixty rugs had been achieved in the past three weeks by five girls. This does not include the manager, who secures materials and attends to correspondence, shipping, etc. Most of the supplies are purchased from your merchant prince of Oakland, and thus they patronize home trade in purchasing the different colors for these gorgeous rugs.

We wish these noble young ladies all the success possible, and we know, Mr. Editor, when you find some unsophisticated Garrett county youths, of good moral character, hunting for God's best gift to man, you will just take the hint and know where to send them.

If not sent up Salt River will say after the 8th—

When the battle is fought and victory won you may again hear from—

More Anon.

GRANTSVILLE.

Mr. Zook is still manufacturing cider and apple butter.

Miss Fannie Lichty and Mr. John Stutzman will be married on Tuesday, Nov. 1st. Miss Lichty was a former resident of Garrett county, but lately of Ohio, where she met Mr. Stutzman.

J. S. Miller, of Grantsville, and S. S. Miller, of Springs, Pa., expect to ship a car load of apples to Norfolk, Va., this week.

Noah D. Lichty and two sisters are in this vicinity at present.

Misses Mary and Nannie Yutzy spent Saturday and Sunday at their home at Pocahontas, Pa.

Mr. Urban Blocher, one of Grantsville's energetic merchants, has in stock a nice line of shoes. His specialties are the Dolly Madison lady shoes and Oom Paul's men, boys and children heavy shoes.

On election day you can satisfy your hunger for a small sum of money. The ladies of the Lutheran church will serve stewed and fried oysters, sandwiches, pies and coffee in S. O. Bender's ice cream parlor on Main street, near the voting place. Be sure to call on the young ladies and have them serve you an up-to-date meal.

Mr. Mahlon Miller's youngest son had his arm broken below the elbow by the kick of a cow. Dr. Louderbaugh attended the lad.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Leochel spent Sunday with Mr. George Lininger and family, who reside in the Cove.

Last Saturday evening while on their way home to Grantsville from Meyersdale, Pa., the buggy of Messrs. Thomas and Milton Younkin collided with the buggy of Mr. Lewis Horchler, who was on his way home from Grantsville. While passing each other one of the front wheels of Mr. Horchler's buggy interlocked with the hind wheel of Messrs. Younkin's buggy. This accident frightened the horse of the latter. The horse broke loose from the buggy and ran to town. Thomas having the lines wrapped around his hand several times was dragged about twenty five yards over the rough ground, receiving some severe bruises in his face while Milton was thrown out into the ditch with out a scratch. Dr. Robinson dressed the wounds of Thomas. Mr. Horchler escaped uninjured.

John Bender, Sr., made a trip to Meyersdale, on Monday.

BITTINGER.

Mr. Samuel J. Brenneman, an aged gentleman living about one mile east of here, had a fortunate escape from serious injury on last Saturday morning. While Mr. Brenneman and his son Edward were sawing some logs near home, a heavy log started to roll down a hill and caught Mr. B. rolling across his arm, shoulder and head. Though considerably shocked and bruised the gentleman is able to be about at this writing.

Mr. Jonas Beachy drove a nice flock of sheep through this place last Monday afternoon.

Rev. J. B. Shoup returned from his visit to Cumberland on last Sunday afternoon and found a large congregation awaiting him, to which he delivered a pleasing Reformation sermon.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. B. Wiley were the guests of Commissioner Stevens on Sunday last.

A party of young people occupying a half dozen buggies, were driving at a terrific pace in close proximity to each other on last Sunday afternoon, and when a short distance out of town a collision occured and as a result Mr. Earnest Bittinger had his buggy wrecked. The young people who have fallen into the habit of desecrating the Sabbath by racing their horses along the public highways on that day, should be reminded that they are acting unwisely and in direct opposition to law and order, disturbing the peace of the community and placing in jeopardy the lives of their companions as well as their own.

On last Monday afternoon two of the Democratic sages of Garrett county came here to address a meeting that had been billed for that date. C. M. Miller of Swanton, and another gentleman whose name was G. Semmes Hamill, were the only speakers that appeared, and after hearing the trend of public sentiment here as it was fearlessly expressed at the village inn where they dined, these orators pulled out for Grantsville, taking all their eloquence with them, holding no meeting, making no speeches not even for the disappointment they had caused the people who had come out to hear them. They perhaps thought it wise not to talk when they had nothing to say.

Mr. C. C. Michael and family moved to Cumberland on Tuesday last. Mrs. Michael will run a boarding house at No. 59 Union street.

Mrs. Dr. Nihiser, who visited her sister, Miss. R. Weems, at this place the past week, returned to her home at Keedysville, Md., on the 2nd inst.

Mr. W. H. Rudisill is wiring the Cuppett store building for electric lights.

Mr. Flowers and family went to Grafton, W. Va., where Mrs. Flowers will open a boarding house.

Mrs. K. V. Hardy went to Washington, D. C., on the 2nd inst. where she will be a guest of Dr. Davidson's family.

Mrs. S. C. Sawyer expects to go to Cameron, W. Va. Friday to visit her daughter.

Miss Julia Hill, of Washington, our last summer visitor, returned to her home Monday last.

Tuesday morning several angry persons were met on our streets, and some "cuss words" heard, Buggies, delivery wagons, hay rakes, etc., had been gathered the previous night and placed on the board walk north of Pilgrim's Rest. There was quite a display of vehicles gathered from all parts of the Park and Loch Lynn. It may have been fun to blockade the high way, and I guess it was, but the labor to get that big street sprinkler in position was something to be dreaded. Charley did not work Tuesday neither did he go to see his girl at night—lost too much sleep the night before.

Mr and Mrs. C. V. Harvey returned home from their trip to St. Louis delighted with the big show. They will go to housekeeping in a few days, in Mr. C. M. Rathbun's house on M street.

Mr. Albert White, (who for the past year was an attentive pleasant and popular clerk in the Hustling store,) gave up his position on the 1st instant.

Mr. James Jarboe spent a day at home last week. James is in the employ of the B. & O. R. R. at Clarksburg, W. Va.

Mr. John Hayden returned from Fairmont, W. Va. last Saturday.

One day last week one young lady was happy; two or three others wished that there were more young men about.

About forty of our citizens attended the Republican meeting at Oakland last Seturday night.

LANDSLIDE FOR ROOSEVELT AND FAIRBANKS

SERIOUSLY HURT IN RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

Mr. L. H. Friend, of Swanton, Internally Injured Saturday.

HIS HORSE BECAME FRIGHTENED

Along the Road Near the Brant Place North of Oakland and Bolted, Throwing Mr. Friend From the Buggy. Is Now at Hospital.

Mr. L. H. Friend, of Swanton, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Fletcher Friend, of that town, was seriously injured last Saturday afternoon at a point on the Hoopole Road two miles north of Oakland by being thrown from his buggy to which was attached his horse which became unmanageable while descending the Brant Hill.

Mr. Friend had driven from his home that day and having some business which required his attention in that section of the country was coming to Oakland and when on top of the King Hill he passed a wagon in which was loaded some stovepipe. His horse took fright at the noise made by the wagon and pipe combined and started to run. After going down the Brant Hill a short distance he was thrown with much force from his vehicle to the ground receiving a serious injury to his head and face and also internally.

Dr. McComas was telephoned for by some one who had been a witness to the accident and went immediately to the place where he found Mr. Friend suffering much pain but in a conscious condition. He was brought to the McComas Sanitarium where an examination disclosed the fact that besides the injuries to his head and face he had also been very seriously injured internally. For some days it was not known how badly he was hurt and what complications would likely follow, but on Tuesday a decided turn in favor of the patient occurred and this morning he is resting very comfortably and indications point to a speedy recovery.

A BARN BURNED.

Ing With Its Contents Entirely Destroyed by Fire.

A barn on the farm owned by Mr. Charles Michaels, of near Firm Rock, in District No. 4, this county, was completely destroyed by fire on Wednesday afternoon of last week, along with its contents consisting of hay, oats and other grain, farming implements of considerable value, harness, buggies, and wagons. The loss will amount to about four thousand dollars with no insurance. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

MORE TELEPHONE IMPROVEMENT.

Managers of the Garrett County Lines Will Instal a Cable in Oakland.

Since the purchase of the competing telephone line by the Garrett County Telephone Company some time early in the summer, and the merging of the two companies into one, the service has been remarkably good, and as a result the company has had its hands full in handling the additional business. To relieve this to some extent improvements of considerable scope have been held under advisement for some months. On Saturday a contract was entered into with an electrical company for a cable of five hundred feet for use in Oakland which will be received and put into commission within a short time.

To meet these additional expenses it has been decided to open the books of the company for the purpose of receiving additional subscriptions to the capital stock. Those desiring to purchase may make application to the president of the company, Mr. W. A. Maffett, of Oakland, or to Mr. James W. Beegluey, its secretary, at Accident. The books will be open for thirty days from November 15th for this purpose.

There are now over eleven hundred subscribers to the Garrett County Company's lines which makes connection with the Western Maryland and other lines in Allegany county and adjoining counties in Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

A young man came to the Park and took a Chance and is happily married. Then two other weddings followed, and now four more are in prospect.

Mr. F. P. Arnold visited Swanton Monday last.

Mr. A. F. White has a position with the Oakland Coal and Coke Co.

A. T. Schrock and Thos. Schooly are doing some work near Swanton.

Rev. N. Hart and wife are visiting friends in Virginia.

With feeling of sadness we report the death of Hon. T. E. Davis, one of our summer citizens. The death of such men are a loss to the nation.

Mr. C. V. Harvey resigned his position in the Hustling Store last week.

Hon. Geo. A. Pearre last week presented the public school library at Loch Lynn with some public documents.

Cuppett's new store room will be ready for occupancy in a few weeks.

Merchant Garthright has greatly enlarged the Hustling Store room. The interior has been painted. He is shipping large lots of potatoes, apples and buckwheat.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, FROM HIS LATEST PHOTOGRAPH.

MARYLAND FOR ROOSEVELT!

MIDNIGHT REFLECTIONS.

Let us see! Was it an election, or a Republican landslide?

Walter A. Johnston: "I have decided to continue to practice law in Washington, D. C. and sleep in the 6th District of Maryland as of yore."

Speaker Cannon, in his Cumberland speech, "I would sooner have Pearre sick than Johnston well." So say the voters of the sixth District.

"No body expected Parker to be elected." Democratic consolation.

The weather was delightful and the results more so.

Telegram from Oakland to Cumberland 10 p. m. "Send us news from New York." "Republican candidate, New York 250,000, Parker congratulates Roosevelt," was the answer.

William J. Bryan: "It makes me laugh that gold telegram settled the question."

Hill of New York: "I have retired from politics. The people of New York unanimously approve of this step."

The Star and Stripes will continue to float over all our possessions.

"Well done, thou good and faithful servant, continue thou to guide this great Republic." Verdict of American people.

Can it be true? Maryland not Maryland, Republican!

Texas affords some consolation to the Salt River delegation—200,000 majority for Parker.

Alton B. Parker, attorney at law, New York, N. Y. Office with Belmont, Hill & Co.

A PLURALITY OF MORE THAN TWO THOUSAND.

The State Joins in the Popular Landslide to Republicanism.

CARRIED JUST A DOZEN COUNTIES

Garrett County's Greatly Increased Plurality a Tremendous Surprise Even to Republicans.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 9.—Returns that are still incomplete indicate that Maryland has been swept by the Republican tidal wave and will give the Roosevelt and Fairbanks electors a plurality of about 2000.

The Republicans have carried Allegany, Anne Arundel, Calvert, Charles, Dorchester, Frederick, Garrett, Prince George, St. Mary's, Somerset, Talbot and Washington counties. The Democrats have Baltimore City and county, Caroline, Carroll, Cecil, Harford, Howard, Montgomery, Queen Anne, Wicomico, Kent and Worcester counties.

The First Congressional district is close, but the returns seemingly show that Jackson (R.) defeats Smith (D.) by between 300 and 400.

Talbot is returned to Congress from the second district by about 1500.

In the Third district the plurality of Wachter (R.) is 2063.

The Fourth district gives Gill (D.) 1705 plurality over Smith.

Congressman Mudd has held his own in Southern Maryland and is returned by a plurality that may reach 2500 votes.

The Sixth district, the stronghold of Republicanism, gives Colonel Pearre (Rep.) the incumbent, a plurality of more than 4200 over Johnston.

The Democrats carried but one county (Howard) in the Fifth Congressional district, and in the Sixth Montgomery was the only county that the Republicans lost.

Figures show pluralities.

	Roosevelt.	Parker.
Allegany	1869
Anne Arundel	200
Baltimore city		474
Baltimore county		1000
Calvert	300
Caroline		200

Queen Anne		743
St. Mary's	200
Somerset	400

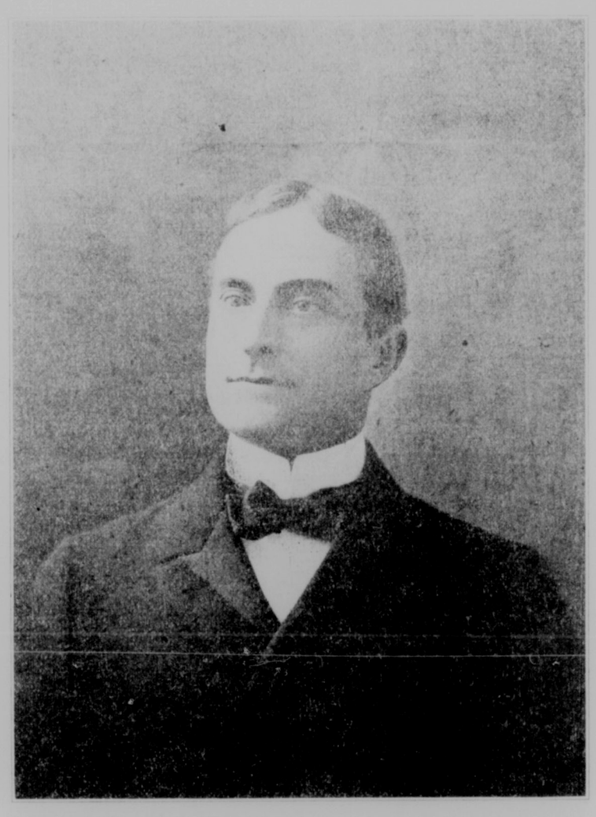
Washington	545
Wicomico		400
Worcester		350
Totals	7275	5227

Roosevelt's plurality, 2048.



Hon. Geo. A. Pearre, Elected For The Fourth Time To Congress.

A RATHER remarkable coincidence in connection with the election is that where the Democratic speakers of Garrett made their liveliest campaign and talked the loudest and longest those districts gave the largest Republican majorities.

Points That Stick Out.

Roosevelt's popular majority 1,500,000—a reckord breaker.

His electoral majority exceeds Parker's total electoral vote.

Roosevelt announces in his hour of victory that he will not be a candidate for re-election.

Maryland Republican by safe majority.

Roosevelt's majority in New York State exceeds McKinley's in 1900 by 30,000, though the State was classed as doubtful.

Republicans will have a majority of 100 in next House of Representatives; the present majority is only 30.

Douglas, Democrat, elected Governor of Massachusetts by 36,000 though Roosevelt carried the State by 80,000.

Roosevelt's majority in Pennsylvania—400,000—breaks record in the Keystone State.

Connecticut gives Roosevelt 10,000 greater majority than it gave McKinley in 1900.

The German Kaiser congratulates President Roosevelt.

Missouri carried by Roosevelt, though Folk, Democrat, is elected governor.

Roosevelt is vindicated.

It was a famous victory.

It was a clean, clear-cut victory.

Fairbanks proved a pretty torrid bit of ice.

Now let the whole country get down to business.

General Apathy never had a show after the start.

After all, ex-Senator Davis had a good run for his money.

TRAGIC DEATH OF CHARLES WHITMORE.

A Well Known Lumberman of Garrett County Looses His Life

WHILE DISCHARGING HIS DUTIES.

He Was caught Beneath the Wheels of An Engine at Kendall and His Life Crushed Out Almost Instantly.

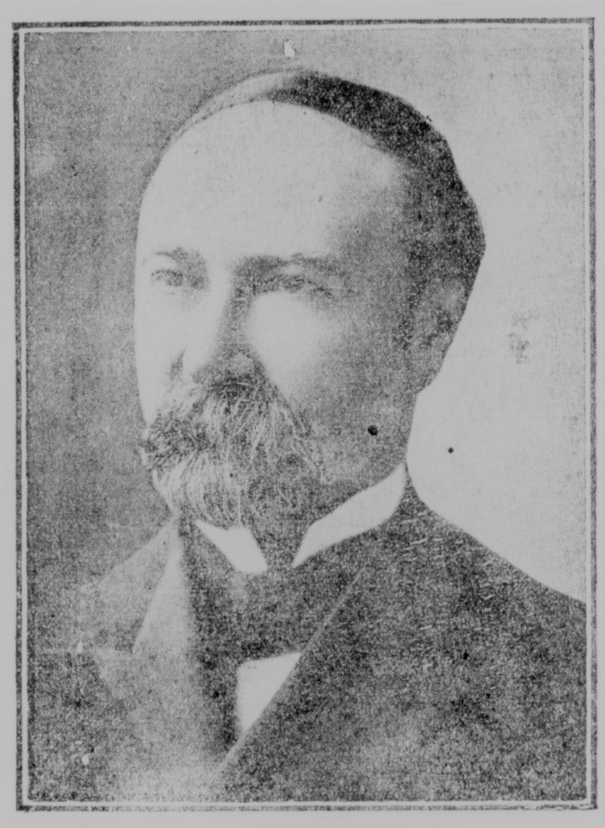
Seldom is a community visited by sudden and tragic death and when such an end as that which came to Mr. Charles Whitmore at Kendall, on Monday afternoon of this week, it cast a gloom over friends and acquaintances that cannot be thrown off.

Mr. Whitmore, who was employed at the Kendall mill as superintendent, had just completed the examination of a pile of ties in the yard when he stepped on the railroad directly in front of a locomotive which was backing down to go into a switch and before he could be warned was struck and thrown over the rails the tender of the locomotive passing over his prostrate body and death ensuing almost immediately.

Mr. Whitmore came to Garrett county a number of years ago from Pennsylvania and entered the employ of the Preston Lumber Company, with which corporation he remained until about two years ago, when he was employed by the Yough Manor Lumber Company at Kendall, as superintendent of the yard and mill at that place, was probably the best known man occupying a similar position in Garrett county. About four years ago he was a candidate on the Democratic ticket for County Commissioner, but was defeated for election. He was a member of the Odd Fellows lodge at Friendsville where he was highly esteemed.

His funeral took place yesterday from the Oakland Presbyterian church, the services being conducted by Rev. E. Manges, of the Lutheran church, in the absence of a Presbyterian minister, the interment being made in the cemetery in Oakland. The pall bearers were members of the Odd Fellows lodge at Friendsville.

Besides his wife Mr. Whitmore leaves three sons and one daughter.



CHARLES WARREN FAIRBANKS.

A brotherly note is due from Mr. Bryan to Mr. Parker.

Democracy has not yet regained the confidence of the public.

The calumniators have been properly and eloquently rebuked.

The result of the election was a fitting rebuke to the slanderers of the President.

Joash Repairs The Temple.

The temple in Jerusalem was not merely a place of worship. It was in itself a monument to religion. It not merely contained the venerated and historic souvenirs of the faith and afforded a place of devotion to those from far and near who wished to avail themselves of it, but it was also the most magnificent, costly, and appropriate memorial to spiritual religion ever reared upon the earth. The material condition of the temple was therefore significant. It was a barometer indicating the rise or fall of religious feeling among the people. If the sacred structure was kept in repair, beautified, and adorned it tokened the fact that religion was ascending and vice versa.

At this time the sacred fane was in a pitiful plight. A great building needs constant and close attention for its preservation. A corps of workmen with competent overseers needs to be employed, and a large amount of money annually expended. Mere neglect is enough to insure ruin. But in this instance there was not mere inactivity. The structure was rifled and desecrated. It became a quarry out of which the rival temple of Baal was built and furnished.

It is no wonder that King Joash turned to the restoration of the temple as the first act of his reign. It had sheltered him in his defenseless infancy when the monster Athaliah sought his life. In the secret of this tabernacle he had been successfully hidden for six years. Under its splendid porch and between its great pillars he had been annointed, crowned, and proclaimed king. Its high priest had been his foster father. The priests and Levites had been his bodyguard on the day of his coronation. Its armory had furnished the weapons for his defense.

The importance of the proposed restoration of the temple is significantly indicated. It is the one event in the long reign of forty years on which the chronicler puts special accent. Joash alone stood out to shore up the falling temple. That is the one important achievement of his reign. He considered the repair a pressing business. The honor of Jehovah required the complete obliteration of Athaliah's sacrilege and the renewal of the old glories of the temple.

The first plan for raising the necessary funds proved inadequate if not futile. The priests were to canvass for subscriptions. There is nothing to indicate that they misappropriated the money. The plain fact is they did not get any. So that there was none to pervert. With the inveterate selfishness of human nature, they looked out for their own support first, and there was no balance to the credit of the building fund. The next device succeeded. The Jew was not solicited at home and remote from the temple, but on the ground, where he could himself witness the ravages of the vandal Athaliah. After he had sufficiently inspected the ruin of the sanctuary, wrought by the idolatrous princess, he would come across the receptacle, conspicuously and conveniently placed. Its open mouth pleaded for an offering for the restoration of the temple. There was no danger of perversion of his gift. What he placed there was exclusively for this purpose. Then, too, the sight of others giving provoked him to generosity.

The measure was instantly and largely popular. A yellow stream poured into the improvised treasury. The strong chest had often to be unlocked by the high priest and its contents audited by the king's scribe. Soon there was enough and to spare for the repair, renovation, and refurnishing of the temple. As the building itself was a sign of the covenant, its restoration by the free gifts of the people was a token of the revival of the covenant between Jehovah and the people.

It is a pity that the king who wrought this notable deed for God and his country in later years apostatized. A black veil must be drawn over the portrait of Joash like that over the recreant doge of Venice. He became an idolater and encouraged idolatry, paradoxical as it may seem. He went one step further in sacrilege, and laid violent hands upon the High Priest Zachariah. If religion had no power to stay him, it would seem that human feeling would have been sufficient. His victim was the playmate of his boyhood. He was the son of Jehoiada who had sheltered Joash from the murderous spirit of Athaliah and placed him on the throne.

Retribution was swift, as it was merited. Joash was the first king of Judah to come to a violent death by the hand of his own subjects and to be denied a kingly sepulcher.

The Teacher's Lantern.

There were several strains of blood in Joash's veins—some good and some evil. He was not responsible for this, for he could not choose his ancestors. But some thing was certainly within his power. He could say which tendency should have right of way, which strain of blood should be ascendant.

In asserting the power of heredity, it has been said that it is the dead hand that rules us. But the live hand must grapple the dead one. All unworthy ancestral ghosts can be laid. Where there's a will there's a way.

Jehoiada was a better monitor to Joash than Seneca was to Nero. Perhaps, however, Nero was a subject. But Joash seems not to have been able to stand alone without his priestly counselor, for after the latter's death he apostitized in a miserable way. The final test of character is its ability to stand without a prop. The religion which always needs bolstering is not much account.

It is said that it costs $50,000 per annum to keep St. Peter's Cathedral in repair. There is a village on the roof of the cathedral where the workmen lives. If this outlay of money was remitted for awhile and the workmen discharged, one can easily see how the vast building would get out of repair. But in this instance Solomon's Temple was not only neglected—it was looted.

Sticking stubbornly to the first-adopted plan is often a matter of dogged pride. It's the broad-minded person who cancels self, drops the plan which proves futile, and adopts another. Jehoiada did that when he substituted the chests scheme for the personal canvass.

What the Roman Forum is to Rome and the Acropolis is to Greece, the temple is to Palestine. A history of the temple is a history of the nation. Names illustrious and ignoble, deeds valorous and despicable, doctrines of faith and usages of ritual,—all are shrined and exemplified there. It is the epitome of a thousand years.

It is no wonder that the repair of such a building became a matter of State, and that the king took personal supervision of it. But the crown was not able as in Solomon's day, to carry out the enterprise unaided. The co-operation of the people must need be urged, and there was the reflex advantage, incident to such co-operation.

God is absolutely independent, but He has made Himself relatively dependent, not for His own advantage, but for that of His creatures. For example, in His infinite power He could have built his own temple and kept it in repair. But it pleased the Owner of the universe to make Himself a mendicant and come and ask alms in order that His creatures might have the reflex advantage [of voluntary co-operation with Him in His enterprise.

CONSTIPATION

Georgiana's Lenten Duties

By RUBY DOUGLAS

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

Eaton's well marked brows were drawn closely together in a frown. The letter he had just finished reading obviously did not please him. He returned the delicately scented missive to its envelope and leaned back in his chair.

"Hang the new minister!" he commented mentally. "Hang Lent, too!" he added aloud.

"'Faithfully yours, Georgiana,'" he repeated. "And she signs herself that way because the new minister always uses that form, does she? 'Isn't it fascinating?' she asks in her inevitable postscript. No, I cannot agree with Georgiana. It has no fascination to me, inasmuch as she has always signed herself, 'Lovingly, Georgie.'"

Eaton began to pace the room, and as he thought over Georgiana's letter he grew more disturbed in mind. It was all about Lent and sewing bees and flower guilds and parish aid societies and the new minister. The pastor said purple was the proper Lenten color, and she had a new gown of that shade in which she looked "perfectly stunning." Aside from purple being the penitential color, the new minister adored it, of course, after his college colors, orange and black. He was a Princeton man.

"A Princeton cad, probably!" thought Eaton as he continued to make a circuit of his room every half minute. "Girls are silly over the cloth and brass buttons. One is as bad as the other." All the prejudices Eaton ever had against ministers and girls and humanity in general came trooping into his ruffled thoughts.

He and Georgiana, although they were not definitely engaged, had more or less of an understanding as to their future, and since he had been in Boston Georgiana's letters had been a continual source of comfort to him. And now, because it was Lent, she said—because of the new minister, Eaton believed—she would have to deprive herself of the pleasure of writing to him so often. She would save the stamp pennies for her contribution box. The new minister was so enthusiastic about having a large Easter offering, and she was going to help him. It was only right that one should deny oneself the greatest pleasures one had in life during Lent.

"JACK CARELTON!" SAID EATON AFTER A MINUTE.

"It must be a great pleasure," mused Eaton sarcastically.

One of the first things he did after receiving Georgiana's letter was to send her a book of stamps, with the request that she continue her letters to him and not convert the stamps into money for her—her contribution box. Eaton wanted to use some impolite adjectives before writing contribution box, but, in deference to Georgiana, he refrained.

The stamps failed in their purpose, for Georgiana did not write often, and her letters were brief and devoted to a recital of her Lenten duties. Once she condescended to become personal and tell him how lovely she looked in that royal purple gown and to express a wish that he might see her in it. Eaton echoed a portion of her wish only. He longed to see Georgiana, but the dress could remain out of his vision, always, if fate so willed it.

The second week before Easter Georgiana said that she would not be able to write at all during holy week, as there was so much to do. There was a litany service every day; there were Good Friday preparations and the three hour service; she was helping the minister with his confirmation class and with his Easter sermons, which was a great undertaking for so young a man. "However," she went on to say, "we will expect you, as we have planned, for Easter." The minister would dine with them too, and she did want Eaton to meet him. He was so helpful.

"She is crazy—clear crazy—on the subject," thought poor Eaton when he had finished this letter. Queer little hopeless feelings entered his heart and pulled at the strings which heretofore had been so free from knots and tangles. Would he go and see Georgiana once more or would he remain in Boston and let her religious fever lead her into the sea of matrimony with the new minister?

Holy Saturday found him on his way to New York and Georgiana. It was late when he reached the Carelton home that night, and, to his surprise, he was told that Miss Georgiana was in the study.

"With the new minister," he thought, as he waited for her. His heart dropped deeper and deeper into the despair that had been drawing it down for weeks. Could she not save one evening for him when she had not seen him for months?

All smiling and radiant and, if Eaton could only have detected it, with a wicked little twinkle in her eyes, Georgiana appeared in the doorway.

"Gordon!" she cried and held out both her hands. Eaton took them in his own, but he was formal in his manner.

"Georgiana," was all he said.

"We're just rehearsing the sermon," she said wickedly. "Come on in." And she dragged him unwillingly from the room.

This was more than he had expected, but Georgiana left him no alternative but to follow her. She even held on to his hand. Was she going to enter the presence of the new minister in this fashion?

"He's so anxious to see you, Gordon," said Georgiana as they crossed the hall. Eaton wished he had not come.

Georgiana opened the study door. "Jack," she said to the young man under the green lamp, "Gordon's come."

And then she stood in the middle of the floor and watched the two men grasp hands.

"Jack Carelton," said Eaton after a minute. "What the—that is—Georgiana, why didn't you tell me?"

Georgiana laughed and sat down in the big leather chair under the light. "I wanted to get some fun out of Lent when Jack made me work so hard to help him in his new parish. And this was such fun! Your letters—oh, I did laugh so!"

"Yes," added Carelton, "Georgiana's a trump of a sister for a rising young curate." He was not ministerial in his manner of talking to his sister.

"Well, I say, Carelton, suppose you go now and study up on the marriage service," said Eaton hintfully.

And when Carelton looked back as he left the study he decided to take Eaton's advice.

The Fisherman's Regret.

They had a fishing club in one of the middle states; the keeper and factotum of the club was "Old Sammy." Despite his healthful occupation, age grew on him, and unable longer to "watch" the river, there was only one place for the lone old man—the county house. Here, as the end was surely coming, the pastor of the church was asked to see him. To meet the Great Proprietor with a vast accumulation of debt is an ordeal that every wise man may well dread and seek to prepare for. The man with the gospel, trying to induce Sam to see the prime necessity of climbing the cliff to touch the place of blood, was leading him to admit his bankrupt condition, that he might claim mercy of him whose "property is to have mercy and to forgive." "Sammy, I expect you've done many things you wish you hadn't done; haven't you, now?" But Sammy was noncommittal. "Well, now," pursued his visitor, "if you had your life to live over again, wouldn't you do differently in some respects?" "Maybe I would," was the cautious rejoinder. "Well, now, suppose you had the chance of living all these years over again, in what particular would you do differently?" After a minute's silence, the old man, true to the ruling spirit, strong even in death, replied: "Well, if I had my life to live over again, I'd fish more with bait than with fly."—Outlook.

"The Lamb Gourd."

The Duke of Holstein, in his "Travels In Muscovy and Persia" (1636), gives a full account of a wonderful vegetable growing in the neighborhood of the city of Samara, Russia, and known as the "lamb or sheep gourd." The duke says: "It most resembles a lamb in all its members and on that account is called 'the lamb gourd.' It changes place in growing as far as the vine or stalk will reach, and wherever it turns the grass withers. When it ripens the stalk withers and the outward rind is covered with a kind of hair, which the Muscovites use instead of fur. They showed us some of these skins, which were covered with soft wool, not unlike that of a lamb newly weaned."

Scaliger also speaks of the "lamb gourd" in his works. In one chapter he says that the queer vegetable continues to grow as long as grass is plentiful, but that when the grass fails the "pore creetyr dyes frome lac of nourishment." He also says that the wolf is the only animal that will feed upon it.

Former Elephants.

The great northern elephant perished as a species in the prime of life. It had lived under most prosperous conditions. Its enemies were few and comparatively impotent. Alone among other contemporary animals, the saber toothed tiger occasionally perhaps got the better of an antagonist which must have been less sensitive to the flint tipped arrows of mere human assailants than Ship Surgeon Gulliver was to the multitudinous pricks of Lilliputian missiles.

Inexhaustible supplies of food, too, were furnished by the forests and swamps of the vast European continent to the terrestrial leviathan, which accordingly multiplied and throve exceedingly. Then was the culminating epoch of the proboscidean family. Thick hided animals with tusks and trunks attained a larger size, ranged over a wider area of the earth's surface and existed more numerously and in greater variety than ever before or since.—Edinburgh Review.

Bowser as A Savant

He Begins a New Study and Makes Some Experiments For the Benefit of Science—Suggests Expedients.

[Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure.]

During the dinner hour the other evening Mr. Bowser had been unusually thoughtful, and Mrs. Bowser was not at all taken by surprise when at its close he remarked:

"I hope you have not arranged to go out anywhere this evening or have company here, as I shall be very busy."

"Are you going to try the lawn mower again?" she asked.

"No, ma'am; the lawn mower does not enter into my calculations."

"Is—is it anything to do with sleeping in a hammock in the back yard?"

"I may not sleep at all."

"You are not going to try to save half the gas or anything of that sort, I hope?"

"I fail to understand you. One would think from your talk that I am a dangerous man around my own house. I simply said that I should be very busy this evening."

"Yes, but you know you get fads sometimes," she explained, "and when you do one can't always tell what is going to happen."

"Fads? Fads? Woman, I never had a fad in my life. You can't name another man so clear of them. Now and then I make an experiment, but if Fulton hadn't experimented where would have been our steamboats? According to your way of thinking, I ought to sit around all my days like a bump on a log."

A HALF DOZEN OF THE INSECTS.

"Well, what is the experiment?" she asked.

"I presume you have read something of the mosquito question—how hundreds of communities are seeking to kill the insect off in the germ period?"

"Yes."

"The mosquito has been the subject of the closest scientific study, and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been paid out to get a line on him, but the results thus far have not been satisfactory."

"And you are going to take him up?"

"I am, Mrs. Bowser."

"And expect to do better than the scientists?"

"Chance may aid me in solving the problem. For hundreds of years the wise men of the earth could not tell why a man who fell off the woodshed didn't fall upward instead of downward. Then one day a fellow named Isaac Newton saw an apple fall from a tree and solved the whole mystery. I may be as lucky."

"Are you going out into some swamp to study the 'skeeter?'" she asked.

"No, ma'am, I'm not going out into any swamps, and you know I'm not. I had a boy go out to a marsh today to catch me half a dozen of the insects, and I have them here in this bottle, as you see. The sexes are equally divided, and I shall study them under the gaslight in the library. You can read as long as you wish and then go to bed. I shall hardly be through before midnight. If any one calls you will say that I am engaged in research and cannot be disturbed."

Some one did call within fifteen minutes after he had taken his victims into the library and locked the door. It was a man who said that an overflow of the Mississippi river had taken his farm away, drowned his family and left him destitute and that he wanted 5 cents to encourage him to new ambitions, and when Mrs. Bowser replied that the family was engaged in research and couldn't pause, even for the Mississippi river, he went away quite disappointed. Mr. Bowser's mosquitoes were confined in an eight ounce bottle, and in order that the world might not miss anything he got writing materials and jotted down his observations.

"I first find," he wrote, "that when a mosquito is held in the full glare of the gaslight he seems paralyzed and utterly unable to fly. Hint number one: Arrange to have all the swamps lighted by gas or electricity. We don't care how many mosquitoes there are in a certain swamp if they don't get out of it.

"Placed in a subdued light, the mosquito at once becomes lively and looks around for a victim. I introduced a small piece of raw meat into the bottle, and the six insects at once mistook it for a farmer passing a swamp and hopped on to it. In the act of biting they kick out with their hind legs. Hint number two: If a mosquito can't bite without kicking at the same time then it is only needed to cement his hind legs to his body to make him harmless. No reason why I shouldn't invent a preparation myself and call it 'Bowser's Mosquito Cement.'

"Whenever I disturb the bottle the mosquitoes are passive, being evidently afraid of any motion. Hint number three: Hire a lot of small boys to splash the waters of a swamp and throw clubs at the grass and bushes.

"All six of the insects have settled close together on the meat and are eating away in perfect harmony. This seems to prove that the mosquito is either no hog or that there is enough meat for all and that there is no occasion to fight among themselves. Hint number four: If the selfishness and greed of the mosquito could be aroused and result in fighting among themselves, wouldn't humanity have a better chance of escape?

"It is twenty minutes since the insects tackled the meat, and they are still gorging themselves. This goes to prove that when a mosquito settles on the back of a farmer's neck he is there to stay and that any hope of his taking his departure after three or four bites is a vain one. There is a hint here, but I do not know exactly what it is.

"Have poked the mosquitoes off the meat with a straw, and they have settled on the sides of the bottle and have an injured look. They show a disposition to find some place of hiding and grieve over my inhumanity. Hint number six: Injure the feelings of a mosquito if possible and thereby drive him into hiding.

"I have introduced a portion of a pea pod into the bottle, and the insects have settled on it and are gnawing away with the utmost gusto. Hint number seven: This seems to prove that mosquitoes bite human beings simply because human beings happen to be handy. Could they not be taught to put in all their time biting vegetables, trees, lumber yards, etc.?

"I have introduced a lump of sugar saturated with brandy and am breathlessly watching to see what will happen.

"The smell of the brandy has excited the insects, and they are sipping away at the half liquid sugar as if they hadn't had a good thing for months. There is a hint here, but it can wait.

"Mosquitoes are now walking around and bluffing at each other, and their wings seem perfectly useless.

"Regular row going on, the same as between six drunken men.

"Two insects lying on their backs with their legs up and a pained and wondering expression on their faces. They have been regularly knocked out.

"All insects now down and out, and only making feeble efforts to ascertain where they are at. I think I have proved beyond a doubt that if enough French brandy can be emptied into infested spots the mosquito can be rendered dumb and harmless for a certain length of time. It may even be that his death will result from his spree. I shall watch the case for several hours.

"Half an hour later: Still boozy.

"One hour later: As quiet as lambs. I have turned them over and over, but to all intents and purposes they are dead. If by getting the mosquitoes of America dead drunk we can kill them off, will the Prohibition party furnish their share of the liquid?"

Mr. Bowser laid down his pen and leaned back to mentally figure out the number of barrels of brandy required to make a thorough job of it, and when midnight came Mrs. Bowser descended the stairs to find him sound asleep. The gas was blazing away, but the bottle was empty. The six mosquitoes had got over their booze and come out, and they were sitting on his bald head and getting in their work. She did not disturb them. She picked up the pen and wrote:

"Hint number eight: Cannot the mosquito be taught to bite baldheaded men and let the rest of us alone?"

THURSDAY, NOV 10, 1904.

BRYAN will now find no obstacle in the way of floating his scheme for the new Democracy.

THE least that Parker can do by way of apology is to rise up and move to make it unanimous.

EVEN Standard Oil money is powerless when it goes up against the judgment of the American people.

PARKER'S votes should have equalled his Philippine figures; then he would have won out handsomely.

THOUSANDS of Democrats cut Judge Parker on account of his foolish and malicious assault upon the President.

NOW that the eagle's screaming is nearly over, the shadow of the turkey looms up on the horizon as the national bird.

IF Mr. Frank Brown will come up Garrett and organize some more Parker and Davis Leagues there will be a possibility of making the vote unanimously Repbulican.

IT WAS A GLORIOUS VICTORY.

The sweeping Republican victory which yesterday elected Roosevelt president and Fairbanks vice-president of the United States for the term of four years beginning March 4, 1905, means something more than a hearty endorsement of the policy of the Republican party and the admirable administration of President Roosevelt during the last three years. It is an eloquent condemnation of the Democratic party, which has sought by all sorts of shifting issues and subterfuges to catch the fancy of the majority, sincere in nothing, advocating one policy in one region and ignoring the same policy in another region, attempting desperately to excite fear rather than to appeal to reason, and, in the last moments of the campaign, in the person of the chief candidate, descending to the deepest depths of personal slander and blackguardism to prejudice voters.

The wonder is not that the Democratic party is once more discredited and remanded to the rear, but that decent Democrats anywhere could compound with their conscience and sense of justice to vote for Parker at all. Ex-Senator Davis, the grand old octogenarian candidate for the vice-presidenew, while blundering not a little in his new and strange capacity as a spellbinder, steadily maintained the knightly dignity and courtesy of the "old school of gentlemen"; and it was left to Judge Parker to erect himself in a distinctive niche of history as the only candidate for the presidency in all history who ever degraded himself by charging dishonor upon his opponent. Amid acclamations of victory, Judge Parker's disgraceful exhibition will be temporarily thrust aside, but it will never be forgotten. It will put him for all time without the pale of possible nomination for any national office of trust or honor.

In the main, and in fact, almost without exception, the result in the various states is in accord with Republican prediction. New York could only win by the corrupt manipulation of Tammany, and the utmost power of that discredited body is to be found in the returns from the Empire State. The magnificent Republican majority with which the state swept down upon the city shows that Tammany has a foe in the honest voter which cannot be permanently overcome by any system of trickery or dishonesty.

Indiana refuses to be lured by either the insincere syren song of Bryan or the wealth of money contribution poured into the state by Chairman Taggart. New Jersey and Connecticut, which with Indiana, were claimed by the Democrats, are ranged in the Republican columns by splendid majorities.

West Vsrginia confidently believed by ex-Senator Davis and his friends to be in temper to honer its national candidate by a majority, refused to turn its back upon the party of the protective tariff.

Summing up the magnificent outcome of a remarkable campaign, it may be said that there are really no surprises or disappointments to Republicans. Had the result been otherwise, it would have seemed in truth that human judgemnt can be turned away by the argument of the insincere and fallacious with such facility and thoroughness that the thoughtful must almost lose faith in the principle of popular government. The victory is emphatic proof that the people can be depended upon to do the best for themselves, and if they make occasional mistakes, as in 1884 and 1892, they are quick to remedy them and slow to repeat.

We extend sympathy to these two worthy and respected citizens on this sad bereavement. Mrs. Guynn resided near Lonaccning, Alleganv county. The elder Mr. Miller attended the funeral on Sunday last.

Mr. William L. Shaffer, one of the merchants of this place, is quite unwell at this writing, suffering with a severe attack of neuralgia and Doctor Laughlin, of Mt Lake, his old family physician, was called down yesterday (Monday) and thinks Mr. Shaffer has taken a severe cold bringing on this trouble, which is causing him severe pain, and at his age in life, after passing the meredian, and a veteran of the war between the States and the exposures of that awful struggle, in which he took an heroic part on the side that wore the blue, tells on all the survivors, more than others, at a similar age.

Hon. C. M. Miller and wife passed through our town Monday and called on a friend for a few minutes enroute to your city. Mr. Miller and his cultured wife are Swanton's most prominent and respected citizens, and the name of Mr. Miller is too well and favorably known in Garrett county for the past thirtyfive years to need any formal newspaper introduction, only to say we wish we had hundreds of such citizens to bless and grace our county with their education and culture.

Our old friend, the venerable Rev. William E. George, hopes to be out to-day to cast his vote. Although in feeble health, we are rejoicing to know that he can get out and vote in this his adopted country, and exercise the right of franchise, according his dictate of conscience and with fraternal feeling grant the same to those who vote and think different. This we have every reason to think of this good man bearing the same given given name of his distinguished countryman, "The Grand Old Man" of England, whose name and fame will live in English history while the world stands, and we believe is dwelling in a country beyond the stars.

Rev. Wm. H. Faust, our young and unassuming Baptist minister, is conducting a series of meetings this week in the Union church, commencing this Monday morning at 1.30 o'clock and it was the pleasure of the writer to attend last night and drink in every word that fell from the lips of this Christian young minister, preaching one of the most touching and eloquent sermons, far beyond his years, as a young theologian.

Hon. G. W. Haulenbeck, the talented correspongent of your contemporary paper, came up from Baltimore Saturday last and we presume he will remain until after the election, as we think he votes here. Mr. H. is an independent voter and votes at all times for what he believes to be the best man. Those who read his newsy and interesting letters each week can tell how he intends to cast his ballot. The old saying is "Wise men sometimes change, but fools never."

Our Deer Park Coronet Band has been gaining quite a reputation during this campaign, so much so that all the speakers of both political parties paid them profuse compliments for their excellent music at this place and by virtue of the notoriety they have gained in playing first for the Democratic Presidential candidates at Oakland on their whirlwind tour of some weeks since, and the two here in which the speakers lauded them at all their meetings in the county, especially Senator Dick, of the Republican meeting, and Hon. Wm. Miller and G. Semmes Hamill of the Democratic meeting. And so the Republicans of Friendsville, hearing of their deserved fame, selected this band to play for them at their last rally at that place Saturday night and from reports from that progressive place say that they are the equal if not the superior (according to numbers) of the famous Marine Band of Washington, as all know they play for the President's receptions. It was our pleasure to see them start from their headquarters at 7 a. m. on Saturday, seated in one of Echard's elegant conveyances behind four superb horses with the band wagon all decorated with gorgeous colored bunting and flags of all sizes and their own large star spangled banner on a beautiful pole all bedecked with ribbons of red, white and blue and streamers above, and as the sixteen members took their seats in their superb uniforms, and started playing for the benefit of a love sick few, that favorite selection "The Girls We Leave Behind," and with the words on either side printed in gold tinsel by the fair hand of Miss Zedee Taylor "The Deer Park Cornet Band," and quite a few of our citizens to see them start at this early hour, we thought as they started, with the morning breezes fluttering the flags and streamers, that "Old Glory" never floated more proudly. From our reporters we gather the following greetings. On this 26-mile trip, the first place of note was McHenry, the boyhood home of one of the members, and with many relatives living here they halted and played, and thence on through the picturesque little town of Hoyes, and there in front of the beautiful home of that prince of good fellows, Mr. Wm. A. Smith, they played a number of their most patriotic pieces for the special benefit of this most genial and jolly good fellow and the fair damsels of this hospitable town, which they cheered to the echo. The boys soon forgot the "girls they left behind," and methink even Clark forgot the fair and rosy Jess; and Scott did not think of North Glade, and a certain young widower might also have, for the moment, forgot the one most dear left in one of the model homes of dear old Deer Park, and Jim and George did forget two good and faithful companions, but little Tommy, true to the land of his birth, never forgets the girl in the "Green Emerald Isle." After an ovation by quite a crowd, who rent the air with applause for their favorite candidates and cheers for the band, the march for their destination and in less than three hours, the friendly town both name and nature, was reached at 1 o'clock p. m. and were cordially met and greeted by Mr. Dowler, manager of the Bear Creek Lumber company, who had made every preparation to receive and welcome the members of this now famous band. After a sumptuous dinner at the different hotels of the city to which they were assigned, they met and had a grand parade through the town and vast crowds of visitors and people from miles around, joined in the procession. At 7:30 they assembled in the town hall and played to she largest crowd thus far in this campaign and returned home Sunday with snow flakes in the air.

The battle is on, and to the victor belongs the spoils. If old Rockefeller don't get us in his toils and plunge us in his oils.

But shell out his gold by the ton.
We again say good bye, and

Consumption

Salt pork is a famous old-fashioned remedy for consumption. "Eat plenty of pork," was the advice to the consumptive 50 and 100 years ago.

Salt pork is good if a man can stomach it. The idea behind it is that fat is the food the consumptive needs most.

Scott's Emulsion is the modern method of feeding fat to the consumptive. Pork is too rough for sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion is the most refined of fats, especially prepared for easy digestion.

Feeding him fat in this way, which is often the only way, is half the battle, but Scott's Emulsion does more than that. There is something about the combination of cod liver oil and hypophosphites in Scott's Emulsion that puts new life into the weak parts and has a special action on the diseased lungs.

A sample will be sent free upon request.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

THANKSGIVING DAY NOV. 24

President Roosevelt, Issues His Annual Proclamation.

President Roosevelt Tuesday issued the following proclamation designating the twenty-fourth instant as a day of thanksgiving and prayer:

By the President of the United States of America. A proclamation:

It has pleased Almighty God to bring the American people in safety honor through another year, and, in accordance with the long unbroken custom handed down to us by our forefathers, the time has come a special day shall be set apart in which to thank Him who hoids all nations in the hollow of his hand for the mercies thus vouchsafed to us. During the century and a quarter of our national life we as a people have been blessed beyond all others, and for this we owe humble and heartfelt thanks to the Author of all blessings. The year that has closed has been one of peace within our own borders as well as between us and all other nations. The harvests have been abundant, and those who work, whether with hand or brain, are prospering greatly. Reward has waited upon honest effort. We haye been enabled to do our duty to ourselves and to others.

Never has there been a time when religious and charitable effort has been more evident. Much has been given to us and much will be expected from us. We speak what has been done by this nation in no spirit of boastfulness or vainglory, but with full and reverent realization that our strength is as nothing unless we are helped from above. Hitherto we have been given the heart and the strength to do the tasks allotted to us as they severally arose.

We are thankful for all that has been done for us in the past, and we pray that in the future we may be strengthened in the unending struggle to do our duty fearlessly and honestly, with charity and goodwill, with respect for ourselves and with love toward our fellow-men. In this great Republic the effort to combine national strength with personal freedom is being tried on a scale more gigantic than ever before in the whole world's history. Our success will mean much not only for ourselves, but for the future of all mankind; and every man or woman in our land should feel the grave responsibility resting upon him or her, for in the last analysis this success must depend upon the high average of our individual citizenship, upon the way in which each of us does his duty by himself and his neighbor.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do hereby appoint and set apart Thursday, the twenty-fourth day of this November, to be observed as a day of festival and thanksgiving by all the people of the United States at home and abroad, and do recommend that on that day they cease from their ordinary occupations and gather in their several places of worship or in their homes, devoutly to give thanks unto Almighty God for the benefits he has conferred upon us as individuals and as a nation, and so beseech Him that in the future His Divine favor may be continue to us.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this first day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and four and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-ninth.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

By the President:
JOHN HAY, Secretary of State.

ANCIENT BABYLON.

Its Great Wall Was One of the Wonders of Those Days.

According to Herodotus the ancient city of Babylon stood on a broad, level plain and was an exact square of fourteen miles each way, making the entire circuit of the city fifty-six miles. It was protected both by a wall and a moat, the latter being broad and deep and kept constantly filled with water. But the wall was the wonder, being 93 1-3 feet in width and an even 200 feet in height. This monster barrier was provided with 100 gates, all of solid brass, the lintels and side pieces being in bronze. Cross walls ran along the banks of the Euphrates, each provided with twenty-five gates which corresponded to the number of streets running in each direction from the river

The most remarkable edifice inside the wall was the temple of Bel, a pyramid of eight square stadia. On the summit of this pyramid stood a pure gold image of Bel forty feet high, two other smaller figures of the same precious metal and a golden table forty feet long and fifteen feet wide. This wonderful city first came prominently into the history of the world in the year 747 B. C., but since the time of Alexander the Great it has been a ruin, the site having at one time been entirely lost.

OHIO FOR ROOSEVELT

Buckeye State Eclipses Plurality Given McKinley Four Years Ago.

SOME GAINS MADE IN CONGRESS

Vote Unexpectedly Heavy—Johnson Admits Overwhelming Republican Landslide in Cuyahoga County. Democrats Elect Three and Perhaps Four Congressmen.

Cleveland, Nov. 9.—Mayor Johnson, Dem., admits there has been a Republican landslide in Cuyahoga county, and that the Republican presidential ticket wil have a plurality of from 10,000 to 12,000.

Meagre returns in dicate the general scratching of tickets and a long and tedious count. The Cleveland Leader, Republican, claims Rosevelt has carled Ohio by 120,000.

Columbus, O., Nov. 9.—Governor Herrick and Chairman Dick estimate that Roosevelt's plurality in Ohio would exceed the plurality of 113,000 last year. Chairman Garber, of the Democratic committee, had no figures to give out, but thought the Democrats would hold their own on Ohio congressmen.

The following congressmen have been elected.

Republicans—Nicholas Longworth, first district; Herman P. Goebel, second; Thomas C. Scroggy, sixth; J. Warren Keifer, seventh; Ralph D. Cole, eighth; James H. Southard, ninth; Henry T. Bannon, tenth; Charles H. Grosvenor, eleventh; Amos R. Webber, fourteenth; Capell L. Weems, sixteenth; James Kennedy, eighteenth; W. Aubrey Thomas, nineteenth; Edward L Taylor, Jr, twelfth; Beman G. Dawes, fifteenth; Theodore E. Burton, twenty-first.

These Democrats have been elected to congress: Harvey C. Garber, fourth district; Timothy T. Ansbury, fifth; Daniel Y. Crissinger, thirteenth.

East Liverpool—Present indications are that Columbiana county will give Roosevelt a majority of 7,000. East Liverpool is Republican by 3,000. James Kennedy, Rep., for congress, is elected by a big majority.

Columbus, O., Nov. 9.—In his 10 o'clock estimate State Chairman Dick, Rep., said that Roosevelt's plurality in Ohio would not be less than 100,000, while others at Republican state headquarters are estimated on the rate of Republican gains and place the plurality much higher. Some state officials estimated that the plurality would be double that of McKinley four years ago, 69,500, the highest plurality Ohio ever gave a president.

Mansfield—At 9 o'clock only 4 of the 43 precincts of Richland county had been reported, but taking them as a basis, the plurality of Parker will not exceed the 460 received by Johnson for governor last year. The city vote was large and showed Republican gains. In the country precincts, strongly tinged with Bryanism, many Democrats neglected to vote. For congress, Webber, Rep., will run slightly behind the national ticket. Long, his opponent, is a Richland county man, but Webber's election by over 30,000 in the fourteenth district is assured. It is probable that several Republican candidates on the county ticket are elected.

Findlay—Hancock county returns are slow, but early indications show a Republican gain for the entire ticket. The vote is enormous with but little scratching. Three precincts outside Findlay show a Republican gain of 100. Cole, Republican candidate for congress in the eighth district, will run ahead of the ticket.

Marietta—The city and county vote is coming in slowly, but indicates that Dawes, Republican candidate for congress in the fifteenth district, will carry the county by less than 600. Ellenwood, Dem., will lead the ticket for common pleas judge wiht nearly 2,000 majority in the county.

BLOODSHED IN COLORADO.

Three Men Shot and Killed During Election Day Quarrels.

Cripple Creek, Col., Nov. 9.—Two Democratic election judges were killed in this district, a Peabody deputy was mortally wounded and a number of Democratic judges were beaten and thrown into jail. Ike Idlebolt and Chris Miller, judges at Goldfield, were shot down by one of Sheriff Bell's deputies. They had ordered the deputy out of the polling place. He refused to go, and turning upon the judges, shot and killed them.

At Midway, Ed Boyle, a deputy sheriff, assaulted Mrs. Kenney, a Democratic judge, and in a struggle that ensued tore her dress and slapped her. Ed O'Leary, a Democratic watcher, interfered and shot Doyle, fatally wounding him.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 9.—"Dock" Walton, a farmer and a Democrat, has been shot and killed at his home in Claiborne county.

Camden, N. J., Nov. 9.—During an election row here last night James Brown, aged 41 years, colored, was struck on the head with a club and died later in a hospital.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 9.—Three Louisville policemen, James Tierney, Thomas Connell and Daniel Sexon, were arrested by United States Marshal Blades on warrants sworn out in the federal court, charging them with conspiracy to intimidate negro voters.

WILL NOT RUN AGAIN

President Roosevelt Will Not Be Candidate for Chief Executive in 1908.

DON'T BELIEVE IN THIRD TERMS

Makes Formal Announcement of Intention After Hearing Returns. Judge Parker Wires Congratulations to His Successful Opponent.

Washington, Nov. 9.—President Roosevelt has issued a formal statement in which he announces he will not be a candidate for another term.

President Roosevelt, after the election returns clearly indicated the result, issued the following statement: "I am deeply sensible of the honor done me by the American people in thus expressing their confidence in what I have done and have tried to do. I appreciate to the full the solemn responsibility this confidence imposes upon me and I shall do all that in my power lies not to forfeit it. On the 4th of March next I shall have served three and a half years and this three and a half years constitutes my first term. The wise custom which limits the president to two terms regards the substance and not the form. Under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination."

Surrounded by his devoted family and a company of intimate personal friends, President Roosevelt received the news of his overwhelming victory achieved at the polls of the American people.

The first information of a definite character was received by the president while he was at dinner. The returns laid before him then were in the nature of assurances that he had carried New York, his home state, by a plurality so large as to be really astounding. Bulletins from the newspapers of New York city were received conveying the welcome news. While the president was gratified, it may be said that the result was not entirely unexpected, although he himself had not anticipated so tremendous a victory.

These and rapidly succeeding bulletins, each conveying to him more cheering news, were read and discussed by the president with surprising calmness. He was in the best of spirits, but at no time did he manifest the slightest nervousness or anxiety. Assured, as he said, that the campaign had been conducted on a plane of principle and patriotism, as lofty as he himself would have it, that everything had been done which legitimately could be done to insure the success of the principles which had been promulgated by the Republican party and by him, he had awaited with perfect confidence the verdict of the people.

Esopus, N. Y., Nov. 9.—Judge Parker last night sent this telegram to the president: "The people by their votes have emphatically approved your administration and I congratulate you."

Washington, Nov. 9.—President Roosevelt's reply to Judge Parker's telegram was as follows: "I thank you for your congratulations."

Chairman Cowherd of the Democratic congressional campaign committee said: "We concede that the Republican Roosevelt landslide has carried the house of representatives for the Republicans by a majority at least as large as that by which they now hold control."

Oyster Bay, L. I., Nov. 9.—President Roosevelt and his party arrived here and was driven directly to the polling place in the fifth precinct of Oyster Bay, where the president deposited his ballot. He was greeted with much enthusiasm by an immense crowd.

Kingston, N. Y., Nov. 9.—Judge Parker drove up to the old pottery on Green Hill avenue, the voting place of the third district of the Ninth ward, at 10:40 o'clock. A crowd of Kingston neighbors had assembled to welcome him and he was received with cheers. He was handed a ballot and at the same time was asked the usual questions. After complying with all the formalities the judge passed into a booth and remained half a minute. He came out and handed his folded ballot to a clerk, who deposited it and announced: "Alton Brooks Parker votes ballot 147."

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 9.—Former President Grover Cleveland strolled into the first district polling place at 10 o'clock and when he appeared the long line gave way and allowed him to enter at once. The ex-president came out of the booth and after a few words with a friend he sauntered back to Westlands.

A Robber Kills Watchman.

Philadelphia, Nov. 9.—John Kerr, aged 42 years, watchman for the Pennsylvania Sweep and Smelting Company, was killed by a robber while attempting to save a fellow workman from being murdered.

Japanese Execute Chinese Official.

Shanghai, Nov. 9.—It is reported here that a Chinese official of high rank was executed by the Japanese Nov. 2 at Shakhe. He was spying on the movements of Japanese troops.

Four Perish in Hotel Fire.

Houston, Tex., Nov. 9.—The Silver Queen hotel, in the Sour Lake oil field, was destroyed by fire and four persons burned to death.

Messrs. James L. Pollock and Jesse Walton, of Philadelphia, were guests from Saturday until Tuesday of the family of Dr. E. H. Bartlett.

Mr. John H. Sterling, of near Elder Hill, was at Kingwood over Sunday visiting his brother, Mr. J. S. Sterling, whose wife has been seriously ill for several weeks.

Mr. George D. White, who is in the customs service in Baltimore, arrived here Saturday morning, remaining in Oakland until to-day when he returned to his duties.

Mr. Frederick Clair and family, who moved to Thomas, West Va., early last fall, returned to Mountain Lake Park yesterday where they will reside in the future.

Mr. Eugene Teats, of near Cranesville, and Mr. James W. Knox, of near McHenry, were visitors to Oakland yesterday, both gentlemen making this office calls.

Mr. Nicholas Merrill, who resides a mile or two from Oakland where he is the owner of one of the finest orchards in the county, has the thanks of this office for a basket of splendid apples of the Grimes' Golden variety.

Mr. E. H. Kelley of Terra Alta, who recently purchased a one-half interest in the livery business of Mr. A. W. Helbig, of Oakland, removed his household goods from his former home to Oakland yesterday and will occupy Mr. Helbig's house on Oak street.

An east bound freight train was wrecked near Hitchcock's Tunnel, on the 17-mile grade, Monday night which delayed traffic more than four hours. Three cars were thrown across both tracks which effectually blocked travel in all directions. No one was injured.

Dr. W. H. Gardner, a well known citizen of Rockwood, Pa., died at his home in that town last Saturday. The deceased was aged 62 years. Dr. Gardner taught school and practiced medicine at Grantsville, Md., about 33 years ago. He is survived by his wife, one son and one daughter.

Rice & Hutchins, makers of the "All America" $3.50 and $4.00 shoe for men and women, the "Educator" Shoe for children, the "Water King", "Old Homestead", "Hard Knocks", "Signet", and many other styles of footwear for men, women and children, received the Grand Prix at the St. Louis Fair, for the extent, variety, and great excellence of their products. These shoes are sold by H. C. Sincell & Co., Oakland. The sole leather entering into their manufacture is tanned at Hutton by the Garrett Leather Company.

Mr. Jerry Bore, of Baltimore, who operated the Oakland Hotel since the close of the summer season, vacated the house on last Saturday night and returned to Baltimore with his family.

Mr. Edward W. Helbig has purchased the Hessen farm adjoining Oakland and will get possession within a short time. The farm consists of one hundred acres and is quite a valuable piece of property.

Henry Blocher, veteran Republican of Garrett county, reached here Thursday en route home from Chicago. Looked as joyful as though he had stumped the State of Illinois and converted every Democrat to the faith never "delivered to the saints," that the way to make the people rich is to tax highly their need for dress and appetite for food.—Frostburg Journal.

W. H. Deeter was at Kendall, Md., last week, inspecting the large mill of the Yough Manor Lumber Co., at that place. He was very much surprised at the magnitude of the plant owned by the above company, and the way they manufacture lumber. That firm shipped a million and a half feet of lumber from that point during the month of October.—Meyersdale Republican.

Mr. John W. White, of Crellin, was a visitor to this office last Friday and had his name entered upon our subscription books as a paid-in-advance subscriber, notwithstanding the argument used by one of our local contemporaries to keep him from doing so. While we court honest competition in business, language will not avail to express our contempt for a competitor who will get down to hard lying to carry a point as was done in this case.

The funeral of the late Edwin L. Mitchell, whose sudden demise was chronicled in these columns last week, took place Thursday afternoon from the residence of his brother-in-law, Mr. Edward H. Sincell on Liberty street. The services were conducted jointly by Revs. J. B. Workman and R. B. Ward at the house. The Bar Association, of which the deceased was an esteemed member, attended the funeral in a body. The floral offerings were many and extremely beautiful. The pall bearers were Messrs. Joseph E. Harned, H. C. Sincell, Fred. A. Thayer, D. M. Mason, A. D. Naylor and Chas. S. Davis. A great number of friends were present to pay a last tribute to the memory of the deceased.

Star Router George Geissman left Oakland yesterday morning for Accident and intermediate points with his wagon and horses all bedecked with flags, etc., and himself filled with enthusiasm over the victory achieved by the Republicans in State and the Nation the day previous. It is reported from Hoyes that "Billy" Smith, the postmaster and leading citizen of that village, heard Geissman coming an hour before he reached the post-office and thinking it was an invasion of wild Comanche Indians mustered the military at that point to repel the enemy, but the sight of the stars and stripes on the wagon dispelled Smith's anxiety and the valiant soldiers who have fought, bled and died on many battlefields were disbanded and not given an opportunity to again show their zeal.

Handsomely engraved invitations have been received by friends acquainting them of the near approach of a charming function which is to mark the marriage of Mr. William R. Offutt, of Oakland, and Miss Mary Eleanor Humbird, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Wilson Humbird, of Cumberland. The ceremony will be performed at the Wasnington-st Presbyterian Church on the evening of Wednesday, November 23, at 7:30 o'clock. A reception will follow at the home of the bride's parents.

Died.

DAVIS—Mr. Thomas E. Davis, 60 years old, president of the First National Bank, of Grafton, W. Va., died Saturday night at Johns Hopkins hospital, Baltimore, where he had been a patient for five weeks with a complication of diseases. Mr. Davis was born in Taylor county, West Virginia, and received his early training in the public schools. At the age of 19 he enlisted in the Union Army and for gallantry was made a second lieutenant and attached to the staff of General Grant. At the close of the struggle he returned to his home and engaged in the banking business and also became very active in Republican politics. When 30 years old he was elected president of the Grafton National Bank and remained in that position until his death. For the last 30 years he had been the United States Internal Revenue officer of Grafton, and in 1888 he was a member of the state Senate of West Virginia. In 1892 he was the Republican candidate for Governor, but was defeated. In 1897 he was again elected to the State Senate. He was a summer resident of Mt. Lake Park.

Mr. Davis is survived by three daughters, Mrs. Dodson Ellis, Mrs. Carina and Eula Davis.

Mrs. Elizabeth Merrill is dead at her home near Avilton, Garrett county. She was sick only a few days until death claimed her. She leaves one son, Henry Merrill, three brothers two sisters. Rev. D. CUT IN TWAIN.

Mrs. Hartman, of Terra Alta, Killed In Sight of Her Home at That Place.

Mrs. Hartman, aged about forty years, a mother of eight children, the youngest being an infant of six months, was killed at Terra Alta Monday morning by being cut in twain by a freight train at the station there and immediately in front of her home, the accident being witnesses by her oldest daughter, a young girl of nineteen years, who is just recovering from an attack of typhoid fever. The woman was crawling under a car on the side track at that place and just as she was midway between the rails an engine was coupled onto the train and it was pushed over her prostrate form, killing her instantly.

LOST SIGHT OF ONE EYE

Herman Creutzberg, Formerly of Oakland, In Hospital at Salt Lake City.

A letter was received here a few days ago from Mr. Herman Creutzberg, formerly of Oakland where he was engaged in the meat and grocery trade, stating that he is now in a hospital at Salt Lake City where one of his eyes had been removed owing to an injury sustained in a sand storm while he was crossing one of the deserts lying between that city and the gold diggings he is interested in up in the mountains of Idaho. Mr Creutzberg states in his letter that the physicians hope to save his remaining eye but that it will require a course of treatment to do so.

His many friends here regret to learn of his misfortune and trust that he may entirely recover.

BLEAK NOVEMBER TOWARD THE CLOSE

Beginning of the Month is Likely to Be Pleasant.

For November Rev. Irl R. Hicks makes these predictions:

First storm period covers the first six days, having its center on the 3rd. In most western extremes the weather will turn to quite warm and balmy and the barometer will begin falling about the 1st and 2nd. From about the 3rd to the 6th these conditions will develop into cloudiness and rain and pass easterly across the country. The culmination of the period will fall on and touching the 5th, about which day rain, wit tpossible thunder, will turn to colder and snow in the north and be followed with rising barometer, high westerly winds and much colder.

Second storm period, reactionary, is central on the 8th and 9th. If change to colder and high barometer follow the first storm period promptly, quick return to warmer and falling barometer will return on the 7th. Look for gusts of autumn wind and rain at this time, followed by change to colder, with snow squalls and frosty nights.

Third storm period will culminate on the 14th, 15th and 16th, together its effect will be felt from the 12th to 17th. About the 12th and 13th marked changes to warmer and falling barometer will begin in the west and by the 14th cloudiness and rain will be spreading eastward across the country. These general disturbances will reach most parts of the country from the 15th to 17th, and decided changes to higher barometer, heavy snow squalls and cold, high winds will follow promptly down from the northwest. Frost and freezing may be expected during the nights succeeding these disturbances.

Fourth storm period is central on the 19th and 20th. The moon on the celestial equator on the 18th will bring a sudden reaction to warmer. The barometer will fall rapidly, wide cloud areas will form and squalls of rain turning to snow will visit many localities in their eastward journey. Unsettled weather will continue in a measure from the third to the fifth storm period.

Fifth storm period extends from the 24th to the 30th. We will forecast for this period the most severe and general storms of the month. Beginning about the time of the full moon on the 22nd, the barometer will fluctuate and finally fall to marked storm readings. Temperature and winds will sympathize with low barometer. Clouds will organize in western sections about the 25th, and during 26th to 29th storms of decided force will march eastward. The first stages of these storms will be warm and rainy, but the last stage will be of decided boreal character. As the storm centers work eastward, carrying with them the areas of warmth and rain, westerly to northwesterly winds will follow, the barometer will raise and snow will take the place of rain in all northern sections. Stiff gales from the northwest will rush over the lake regions and through the interior generally, bringing a good sized, November cold wave.

KILLED NEAR BOND.

William Colmer, Jr., Fell From Wagon and His Neck Broken as Result.

Wheeler Colmer, Jr., son of William Colmer, Sr., a farmer residing near Frankville, this county, was instantly killed last Wednesday near the town of Bond by falling from a wagen loaded with lumber, the wheels of which passed over his neck, dislocating it.

The unfortunate young man was about twenty-three years of age, unmarried, and resided with his father. He had been to the saw mill at Bond where he secured a load of lumber and was driving home with it when the horses became frightened and bolted, throwing him from the top of the load and underneath the wheels with the result as above stated.

LETTER TO R. K. MARONEY, Oakland, Md.

Dear Sir: Devoe is worth $4 or $5 a gallon, put-on; how much is another paint worth?

Depends on how many gallons you've got to put-on, to be equal to one of Devoe.

Mr J J Hall, Sheffield, Pa, painted two houses one coat, five years ago, lead-and-oil, took 40 gallons.

Last Summer bought 40 galions Devoe for same houses; had 10 gallons left.

Mr N Avery, Delhi, N Y, owns two houses exactly alike; painted one with Devoe; took 6 gallons. The other with some other; took 12 gallons.

What'd you give for those off paints? Bear in mind, you've got to pay for the painting.

Yours truly

The Measure Of His Faith

By SEWELL FORD

.....Copyright, 1904, by Sewell Ford.....

CHANCE brought them both, little Pietro and laguanita, the little lake. The little Pietro came because there was no other place for him to go, his father being dead of a thin steel blade between the ribs and the faithless mother of him having gone with him who struck the blow.

So it was that Sabbano, the bent old father of the one who had passed, took little Pietro from the gloomy tenement of horrid memory—took him away to his tumbledown shanty on the Risers, where were Dolo, the yellow and white cat, and Nizzi, the yellow and white dog.

Mean and squalid enough was this shanty, but the crazy door of it was the only door in all the wide, strange land that was open to the little Pietro. It squatted in wretched loneliness out on the far and drabbled skirts of the great city, but to Pietro, cramped from birth within crowded slums, it stood for all the possibilities of boundless freedom. Why, the nearest shanty neighbor was out of stone's throw! And when one has had for a playground only the half of an iron fire escape what a joy there is in having for one's own a whole acre of ground! That it bordered the refuse dump only lent another charm. Rare treasures might be found on the dump.

And as Pietro came to the Risers because he had no other place to go so also came the little lake, for it was early spring, the rains had fallen hard and often, and the Risers lacked drainage. Hence the waters spread and spread until they covered much space about the shanty. Indeed one must walk on planks to get from the door to the lane. Dolo, the yellow and white cat, did not like it at all. He looked out at the encroaching water and mewed mournfully. Nor did Nizzi like it, this water. He yapped in protest. But the little Pietro was pleased. His big, soft brown eyes widened with the wonder of it.

"Oh, oh, the little lake! The little lake!" he cried. "See, Grandpa Sabbano, the little lake!"

"Yes, Pietro, mio, it is for you. See, I shall make a boat, and you shall sail it in the little lake while I am away."

Very softly and tenderly spoke old Sabbano, letting his knotted, grimy hand rest fondly on the black curls, for during those long months they had passed together in the tumbledown shanty old Sabbano had come to adore this little disturber of his loneliness. Out of a bit of board he fashioned the boat, rigging it with a queer sail such as the Napoli fishermen use and fastening to it a long string.

"There, Pietro, that is so thy ship shall not sail too far away. See, by this you can pull it back and thus keep the little feet from the water. It is bad to wet the little feet. Now I must go."

Then old Sabbano, throwing a burlap sack over his shoulder, went forth to gather from the back yards the bones, the bottles and the bits of metal which he sold to the junk dealer.

So little Pietro was left alone with his boat and his little lake. It was not raining now. The mild April sky was clear and blue. The sunshine had begun to warm the soaked and steaming earth. Out from the doorstep fared the little ship, out past the old stump that rose black and menacing from the smiling water, out to the farthest limit of the string. Then back it came inglorisusly, sternforemost. Next it was laden with bits of stone and sent on another voyage.

Pietro—the small, brown eyed Pietro—smiled joyously at the little lake, and right joyously the little lake smiled back at him, for Pietro was five, which is the age of enchantment.

Far out from the doorstep—oh, very far out—was an island in the little lake. It was a big island, twice as big as the floor of the shanty itself. A bush grew in the very middle of the island, a tall bush, on which the buds were swelling. Longingly did little Pietro look at the island. It seemed to beckon him. From it, could it once be reached, one might sail a craft to any point. How Pietro longed to be on it!

Then came the venture. If one walked on the plank that stretched from the doorstep one might jump to the flat top of the stump. From the stump—but Pietro hesitated no longer. From stump to log, from log to stone, from stone to barrel, and then a splash. The barrel was not secure. Into the smiling water Pietro fell with a gasp of terror, to emerge shrieking lustily. But his fright passed. The sun was warm. What cared he for the chill of the water? Grandpa Sabbano might be angry when he learned. But why need he learn?

Bravely now did Pietro wade out to the enchanted island. Ah, it was worth the venture. East and west and north and south voyaged the little boat that was rigged as they rig boats in the bay of Napoli. What thought he of dripping clothing then? It was not until the chill afternoon wind blew on him that little Pietro began to be sorry that he had disobeyed.

It was nightfall before Grandfather Sabbano returned. He found a little boy whose big brown eyes were very big and bright indeed, whose cheeks were flaming red and whose teeth chattered. Also he found that the little boy's clothing was soggy with dampness.

"I—I was sailing the boat, and I fell into the little lake," confessed Pietro, sobbing.

"Well, well, it is too bad," said Sabbano gently. "But never mind. We will put thee in bed, and thee shall get warm."

But warm little Pietro did not get, though Sabbano piled on the little cot all the ragged bedclothing in the shanty, though he made the small stove roar, though he urged Pietro to drink the steaming broth he had made. Still Pietro shivered under the covers, while his flaming cheeks were so hot as almost to burn the hand.

"Now Pietro must go quietly to sleep," pleaded Grandfather Sabbano.

Sleep, however, was not for Pietro's eyes. He talked rapidly, continuously, of the little lake and the boat. Over and over again he made the voyage from the plank to the stump, from the stump to the barrel that would not stand still. Wildly he talked on and on, restlessly waving his little hands and beating them on the covers. And ever did old Sabbano urge him to cease and to sleep.

Thus passed all the night and an interminable day that followed. It was not until in the heart of the second night that the little Pietro, breaking a brief silence, said weakly: "I think I am going—going—to sleep—now, grandpa. And tomorrow—you will take me out—out to my little island—won't you, grandpa?" This last very faintly.

"Yes, little Pietro. Yes, it shall be as you say."

Then there was silence. The old Sabbano, worn out by his long vigil, bent forward in his chair, laid his head on the little cot and slept. And when he awoke it was to find that the little hand in his was cold, icy cold.

All day he sat there staring at the little face which had flamed so scarlet, but which was now so white that the black curls about it seemed to frame a face of snow. Dolo, the yellow and white cat, purred plaintively and rubbed about his legs unheeded. Nizzi, having begged in vain for his scraps of bone, whined despairingly.

A very old man was Sabbano and very simple. The little he knew about the business of death, that he did. And he kept his promise. He took Pietro out to his little island and left him there deep under the bush.

After that the days were lonelier than any Sabbano had ever known before, though he had lived long and known much loneliness. He became very gentle with little children. He smiled at them as they passed and sometimes reached out furtively to touch them.

Day by day the little lake grew smaller and the island bigger. Day by day the sun shone brighter, and at last there was no trace left of the little lake. As for the island, it was only a little knoll with a bush on it.

One night when the moon swung high and full old Sabbano sat in his open door looking at the bush. He noted that all suddenly it had grown white. In the moonlight it seemed as if a stray cloud had become intwined in the branches, hiding them from sight. Much did he marvel at this, for he was an unheeding, simple old man who knew not the habits of the sweet syringa.

On the following Sunday morning he met Joe, the small son of the junk dealer to whom Sabbano sold his reapings of bone and glass and metal. A bright new tie had Joe under his clean wide collar, and he carried a book in his hand.

"Where you go today, little Joe?" asked Sabbano kindly.

"Mission Sunday school," said Joe, showing his book with pride.

Old Sabbano shook his head in a puzzled way. He would know what it was like, what Joe did there.

"Oh, they read to us out of a big book, and we all sing, and they tell us where we shall go when we die if we are good."

"And where is that?" asked Sabbano.

"Don't you know?" exclaimed Joe. "Up there, of course." And he pointed

"UP THERE?" EAGERLY INQUIRED SABBANO.

into the bright zenith where one small white cloud floated against the blue. Simple old Sabbano shaded his eyes with a wrinkled hand and gazed solemnly at the little white cloud. Long years ago when he had been young and a worker in the vineyards about far Napoli he had gone on feast days to the great cathedral with the high, shiny altar. Priests had been there who had said in full, rich tones things about the Holy Mother and about Jesus the Child. But Sabbano had roamed far from Napoli, had forgotten much. Vaguely he remembered some teachings such as these spoken by the small Joe.

"Do you go every day to this mission school?" he asked of little Joe, the junk dealer's boy.

"Yes, but on other days they teach us many things."

"Tell me," said the old man, "do they teach you where goes the water after the hard rains?"

"Of course. Some of it runs in rivers to the sea and some just dries and goes up in steam."

"Up?" eagerly queried old Sabbano. "Up there?"

"Yes, up into the clouds," said the wise little Joe and went on his way.

Hour after hour the Grandfather Sabbano thought upon these things, saying them over to himself as he sat on his doorstep and watched a small white cloud riding high in the sky.

"See, Dolo. Little Pietro is up there," he murmured. "See, Nizzi. The little lake is up there also. He liked much the little lake."

That evening when once more in the moonlight he saw the white bush he cried out as one who makes discovery: "Ah, the white bush! I should have known. It is for a sign. I understand, little Pietro; I understand."

So now when the bent old Sabbano is more lonely and wretched than is his wont he searches the sky for a small white cloud. Finding it, such is his simple faith, he whispers gently: "The little Pietro! The little lake! It is well." Thus he is comforted. Yet there be those of wider faith who can nowhere find comfort.

The Kea Parrot.

Naturalists regard the Kea parrot as the most remarkable of creatures that have adopted bad habits as a recent evolution. This bird was once a respectable parrot. Its worst crime was to rob orchards of their fruit. It now cannot live without meat. It has learned to dig the kidney fat out of the backs of sheep. Numbers of these birds assemble together and worry a sheep until the quadruped is so exhausted that it can scarcely move. They then dig into its back with their powerful beaks and eat the fat. Naturally the New Zealand farmers are not well disposed toward the Kea parrot. The bird has further lost its power of flight. When it first arrived in New Zealand there were no mammals in the island; hence the bird did not need wings to escape from cats and other predaceous creatures, and as its fruit food was to be obtained in plenty on the ground it rarely used its wings. These, therefore, as generation succeeded generation, became smaller and weaker until the bird now cannot fly.

Binks—I wonder why Jones never succeeded. He's very persevering fellow.

The Arizona Kicker

Another Bunch of Interesting Home News From the Gulch.

THERE was no close approach to a tragedy in the common council room last Tuesday night, as stated by our esteemed contemporary. Alderman Murphy contended that a motion to adjourn was in order while a resolution was being voted on, and he would not give in until we leveled a gun on him. Had we been obliged to fire we should only have split one of his ears.

The Arizona Kicker employs no traveling agents to take subscriptions, and whenever a man is found at work collecting money it won't do any harm to pull him up a limb three or four times and then whisper in his ear. In case of accident we will pay all expenses and send on a tombstone.

Last week the Blue Hill Record plaintively inquired of the winds, "How long is this czar of Arizona (meaning us) to remain unhung to stalk among us?" Our answer is that we propose to stalk for many years yet, and whenever any little hanging comes off we shall be on deck to help make things lively.

Our thanks are due to some unknown admirers for a serenade last Tuesday night. Over 100 bullets were fired into the Kicker windows, and a jolly time prevailed for a quarter of an hour. Come again.

When the Grass Valley Tribune says that "high society in this town was shocked," etc., it means that Major Harper was shocked. He is the high society of that town, and yet he doesn't know enough to eat bean soup with an oyster fork.

During our temporary absence from the sanctum the other day Major Riddle called and fired three bullets into our cuckoo clock in the most heroic manner. If the major continues on the giddy career he has mapped out he will feel a pain some day.

A New York advertising agency wants to know if we will make affidavit that our circulation is 1,000,000,000 copies per week, as advertised. Of course we will. An editor who won't lie about his circulation and swear to it would be locked up as a dead failure these days. And while we are swearing we had just as soon swear to 2,000,000,000 as 1,000,000,000.

Many of our subscribers have complained because we have not pitched into the trusts, but we have reasons for keeping quiet. When a man holds the positions of mayor, postmaster, senator, deputy marshal, fish commissioner and game warden and is looking around for three or four other good things he can't consistently howl out against any other trust.

Justice of the Peace Williams of this town is a good fellow and a man of integrity, but if he can't improve on his spelling he ought to step down and out. His warrants for "Jon Dow" and his "defeandints" and "plentiffs" make the spelling books look very tired.

Rumors were afloat yesterday that the mayor of Lone Jack had been de-

A party named White from Ohio was in town yesterday to see about establishing a private bank, but upon learning that five different bankers had been hung here because their books and their cash didn't balance he decided to go over to Lone Jack and start a restaurant.

As a private individual we not only attended the horse race held here the other day, but rode our own horse and came in four lengths ahead of the field and took the purse of $100. The public must not confound our public and private rights. As postmaster and so forth we frown upon horse racing and such. As a private citizen we whoop 'er up on all occasions and have barrels of fun. M. QUAD.

Who They Were.

"Who are all these men marching afoot?" asks the stranger.

"They are the members of the Teamsters' union, which is out on strike," answers the native.

"And who is that man at the head of the parade?"

"You mean the one in the open top carriage drawn by four horses?"

"Yes."

The Trend of Industrial Combat

By President C. W. ELIOT of Harvard

THE actual industrial organization in the United States is in large measure A DUAL ORGANIZATION FOR COMBAT. Within the last two years this industrial combat has become more intense, though less violent, through the firm organization of many associations of employers, and now, unlike ordinary warfare, THREATENS TO BE INCESSANT, the combatants agreeing to truces, but NEVER MAKING PEACE. Its evils are pervasive and chronic and always at one's door.

The solid association of employers which for purposes of combat must act as units under the direction of one man or small group of men has abridged liberty—the liberty of each individual employer to utilize his own special advantages in competing with other men who are in the same business. Employers should study means of procuring for faithful employees rising wages during at last thirty years of active service and means of prolonging the earning of wages BEYOND THE PERIOD OF GREATEST EFFICIENCY.

THE ECONOMIC EFFECTS OF STEADY AND MUTUAL GOOD WILL BETWEEN THE EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYED WOULD BE PRODIGIOUS.

The exclusion of nonunion labor from employment is not only an attack on liberty, an effort to abolish competition and to a secure a monopoly, but it is supported on a carefully cultivated sentiment of contempt and dislike for men whose only offense is that THEY ARE INDEPENDENT in habit and thought.

The habitual effort of trade unions to create a monopoly of labor each in its own trade is a hostile effort against the community as a whole, for they seek by this means their own pecuniary benefit AT THE EXPENSE OF THE REST OF THE COMMUNITY. The boycott method of combat eminently is the method of ill will.

As they have grown powerful the unions have themselves become exclusive and oppressive, and their former altruistic spirit has been corrupted by class selfishness. Their modes of action which partially were sanctified by the genuine altruistic purpose have become abhorrent WHEN USED FOR SELFISH ENDS.

THE PROSCRIPTION OF NONUNION MEN, THE STRIKE OF SYMPATHY AND THE SUPPORT OF A BOYCOTT ARE WEAPONS WHICH ANGELS AND SAINTS COULD NOT USE WITHOUT BECOMING DEMORALIZED.

The Stage as a Career For Women

By ETHEL BARRYMORE, Star of "Cousin Kate"

IF a woman is bent upon a career or circumstances force her to determine upon making a career for herself I DON'T THINK SHE CAN DO BETTER THAN TAKE TO THE STAGE. Mind you, I don't recommend any woman to take up a career unless she has to do so. But if she has her own way to make in the world I don't know of any profession which offers her such rewards as those which the stage holds out.

So far as the stage offering a woman more temptations than she will find elsewhere when she has to earn her own living, I DON'T BELIEVE A WORD OF IT. Of course, in my own case I made my debut in the company of my grandmother, Mrs. John Drew, Sr., and was then in the company of my uncle, John Drew, so it may not seem fair for me to make such a sweeping statement. Yet I think it entirely justified. If a girl wants to make a success upon the stage she has got to work hard, and the work will take up so much of her time that she will have little opportunity for late suppers and all that sort of thing.

And that very monopolization of one's time is perhaps THE GREATEST DRAWBACK to the stage as a profession. What with actual performances, rehearsals, traveling, etc., one does not have much time to devote to the society of friends.

YET, TAKING EVERYTHING INTO CONSIDERATION, I SAY LET A GIRL TAKE UP THE STAGE, BUT FIRST LET HER ASSURE HERSELF THAT SHE HAS SOME TALENT, IS WILLING TO WORK HARD AND CAN PUT ALL SOCIAL LIFE INTO A DISTINCTLY SECONDARY POSITION.

Evils of School Athletics

By ALFRED E. STEARNS, Principal of Phillips Andover Academy

QUESTIONABLE METHODS HAVE BECOME LAMENTABLY COMMON IN SCHOOL ATHLETICS. Players early are taught that skill in disregarding rules is a prime requisite of a successful athlete, and the worst feature of this lamentable situation lies in the fact that it is largely graduates of our leading colleges and universities who are engaged in this demoralizing business.

In the secondary school this evil is most insidious and most to be deplored. To the average schoolboy the college athlete is a veritable hero. His word is law. And this man often, I regret to say, passes his time in instructing his pupils in THE ARTS OF DECEIT AND DISHONESTY. I have seen many a college athlete coach devoting his time to teaching his young followers how they may cleverly disobey the rules of the game without risk of detection, and I think that I am safe in saying that the majority of coaches are more or less given to this business.

SURELY ATHLETICS WHICH DEPEND FOR THEIR SUCCESS UPON DISHONESTY AND HATRED ARE IN NEED OF A VIGOROUS OVERHAULING. How many schoolmasters know what their boys are being taught on the athletic field? Yet have we not a right to know? If care is required in selecting as teachers men of character and sound moral influence, even more important is it to my mind that the men to whom the undeveloped youth LOOK WITH REVERENCE AND ADMIRATION should be men who are actuated by principles of honesty and uprightness.

CHILDREN

By Longfellow

COME to me, O ye children!
For I hear you at your play,
And the questions that perplexed me
Have vanished quite away.

Ye open the eastern windows,
That look toward the sun,
Where thoughts are singing swallows,
And the brooks of morning run.

In your hearts are the birds and the sunshine,
In your thoughts the brooklet's flow;
But in mine is the wind of Autumn
And the first fall of the snow.

Ah! what would the world be to us
If the children were no more?
We should dread the desert behind us
Worse than the dark before.

What the leaves are to the forest,
With light and air for food,
Ere their sweet and tender juices
Have been hardened into wood—

That to the world are children;
Through them it feels the glow
Of a brighter and sunnier climate
Than reaches the trunks below.

Come to me, O ye children!
And whisper in my ear
What the birds and the wind are singing
In your sunny atmosphere.

For what are all our contrivings,
And the wisdom of our books,
When compared with your caresses,
And the gladness of your looks?

Ye are better than all the ballads
That ever were sung or said;
For ye are living poems,
And all the rest are dead.

PARRHASIUS

By Nathaniel P. Willis

THE golden light into the painter's room
Streamed richly, and the hidden colors stole
From the dark pictures radiantly forth,
And, in the soft and dewy atmosphere,
Like forms and landscapes magical, they lay.
Parrhasius stood, gazing forgetfully
Upon his canvas. There Prometheus lay,
Chained to the cold rocks of Mount Caucasus,
The vulture at his vitals, and the links
Of the lame Lemnian festering in his flesh;
And as the painter's mind felt through the dim,
Rapt mystery, and plucked the shadows wild
Forth with its reaching fancy, and with form
And color clad them, his fine, earnest eye
Flashed with a passionate fire, and the quick curl
Of his thin nostril, and his quivering lip,
Were like the winged god's, breathing from his flight.

"Bring me the captive now!
My hand feels skillful, and the shadows lift
From my waked spirit airily and swift;
And I could paint the bow
Upon the bended heavens, around me play
Colors of such divinity to-day.

"Ha! bind him on his back!
Look! as Prometheus in my picture here—
Quick—or he faints!—stand with the cordial near!
Now bend him to the rack!
Press down the poisoned links into his flesh!
And tear agape that healing wound afresh!

"Pity thee! So I do!
I pity the dumb victim at the altar;
But does the robed priest for his pity falter?
I'd rack thee, though I knew
A thousand lives were perishing in thine:
What were ten thousand to a fame like mine?

"Ha! there's a deathless name—
A spirit, that the smothering vault shall spurn,
And, like a steadfast planet, mount and burn;
And though its crown of flame
Consumed my brain to ashes as it won me,
By all the fiery stars! I'd pluck it on me.

"Ay, though it bid me rifle
My heart's last fount for its insatiate thirst;
Though every life-strung nerve be maddened first
Though it should bid me stifle
The yearning in my throat for my sweet child,
And taunt its mother till my brain went wild;—

"All, I would do it all,
Sooner than die, like a dull worm, to rot;
Thrust foully in the earth to be forgot.
O heavens! but I appal
Your heart, old man! forgive!—Ha! on your lives,
Let him not faint!—rack him till he revives!

"Vain, vain; give o'er! His eye
Glazes apace. He does not feel you now—
Stand back! I'll paint the death-dew on his brow.
Gods! if he do not die
But for one moment—one—till I eclipse
Conception with the scorn of those calm lips!

"Shivering! Hark! he mutters
Brokenly now—that was a difficult breath—
Another? Wilt thou never come, oh Death?
Look! how his temple flutters!
Is his heart still? Aha! lift up his head!
He shudders—gasps—Jove help him—so—he's dead!

THE LAST MAN

By Thomas Campbell

ALL worldly shapes shall melt in gloom,
The Sun himself must die,
Before this mortal shall assume
Its immortality!
I saw a vision in my sleep
That gave my spirit strength to sweep
Adown the gulf of Time!
I saw the last of human mold,
That shall Creation's death behold,
As Adam saw her prime!

The Sun's eye had a sickly glare;
The Earth with age was wan;
The skeletons of nations were
Around that lonely man!
Some had expired in fight—the brands
Still rusted in their bony hands;
In plague and famine some!
Earth's cities had no sound or tread,
And ships were drifting with the dead
To shores where all was dumb.

Yet, prophet-like, that lone one stood,
With dauntless words and high,
That shook the sear leaves from the wood
As if a storm passed by,
Saying: "We are twins in death, proud Sun;
Thy face is cold, thy race is run;
'Tis Mercy bids thee go;
For thou, ten thousand thousand years
Hast seen the tide of human tears,
That shall no longer flow.

"This spirit shall return to Him
That gave its heavenly spark;
Yet think not, Sun, it shall be dim
When thou thyself are dark!
No! it shall live again, and shine
In bliss unknown to beams of thine,
By Him recalled to breath,
Who captive led captivity,
Who robbed the grave of victory,
And took the sting from Death!

"Go, Sun, while Mercy holds me up
On Nature's awful waste,
To drink this last and bitter cup
Of grief that man shall taste—
Go, tell the Night that hides thy face,
Thou saw'st the last of Adam's race,
On Earth's sepulchral clod,
The darkening universe defy
To quench his immortality,
Or shake his trust in God!"

The Sheriff Who Had Something on His Mind

I FOUND the sheriff of an Alabama town sitting under a tree near the postoffice, and, after an introduction and some general conversation, the talk fell upon a negro who had stabbed a man in town that day and escaped to the swamps.

The official was telling how he was planning to go out next day after the man, when a negro boy came up and, addressing him by his title, said he wanted to speak to him.

"Don't you know better than to interrupt me, Joe?" exclaimed the sheriff and after a growl or two resumed his talk.

The boy retreated in confusion, but five minutes later he reappeared to say:

"Mars Green, I dun want to speak to you."

"You here again," shouted the sheriff. "Take yourself off, and I'll teach you manners later on."

The boy disappeared, but the story was not half ended when he returned and excitedly stammered:

"Mars Green, if you don't come away"—

"Hang it, boy, but what do you mean?" thundered the sheriff as he half rose.

His attitude was so menacing that the boy fell over himself to get away and ran across the street. We noticed him standing over there for the next ten minutes, but it was only when the story was finished that he slowly crossed back again and said:

"Mars Green, ken I speak to you now?"

"That you, Joe? What is it?"

"I's bin waitin' to tell you 'bout de jail, sah."

"Well, what about the jail? You should know better than to interrupt a gentleman."

"But all the prisoners dun got away half an hour ago, sah. I wanted to tell you, but you"—

The sheriff went off like a wild locomotive, but he was too late. His seven prisoners had filed the bars and gone out by the window.

A Hindrance.

"Why is it that a scientist seldom becomes rich?"

"A scientist," said the practical man, "becomes too much accustomed to dealing with large quantities. If he makes a calculation that is only a few million years or a few million miles out of the way he doesn't complain. And he can always figure that he is within a few million dollars of being rich."—Washington Star.

Farragut at Mobile Bay

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

August 5, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

THE fight of the south against Federal blockaders was in two years narrowed down to a contest for three ports—Wilmington, Charleston and Mobile. The last named, having but one entrance, suffered the most from the blockade, and early in 1864 the Confederates set to work to raise it by means of a powerful ram. Admiral Buchanan, the commander of the Merrimac in the Hampton Roads battle, was then at the head of naval affairs in Mobile bay. Other officers of the first ram still served under him and devoted their skill and experience to the building of a new monster, the Tennessee, with the express purpose of dashing into Farragut's blockading squadron and putting an end to it. But about the time the ram got ready for business Farragut brought up four ironclads from the Mississippi and, placing them at the head of his fleet of wooden ships of war, set sail for the bay, intending to knock to pieces the forts and slighter vessels defending the city before the famous ram, of which he had heard, could come to the rescue. The battle of Mobile Bay, Aug. 5, 1864, was the result.

The ram Tennessee was modeled upon the Merrimac and resembled her very much when lying in the water. Her hull, 209 feet long, was surmounted amidships by a shield made of alternate layers of yellow pine and white oak plank twenty-five inches thick, extending at an angle of 45 degrees from below the water over her batteries, engines and quarters. Over the planking, when completed, she carried six inches of plating in three layers bolted through the thick wooden backing. Her strength lay in her armor and in her massive spur or ram. This ram was constructed by bending her planking and plating, shortened to about six feet, at a sharp angle around her bow.

Had other things been equal the armor and iron beak would have made the Tennessee the most powerful of all the dreaded rams of the Confederacy. Owing to an accident she was deprived of the chance of surprising the blockading fleet and spreading havoc among the vulnerable wooden boats, as the Merrimac had done before her. She was carried over the bar at the mouth of the Alabama on "camels" during the night, but before the "camels" could be detached the tide fell, and she grounded.

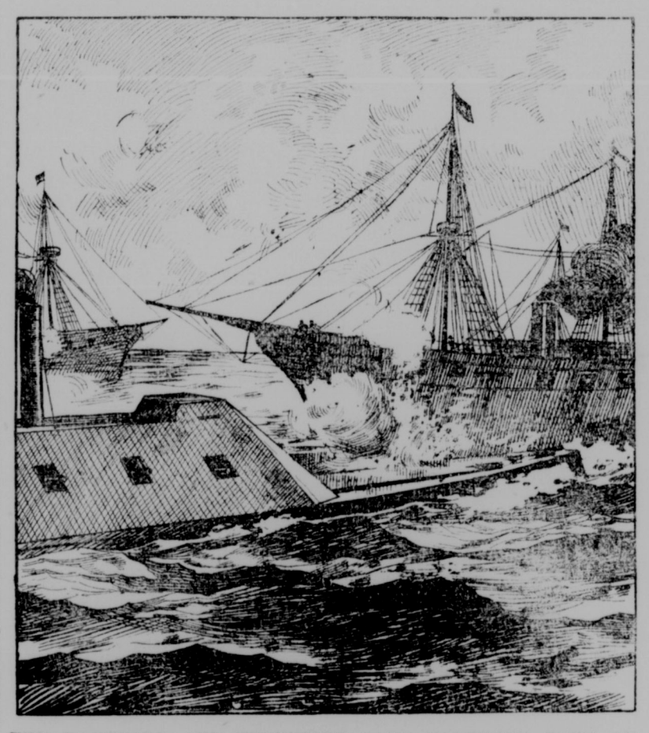
Daylight revealed her to the blockading fleet, and after that surprise was out of the question. She took her station in the bay for the protection of Mobile, and when Farragut sailed up on the 5th of August became the flagship of the defensive fleet. This fleet comprised, besides the ram, three side wheel wooden boats, and the whole armament numbered but twenty-two guns. Farragut commanded eighteen ships, including four monitors, mounting 190 cannon and howitzers.

However, something more than the pygmy fleet of Buchanan must be reckoned with before the great admiral could have full swing in Mobile bay. The entrance is a channel three miles wide, inclosed by sand bars. On the east side there stood at the time old Fort Morgan, a brick work, which the Confederates had strengthened by sand bags and an armament of three tiers of guns. Alongside, at the water's edge, they had planted a water battery of seven guns, and on the opposite side of the channel erected a new work, known as Fort Gaines. Three miles up the channel, on the west side, a third work, Fort Powell, commanded the inner bay.

The fleet, led by the monitors, steamed up opposite Fort Morgan, firing as it passed and receiving the full complement of Fort Morgan's guns in return. Suddenly the leading monitor, the Tecumseh, careened and sank and those following slowed up in anticipation of a similar fate. The bay was planted with torpedoes, and the Tecumseh, driven hastily, if not recklessly, by her commander when he saw a chance to close with the Tennessee, had chanced upon one. She carried down over 100 officers and men. The mishap to the Tecumseh brought the whole line of monitors and gunboats to a standstill directly in range of the guns of Fort Morgan and the enemy's vessels lying near just around the bend of the bar. The wooden ships suffered terribly under that fire, and their scuppers literally "ran blood."

In order to get above the smoke which hung around the decks of his flagship Farragut climbed into the rigging, where he was lashed to the ratlines by some of the men. Finding that the vessels in the lead were timid about going ahead, he ordered the flagship Hartford on at full speed, passing the other vessels, monitors and all, and when a voice cried to him from the decks of the halting ships to beware of torpedoes he roared out: "Damn the torpedoes! I will take the lead!"

After that the Hartford and several other vessels rode upon innumerable torpedoes, but owing to a defect in the fulminates not another exploded. Farragut's flagship literally flew up the bay, leaving the Tennessee and her consorts behind. The latter were quickly disposed of by the Federal vessels, and the entire fleet having passed beyond range of the forts the fight lay between the Tennessee and the remaining seventeen ships, which cast off their lashings and steamed after the ram. The Tennessee followed up the Hartford with the best speed possible. That was only six knots, for her engines were imperfect secondhand ones taken from a river steamer. The challenge of the plucky ram was accepted by the Federal vessels indiscriminately. The Monongahela, going at full speed, struck amidships without damaging the monster in the least, but losing her own iron prow and cutwater in the collision. The Lackawanna immediately closed in and struck with her wooden bow, simply causing the ram to lurch a trifle. The Tennessee poured two shots broadside into the Lackawanna and bore away after the Hartford.



THE HARTFORD AND TENNESSEE CAME TOGETHER BOWS ON.

It was then flagship against flagship, admiral against admiral. The vessels came together bows on, but the ram sheered and received only a glancing blow. The Hartford gave the Tennessee a solid broadside, but the shot rolled off from her plated shield, scarcely leaving a dent. At the same time the ram sent a ninety-five pound shot through the Hartford, killing and wounding thirteen men.

As the Tennessee sheered to avoid the Hartford she dropped into the midst of the fleet, a target for 100 guns, whose concentrated shots began to tell on her vulnerable parts. Her flagstaff disappeared and the smokestack also. Her heavy iron port shutters, the second weak point in her construction, became jammed by the heavy solid shots rained upon them and could not be opened to run out the guns for firing. Admiral Buchanan and the pilot had been wounded, and as a finishing disaster the rudder chains, which were exposed on the deck, were cut in two by an eleven inch shot from the monitor Chickasaw, which had hung close under the stern of the ram from the beginning of the fight.

The Tennessee soon drifted helplessly upon the strong tide. The Hartford, Lackawanna, Monongahela and Ossipee, each on different quarters, steamed at her full speed, while the monitor Chickasaw pounded away at her stern.

Suddenly the cannonading ceased, and its echoes died away amid the cheers of the sailors of the whole fleet. The Tennessee had struck her colors to the Ossipee.

Necessary to elect, 239.

New York, Nov. 9.—Theodore Roosevelt's plurality in this, his native state, is second only to McKinley's 268,000 in 1896. It exceeds McKinley's in 1900 by about 41,500. Returns show that there were cast for him in New York state about 185,000 votes more than for Parker. Not only was his vote heavy in the country districts where the Republican strongholds are, but in the Greater New York, traditionally Democratic, he ran much closer to Judge Parker than had been expected even by his own campaign managers.

It had been estimated that he would come down to the Bronx with better than 140,000 plurality, but the figures showed that this forecast will be exceeded by approximately 85,000. In the city Parker's supporters had expressed hopes that their candidate would have from 140,000 to 160,000 more than Roosevelt, but in this they were disappointed by more than 100,000 votes.

So overwhelming was the Republican vote that the result was known positively early in the evening. The earliest counties to report made it clear that the Parker vote everywhere fell below Bryan, especially in the up-state districts. In the Greater New York Parker's plurality was from 12,000 to 14,000 larger than Bryan's, but in the up-state, according to the late reports, his total vote fell 16,000 short of Bryan's.

The small plurality for Parker in New York city caused great astonishment, the lowest preliminary ante-election estimates having figured that he would go to the Bronx with 100,000 or more.

Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, said: "Of course I am very much surprised at the result. I do not attempt to account for it. Whatever may have been the cause, it will develop and the party can then deal with it.

"I sincerely regret the defeat of Judge Parker. He was in all respects a worthy candidate. As much can be said for Judge Herrick and his associates on the state ticket. They undoubtedly were the choice of the Democracy and their defeat is to be regretted more for the sake of the country and the party than for the candidates individually."

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Dispatches to the Associated Press up to 11:30 p. m. show that the Republicans have 169 congressmen and the Democrats 137. Of the other 80 districts 49 are now represented by Republicans and 31 by Democrats.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The Republicans have made an almost complete sweep in Pennsylvania, carrying the state for Roosevelt and Fairbanks by over 300,000 and electing 25 of the 26 state senators and 29 of the 32 congressmen. They have also elected about 175 of the 204 members of the house of representatives. This gives them control of both branches of the legislature by a large majority, insuring the election of Governor Pennypacker's appointee, Philander C. Knox, for United States senator to succeed the late M. S. Quay.

John P. Elkin, Republican, is elected state supreme court judge by a majority almost as great as that cast for the national Republican ticket. Republicans have also carried nearly all the judicial districts in which elections were held for common pleas judges and the five counties in which associate judges were chosen.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Without a precinct in the state counted enough has been learned to indicate that the Democratic ticket has made very heavy gains. One precinct in Parkersburg normally Democratic by 10 has 118 straight Democratic tickets, 81 straight Republican tickets and 146 scratched tickets, of which nearly all are Republican tickets with Democratic candidates voted for.

INDIANA.

Democratic National Chairman Taggart has conceded the election of Roosevelt and Fairbanks and has telegraphed his congratulations to Republican National Chairman Cortelyou.

Democratic State Chairman O'Brien concedes that the Republicans have carried the state by 30,000 or over. He concedes the legislature to the Republicans and this insures the election of two Republican senators to succeed Senators Fairbanks and Beveridge.

ILLINOIS.

The indications are that the Republican national ticket has carried Illinois by about 150,000. The chairman of the Republican state central committee asserted that Roosevelt would certainly have a plurality of 200,000. The Democrats declared that these figures were greatly exaggerated, but admitted that Roosevelt would have a plurality not far from 100,000. The returns on congressmen are slow, but it looks as if the Republicans have gained at least two in Chicago.

CONNECTICUT.

Returns from most of the 168 towns in the state indicate that President Roosevelt swept the state, his plurality being estimated at almost 25,000. The entire Republican state ticket was also elected.

VERMONT.

Roosevelt carried this state by about 31,000. Roosevelt ran ahead of McKinley's vote in 1900, while Parker ran behind that of Bryan.

WISCONSIN.

Sixty precincts in Wisconsin, including 30 in Milwaukee, give Parker 5,687; Roosevelt, 11,761; Peck, 8,582; La Follette, 9,321. It is estimated Roosevelt will have a plurality of 50,000 in the state and La Follette, Rep., a safe plurality for governor.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Douglas (Dem.) is elected governor by a plurality of 25,000 and Roosevelt has carried Massachusetts by 80,000.

MARYLAND.

Though the returns from the counties of Maryland are not complete and those from four precincts in Baltimore are missing, the returns that have been received indicate that Maryland has gone for Roosevelt by a small majority, probably a few hundred votes, this estimate being based upon the returns received and the voting records in those districts not heard from.

In the six congressional districts of the state three Republicans and two Democrats have been elected, with the remaining district in doubt.

The chairman of the Republican state committee claims that the final returns will show a Republican majority of over 1,000 in the state.

TENNESSEE.

The vote in Tennesse has been light. Early returns indicate an estimated Democratic plurality of 25,000.

CHARLES WARREN FAIRBANKS.

UTAH.

The heaviest vote ever polled is reported with much scratching. At the Democratic state headquarters it is conceded Roosevelt has carried the state by 8,000 plurality.

MINNESOTA.

It is apparent that Roosevelt's plurality will be over 100,000. Johnson, Dem., for governor, is leading Dunn, Rep., by a substantial plurality and seems likely to be elected.

MISSOURI.

The Democratic state committee claims state and national tickets by 35,000 and St. Louis by 10,000. Fifty-two of 405 precincts in St. Louis give Parker 7,319; Roosevelt, 5,377; Folk, Dem., for governor, 7,560; Walbridge, Rep., 7,051.

NEW JERSEY.

Early returns indicate that President Roosevelt has carried the state by a much larger majority than that of McKinley in 1900, which was 56,899 over Bryan. Eight Republican congressmen appear to be elected. The Democrats carry two congressional districts.

The legislature remains Republican.

GEORGIA.

The total vote in Georgia will count up a little more than 40,000, which is very light. It is conceded that all the Democratic congressmen are elected. Democrats carried everything.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Parker carried South Carolina by 40,000 plurality. The Democratic state ticket has been elected. The legislature is unanimously Democratic. Seven Democratic congressmen have been elected.

IOWA.

Five scattering precincts in Iowa indicate Roosevelt will carry the state by 125,000.

ALABAMA.

All Democratic congressional candidates are elected.

LOUISIANA.

The Democrats have carried Louisiana by a majority of probably 35,000. Seven Democratic congressmen have been elected.

NORTH CAROLINA.

There is hardly any doubt but that all 10 Democratic congressmen have been elected. Only the two mountain districts are in doubt, the eighth and tenth. These the Republicans do not concede. The Democratic majority in the state appears to be about 50,000.

FLORIDA.

The few scattered returns so far received indicate the usual Democratic majorities in Florida. The Democratic candidates for congress are elected.

MICHIGAN.

The Republican state central committee announced that the returns from the state indicate that Roosevelt will have a plurality of 125,000 to 135,000. For congress, Wiliam Alden Smith, Republican, was re-elected.

NEBRASKA.

A few precinct returns from the first congressional district show that Roosevelt is running ahead of the McKinley vote and Parker far behind Bryan.

COLORADO.

Milton Smith, chairman of the Democratic state committee, says Adams, Democrat, for governor, will have 8,000 majority over Peabody, Republican, outside Denver; that this will be doubled by the vote of this city.

D. B. Farley, Republican chairman, says Roosevelt has certainly carried the state and that Governor Peabody is safe, though his vote will fall short of Roosevelt's.

MISSISSIPPI.

Between 60,000 and 75,000 votes were cast. The Democratic majority for Parker will be in the neighborhood of 50,000. Mississippi returns all the eight Democratic congressmen.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Senator Kittridge claims that Roosevelt has carried South Dakota by 40,000, and Chairman Crane of the Republican state central committee puts the figures at 50,000.

NEW YORK.

Returns from Ulster county, Esopus township, the third district, Parker's home district, show that Roosevelt polled 173 votes against 159 for Parker.

IDAHO.

Six precincts out of 16 in Boise give Roosevelt 929; Parker, 343. Gooding, Rep., for governor, 845; Heitfeld, 457. Roosevelt is conceded to have carried the state by a heavy majority. Gooding runs slightly behind Roosevelt.

KENTUCKY.

Six hundred and seventy-two precincts out of a total of 1,896 in the state give Parker a plurality of 16,480. As the eleventh district, a Republican stronghold, is yet to be heard from, Parker's probable plurality is placed by those at both Democratic and Republican headquarters at between 12,000 and 14,000. Bryan's plurality in 1900 was 8,940.

VIRGINIA.

Virginia elects nine Democratic members of congress out of a total of 10 districts. The result in the ninth district is in doubt, with the chances in favor of Campbell Slemp, the Republican incumbent.

CALIFORNIA.

Reports from the various counties indicate that Roosevelt's majority will reach 30,000 at least.

WYOMING.

Partial returns indicate that Roosevelt has carried Wyoming by [illegible] majority and the election of Mondell, Rep., to congress, and Brooks, Rep., for governor, and the remainder of the state ticket is certain.

KANSAS.

The indications are that Roosevelt will carry the state by 30,000 plurality. All the Republican congressmen are elected.

NEVADA.

The Republican state ticket is in the lead, and Yerington, Rep., for congress, is probably elected over Van Duser, Dem. The state is conceded to Roosevelt.

DELAWARE.

Roosevelt has carried Delaware by about 5,000 and the Republicans elect the governor and congressman. The legislature will be overwhelmingly Republican.

WASHINGTON.

Democrats concede Washington to Roosevelt by 20,000.

OREGON.

Returns from 12 precincts in Multnomah county out of a total of 83 precincts give Roosevelt 1,138; Parker, 202; scattering, 147.

NOGI OFFERS TERMS

Communicates Privately With Russian Garrison at Port Arthur.

PROMISES HUMANE TREATMENT

Soldier from Fortress Informs Japanese Commander That His Comrades Are Dispirited and Would Like to Surrender—Resistance Useless.

Chefoo, Nov. 9.—The Japanese besieging Port Arthur, ignoring General Stoessel, the commander of the Russian forces, have offered terms of surrender to the Russian soldiers. A Russian prisoner said the garrison was in want and dispirited. They saw the fruitlessness of the struggle. They see no reason to prolong resistance which brings glory to their officers, but chiefly hardship and death to them.

Upon hearing the prisoner's story General Nogi drafted a letter to be circulated among the soldiers themselves, the prisoner having promised to deliver it. The letter related Kuropatkin's retreats and his inability to make an impression to the army of Field Marshal Oyama, to say nothing of breaking through his forces and relieving Port Arthur, and that the second Russian Pacific squadron has just started on its slow voyage. It called attention to the advance of the Japanese trenches, making it a matter of weeks when the Japanese would walk into the main Russian strongholds. The letter offered humane treatment to all who surrender.

Several copies of the letter, written in Russian, were given to the prisoner, who regained the Russian lines unobserved. That night the Russian returned, saying his comrades would answer within a few days. He said the temper of the men seemed to show that while they were mutinous towards fate they also did not like the idea of an unofficial surrender. The letter did much, however, to dispel among the Russian troops the impression fostered by their officers, that a massacre would follow a Japanese victory. The company to which the prisoner belonged originally numbered 800 and now totals 30 men.

As the Japanese are sufficiently near the summits of the hills to render tunneling highly practicable, much of this work is now being done. The Russians are building counter tunnels. Whichever side finds its tunnel under the enemy's blows up the latter's tunnel. To prevent explosives being rolled down into their trenches, the Japanese have made ranges or hillocks of earth above the trenches.

Five Russian mine sweeping steamers have been sunk by Japanese s[illegible].

Nov. 9.—News from Port Arthur indicates that the Japanese operations are proceeding satisfactorily though slowly. Rocky ground interferes with the sapping. It is considered that the capture of Rihlung mountain and East Keekwan mountain without Antse and Etse mountains is not sufficient to force the Russians to abandon the city proper.

Reports from the Shakhe river state that both armies are still strengthening their positions along the river and are otherwise busy preparing for another great battle.

Reinforcements of Russian troops, guns and supplies are constantly arriving, filling the gaps caused by the crushing losses at the battle of Shakhe river.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 28. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1904. NUMBER 38

SENATOR M'COMAS' TALK OF RESULT

Most Remarkable Landslide That Ever Happened.

THE TRIUMPH OF THE PEOPLE.

"Democratic Party, the Party of Bryan, Watson and Hearst, With a Creed to Attract the Followers of Debs" Climax Noblest of All.

Senator McComas said:

"It was a landslide, and the like has never before happened. The people did it. That is what a landslide means. They appreciated prosperity and voted against a change. Their leader proved to be the most popular American who ever ran for the Presidency, and this swelled the huge total.

"The effort to make the Democratic party safe and sane was a vain effort of the Eastern conservatives, as shown by the crushing majorties and the huge totals in the Eastern States. If there is to be a Democratic party, it is to be the party of Bryan, Watson and Hearst, with a creed to attract the followers of Debs. The conservative Democrats must consider whether that aggregation will not drive them into the Republican party. Power and responsibility make a party conservative and the Republicans are now conservative. As Roosevelt's majorities have broken all precedents, and he is the first Vice-President, who after exercising the office of President, his Administration has been approved as the people never before approved any Administration.

"Legislative action has also been approved, for the Republican House has the largest Republican majority in 30 years. The Philippines policy, the Panama canal, both treaty and the incidents, have been endorsed by the people. They trust the Republicans to the defenders of public credit, the guardians of prosperity. Whatever wise tariff changes are needed can now be made with a minimum of disturbance to capital, labor and trade.

"In Maryland the people did it. The other party had money. The sound money Democrats mostly went back to Parker. I suspect many of them wanted to vote for a Democrat, but wanted Roosevelt to win. The South alone stands by Parker. West Virginia and Maryland, guarding their industries, broke away from the solid South. The States which cast their votes for Parker have no political creed except race prejudice. The marvelous Southern growth in manufactures has shaken their old belief in free trade. They are either sympathetic with the course of Taft and Wright and the Philippines or indifferent. On Panama they stand with the President, and on the gold standard they did not differ from the President. They nursed only the negro bogie. It is a pity that political opinions are shriveled in the growing South, but the cotton belt has a black problem. Its worst outgrowth is an indifference to the suffrage and the sanctity of the ballot.

"The Parker and Davis Constitution Club has retired from business, and the Constitution under Roosevelt and the Supreme Court is safe. The only danger to it is in its partial nullification in respect to the classes of citizens in a half dozen States.

"Maryland gave Roosevelt a couple of thousand majority, and re-elects four Republican Congressmen: that was a great triumph of the people. The men who are scheming in our white State to chain our white population to the negro bogie would thereby deaden respect for honest elections and lower our State. Every old slave State is a Southern State, and the healthiest response to the appeal to race prejudice is that Maryland and West Virginia stands fast for Roosevelt, and industrial Missouri, with 20,000 majority, has broken away also. All three States are great industrial and commercial communities, and will not sacrifice their growing futures to such a prejudice.

"The climax is the noblest of all. It is a hour of stupendous triumph for President Roosevelt, faithful not only to the Constitution, but to its spirit, has made the noble declaration that he would not accept another term in the Presidency. He follows the spirit of Washington's warning, and inspires the people with renewed faith in their President. He is a great man and deserves this emphatic approval. He is absolutely trusted for four years more by the American people."

DEATHBLOWTODEMOCRATIC PLANS

Distranchisement and Party Trick Ballot Consigned to the Waste Heap.

Here are some of the results of the election in Maryland on Tuesday:

The distranchisement amendment of the Democrats to the Constitution to be voted upon at the general election next year, has received such a stunning blow that it is doubtful if it will ever receive consideration.

The trick ballots patented by Democrats for use in counties where there is supposed to be a large Republican illiterate vote has proved to be a boomerang, and if the Democrats are at all sensible of the public opinion in this state they will consign the trick and puzzling ballot to the waste heap.

Protection has been proved again to be a popular issue in Maryland.

The fact has been demonstrated, as was claimed in advance of the election, that there are in this state thousands of voters who cast their lot with the Democrats at State elections, but who are Republicans when national issues are at stake.

The negro "bugaboo" was played up by the Democrats for all it was worth during their campaign. It was, in fact, their "paramount issue." If the Democrats are wise in the future they will also send this issue to the waste heap, along with their trick ballots.

The fact has become plain that Maryland's tendency is to be a Northern rather than a Southern state.

Senator Gorman's prestige has been damaged not only throughout the country, but all over Maryland, and especially in the Fifth congressional district, where he was not only instrumental in bringing about the nomination of Dr. Richard S. Hill, but where he was also active in promoting his candidacy. He took the stump for him and otherwise exerted himself to secure Democratic success.

By the increased majorities for Mr. Wachter in the Third district, and for Mr. Mudd in the Fifth district, the fact is demonstrated that the people of those districts appreciate the efforts of their congressmen in their behalf, and are willing to give honor to whom it is due.

Justice Wm. J. Garland was at the Democratic headquarters with Chairman Vandiver, and when asked why his ward went for Wachter, "King Bill" said: "The Republicans had too much money for us. We had the votes until the money showed up, and then the votes disappeared. We were well organized in my ward, and in fact in every ward in the city, but we lost—that is all there is to it."

Hon. John P. Poe said: Villification and trick ballots are boomerangs, and don't pay."

Judge Myer Block indulged in the following comment: "The Jews and Gentiles all voted for Roosevelt, and there weren't any votes left for the other fellow."

Congressman Jackson, of the First district, says that the district has probably gone against him by 250 to 300 majority. He estimates, however, that fully 1,200 ballots were thrown out in the district because a large part of them were not folded properly or on account of some other similar defect. Upon the repeated advice of his friends from all parts of the district the Congressman has finally decided to contest the seating of Smith in the House of Representatives.

"I don't intend to be counted out," said he, "after it has been proven that I received the majority of votes. This is pure robbery and but an evidence of Democratic ballot trickery. I have seen worse cases than this brought up in Congress, and I don't intend to be beaten after I received the people's vote."

Mr. Jackson has already instructed his friends in each county to collect all the evidence in the matter, and the case will be prosecuted with the utmost vigor. It is not likely that the case will be tried before the court but before the special committee of the House of Representatives.

Hundreds of votes were thrown out by the election officials in Washington county. In Hagerstown District No. 21 the judges threw out 60 votes because crossmarks had been placed opposite the names of the candidates for President and Vice-President and also opposite the names of the eight electors. Over two-thirds of these were Republican tickets, and the court may be petitioned to order a recount.

The local wide tire question in Caroline county was overwhelmingly defeated.

REV. J. B. SHOUP'S JOURNEY.

He Recounts His Experiences Along The Way to the Miami River.

BITTINGER, MD., Nov. 14 1904.

To the Editor of The Republican—

DEAR SIR:—Since my return to old-time scenes and associations in Garrett county, I have been many times requested to give a short recital of my experience connected with the pedestrian journey to St. Louis undertaken last June.

This request I have complied with in many instances, and between my narrative and the brief account contained in your columns a month or more back, there is such descrepancy as to make one or the other seem untrue.

This lack of agreement has come, not from sinister motive on the part of any one, but from lack of definite information.

Will you now kindly allow me brief space to tell my little story as I saw it, made it, lived it, walked it.

The start was made at Cumberland, at day dawn, June 11, alone, and in light marching order. Had a cane and wallet slung over shoulder, less than two pounds in weight. Reached Grantsville an hour by sun that day. Talked a little to old friends in the Lutheran church that night, and "slept the sleep of the weary" at the home of my beloved friend, Chas. Bill. The following Sunday I met many dear friends at Cove and Accident churches. Resuming the tramp on Monday morning, 13th, I counted every mile-stone (visible) thence to Phoneton, O., one mile from the Miami river, nine miles north of Dayton, where I arrived on evening of June 30, having made 325 miles in scant 13 days' walk. Spent several days at Wheeling, W. Va., and Bacyrus, O.

GARRETT COUNTY COURT HOUSE.

I can truthfully say that after a couple days walk I experienced no fatigue to speak of and, but for a sudden attack of sciatic rheumatism, I should certainly have finished the journey at St. Louis—over 800 miles—inside of 35 days. I shall always be sorry that I failed to finish the walk; but three doctors ordered me off, and three against one is a decided majority, and so I yielded, and quit.

I am glad to add that all along the way I met much kindness and no discourtesy, no ridicule, fell in with many old acquaintances—many of them comrades, some of my own regiment. I saw many interesting towns and cities and passed through in the main, a delightful stretch of country.

After spending six weeks among childhood scenes and companionships about beautiful Dayton, I joined an excursion by way of Detroit, Niagara, Buffalo, Rochester, Albany and Concord to Boston, where I participated in our annual G. A. R. lovefeast on Aug. 15th. I climbed Bunker Hill monument, slept in Charlestown, saw the "Hub" and came away.

MALLET ENGINE COMING EAST

But Christ. Smith, of "Grasshopper" Days, Won't Pull Throttle.

Arrangements to have the same engineer who ran the first steam engine over the Baltimore and Ohio railroad pull open the throttle that will start the only Mallet type locomotive in the country, and by far the largest in the world, on its first trip over the same road after the close of the St. Louis Exposition have been canceled by the death of the engineer, Mr. Christian Smith. As reported in The Daily News, Mr. Smith died at his home near Sandy Hook, last Saturday night, after having lived to be 93 years old.

The powerful articulated compound freight locomotive built for the Baltimore and Ohio railroad was completed about June 1 last at once sent to St. Louis, where it has since been with the company's exhibit. It was originally the intention to test the engine first on the heavy grades of the road, but the time for entering exhibits was too near a close to admit of delay.

When the Fair ends this locomotive will be placed in "pusher service," to help freight trains over Altamont hill, across the Alleghany Mountains. Some time ago Mr. Smith was invited by officials of the road to run the engine east over Sand Patch hill from St. Louis when it is taken from the Exposition grounds next month, and he had accepted. Then he was still enjoying good health and was remarkably strong and vigorous for a man of his age. The intention was to make the run an event of historic interest by linking together the first engine used, the Andrew Jackson, one of the old "grasshopper" type, with the latest and most powerful machine. Mr. Smith was proud of his record, and it is said that he was looking forward to the occasion with much pleasure.

The "grasshopper" engine Mr. Smith ran weighed less than 250,000 pounds. The new Mallet type locomotive of the Baltimore and Ohio weighs in working order 334,500 pounds, and the weight of the tender, filled with 7,000 gallons of water and 13 tons of coal is 143,000 pounds. This engine will be put in commission on the 17-mile grade from Piedmont to Altamont.

May Delay the Time Card.

It is the belief of many of the railroad officials of the Baltimore & Ohio that the new time card on the road, which was expected to become effective on the 13th inst., will be postponed until late in December. This will be the latest that the time change has taken place in many years, but it will be on account of the fact that the travel to the World's Fair will not be over until that time. As was stated in this column Wednesday, it is possible that the B. & O. will allow the two through trains to St. Louis to remain on. It is believed that the delay in changing the schedule will give the officials an opportunity to see how the patronage will be and whether or not it will be worth their while to keep it on the road.—Wheeling News.

THE APPEAL OF CHAIRMAN HANNA

To Western Maryland Received An Enthusiastic Response.

MR. DAYTON'S VICTORY POPULAR

In this Vicinity, Because of Proximity of His District. Mr. Dawson's Victory Over Cornwell Satisfactory.

Lincoln's call for volunteers was no more unanimously responded to than the appeal of Chairman Hanna of the Maryland state central committee to Western Maryland for a Republican majority and thus save the State from the clutches of Democracy. In counties of the Mountains and from sturdy voters of the hills, the response was overwhelming and has once again placed the state in the Republican columns. Allegany, leading all the counties in Republican majorties, with Garrett a close second, came to the rescue and the result was the overthrow of Democracy in Maryland. It was the enlistment of a thoughful public-spirited people, who disregarded party affiliations and cast its vote for the party on whose principles the nation will prosper and thrive. It was the result of hard labor on the part of those in charge of the campaign, whose never-ceasing efforts, unaided by campaign funds, produced a remarkable Republican majority, counteracting the Democratic vote in the Democratic towns and cities. The appeal of Chairman Hanna was responded to in tones prefectly audible.

The victory of Hon. A. G. Dayton over Stuart W. Walker in the Second West Virginia district, which borders on the banks of the Potomac, was hardly more acceptable in West Virginia than it was in Cumberland. Mr. Dayton has many friends in this city and to them the defeat of Walker was a source of gratification. Hon. N. G. Kein, of Elkins, chairman of the committee in charge of Mr. Dayton's candidacy, also is well known in Cumberland and to his friends in this city the fact that he was largely instrumental in securing the election of Mr. Dayton is, indeed, pleasing.

The election of William O. Dawson, as governor of West Virginia, and the assurance that the West Virginia legislature will continue in the Republican column, means a continuance of the efforts toward tax reform in the Panhandle State, a fact very unwelcome to several business men of this city. The tax reform laws, recently enacted in West Virginia, places a large tariff on foreign producers who do business in the state.—Cumberland News.

CURE FOR LIQUOR HABIT.

One Man Reads Dime Novels Which Have Same Effect as Liquor.

"Talking about not having anything to take the place of whisky when one wants to quit for a while," said a thoughtful man, "reminds me of the interesting plan of a friend of mine, and one, by the way, who had an original method of doing almost everything he undertook to do. He was in the habit of getting on sprees, and they were lively events, I can assure you. But when he quit he quit in dead earnest. There was no middle ground in his case. He did not drink to get drunk. He drank for the fun there was in it, and he could get more fun out of the game than any other man I have ever known. But these sprees did not come often enough to interfere with his business plans. However, I started out to tell you about his sober life, and not about the drinking part of his career, except as an incident to the story. Drinking is exciting. It is a most difficult matter, as a rule, for a man who drinks to find anything that will take the place of drinking because of the excitement of the habit. If this were an easy task I am sure there would be less drinking in the world because it would be easier for men to control the passion for strong drink, once the passion finds lodgment in the system. My friend had solved this problem, and he solved it in an original way. He would take to dime novels. He would buy a carload of the most exciting stories he could find, the very yellowest of the yellow, and whenever you found him with a lot of these books you could bet he was in for a long sober spell. He would carry one in his pocket all the time, and whenever the hours began to drag and the day get dull, you would find him poring over the book. 'It's just as exciting,' he would say, and a whole lot cheaper than drinking.' And so it was. But he was the only man I ever knew who hit upon a really successful plan of finding something that would supply the excitement needed to overcome the longing for drink in the case of the man who once becomes used to that sort of thing."

What Rascom Wanted

By JAMES H. WOODFORD

Copyright, 1904, by M. Wood

"Lord love you, mother," said Hiram Peters, "that chap's all right, even if his clothes are dirty. You kin see he ain't a tramp."

"That's all right, Hi," retorted his better half, "but I don't like the looks of him. He wouldn't eat a decent, warm meal, but insisted on sitting on the steps and eating bread and milk. That blue bowl he's got belonged to Gran'ma Bassett's father."

"Pshaw!" declared Peters. "He don't want your bowl, and I don't blame him fer wantin' to stay outside a nice day like this. I'll bet he's got money and is jest trampin' fer fun."

Meanwhile the unconscious subject of her suspicions was placidly sitting on the back porch, a pitcher of milk at one hand and a loaf of bread on the other, while in his lap reposed the famous blue bowl, which was being rapidly depleted of its contents. Could he have heard Mrs. Peters he might have reassured her, but his thoughts were not of those within the house, but of the glorious scene without.

"IT IS VERY GOOD TO SEE YOU," SHE SAID.

Across a short level space the ground fell rapidly away to the shores of Lake Oswammie, while on the farther side were the falls of the Oswammie river, a sheer drop of sixty feet into the lake.

It had been his first real day in the country since he had left home fifteen years before, at the death of his parents, to seek fortune in the great city. He was a millionaire now, but his money had been gained at the expense of pleasure. He began to realize all that he had lost.

He felt as though time had gone back for a space and he was sitting on the porch of his old home waiting for Ruth Nesbitt to pass on her way to the meadows, where the Nesbitt and Rascom cows enjoyed common pasturage.

He wondered where Ruth was now. There had been a tearful farewell the night before he had left home, and he had promised to return soon and marry her. He had written regularly at first, but there had been no response, and he had stopped. Other and more important matters, as he thought, absorbed him. When he had had time to write friends and make inquiries he had been told that Ruth had gone away. Jacob Springer, the postmaster, had been sent to prison for stealing stamps, registered letters, etc. Springer had always been Rascom's rival even of the school days. Doubtless he had intercepted the lovers' correspondence, and now Rascom bitterly regretted that he had become so absorbed in speculation that he had not thought of going back to make a personal investigation.

Then a strange thing happened. Over the brow of the hill came Ruth Nesbitt. She was older and more mature, but even before he could distinguish her features he knew that it was Ruth. He rubbed his eyes, thinking that the dreams of other days might have evolved this ideal of the past. But on she came, advancing slowly. He rose and went to meet her. There was a low fence at the foot of the homely garden, and there she paused as he came up.

"It is very good to see you," she said simply as he came up. "How did you ever happen to come?"

"I was walking," he said vaguely, "and the people inside gave me some bread and milk." He was conscious of a sense of disappointment. The greeting was so commonplace.

Her glance fell upon his soiled clothes. The roads had been muddy, and several passing wagons had splashed him until he was stained from head to foot, and his cravat was white with dust. He did not realize what a change the tramping had made in his appearance.

"How did you find that I was living here?" she asked, with a curious softness in her voice.

"I didn't know," he confessed frankly. "I tried long ago to find you again after I had learned about Springer"—

"What about Springer?" she asked.

"Didn't you hear?" he demanded. "Didn't you know that he probably intercepted your letters? He is in the penitentiary now."

"Then you did write? I am glad of that," she said slowly. "I thought that when you got to the city that you had forgotten your country friends."

"Forgotten!" he shouted. "There has not been a day in the past ten years that I haven't regretted that I accepted so calmly what I thought at first was my rejection."

"Then you, too, lacked faith?" she suggested.

"I, too," he agreed, "for a little while. But I have always loved you. I have never married."

"Neither have I," she said softly, while a flush crept slowly over her cheek.

"But you will?" he demanded eagerly, "right now."

"This very moment?" she asked, half playfully, half pathetically.

"As soon as we can find a minister," he declared masterfully. "Is there one near here?"

"There is one right down the road," she answered, with a slight hesitation in her tone, but happiness in her eyes.

Rascom vaulted the garden fence, and hand in hand they went down the road. Thirty minutes later the words had been spoken which made them one at last. It had all come about so suddenly that neither seemed to realize that they were doing anything out of the ordinary.

Rascom kissed the bride and thrust a bill into the hands of the white haired old minister, who stared at the three figures in silent amazement. Ruth gasped as her gaze followed that of the minister.

"Oh, John! I ain't dream"—

For the first time Rascom realized how deceptive his appearance was, and he stopped her with a kiss.

"My dear," he asked, "did you think I was a tramp?"

"Well, you didn't look very prosperous," she reminded him, "but you were John to me, and I'd have married you had you been a beggar. I have made a little money teaching, and I knew that I had enough for two."

"I think," he laughed, as he shook the hand of the still astonished minister, "that I have more than enough for two."

Then they went back to the Peters farm.

"I hope," said Mrs. Peters tartly, from the doorway, "that you have my blue bowl. It belonged to Gran'ma Bassett's father. I told pa you was goin' to carry it off."

"The bowl must be down by the garden gate," smiled Rascom, "what I want to carry away is Ruth."

New Use For It.

The regular meeting of the village debating society was in full blast, and the question for discussion was, "Resolved that a monarchy is a stronger form of government than a republic." One of the speakers on the affirmative side, after an eloquent exordium, proceeded to say:

"Now, Mr. President, the gentleman who preceded me has undertaken to show by an appeal to history that monarchies are short lived. He has endeavored to bolster up his side of the argument by giving a list of kingdoms and empires that have risen, flourished a short time and fallen. He fails to mention the fact that most of the strong governments in all ages of the world have been monarchies. He does not give you a list of the republics that have strutted their brief hour upon the stage and disappeared. He contents himself, Mr. President, with generalities. Let us examine both sides of this question and see how easy it is, with the sword of truth, to simply clash that argument into ribbons."

Here he was interrupted by one of the speakers on the negative side of the question:

"If the gentleman will pardon me a moment, Mr. President, this is the first time I ever saw the sword of truth used for the purpose of splitting an infinitive."

The general laugh that followed confused the speaker, and the judges finally decided that the weight of argument was with the negative.

To Consider Himself Dead.

Mr. L., a good natured German, was the proprietor of a clothing business in a country town. He had in his employ one John S., whom he had advanced from cash boy to head clerk. Since his promotion John had several times asked for an increase of salary, and each time his request had been granted. One morning he again appeared at the old merchant's desk with another request for an increase of $10 a month.

"Vy, Shon," said Mr. L., "I dink I bays you pooty vell alretty; vat for I bays you any more?"

"Well," replied John confidently, "I am your principal help here. I know every detail of the business, and, indeed, I think that you could not get along without me."

"Is dot so? Vy, Shon, vot would I do suppose you vas to die?"

"Well, I suppose that you would have to get along without me then."

The old Teuton took several whiffs from his big pipe and finally said:

"Vell, Shon, I guess you petter consider yourself dead."

There Is a Difference.

"Yes, that is where he made a mistake," said McLean, referring to the latest act of stupidity on the part of McFarlane.

"I don't call such an action as that a mistake," replied old Cormack dictatorially; "I call it a blunder."

"Well, it's all the same thing," returned McLean.

"No, you are wrong there," was Cormack's reply. "There's a good deal of difference between a blunder and a mistake."

"I should like to know what it is," answered McLean skeptically.

"Well, suppose you went to call on some friend, put an old umbrella into the stand and took away a new one when you left, that would be a mistake; but suppose you put down a new one and brought away an old one, that would be a blunder. D'ye see?"

McLean admitted that there was a difference after all.

CONSTIPATION

RULING PASSIONS

By Edwin J. Webster

Copyright, 1904, by Edwin J. Webster

Chita, the big black panther, was growling sullenly, his growl occasionally rising to a snarl of exasperated, jealous rage. His mistress, Carmen, dainty, pretty, from appearances very far from being a person capable of taming and restraining the big, fierce cat animals of the circus, was standing in front of his cage.

Ordinarily the sight of Carmen caused the big panther to set up an affectionate purring. But on the present occasion Tom Howard, the best athlete in the great circus, was talking to the pretty Carmen. It was plain even to a black panther that the interest Howard took in Carmen was more than friendly. It was also plain that Carmen was far from displeased at this interest. And that was the reason the big panther was growling, for a deep and consuming jealousy of stalwart Tom Howard filled Chita's heart.

Just then a warning bell rang. This was the signal for Carmen to get ready for her great "animal school act." Her scholars were not rosy cheeked boys and girls, but a very grim looking set of pupils, consisting of Chita, the big Bengal tiger and Diogenes, the sleepy but big maned, strong jawed Numidian lion.

In this act each of the great felines left his own cage and entered a larger one in which Carmen was seated on a low chair, a small rod, the symbol of her authority, in her hand. Chita trotted willingly into this cage. He was devoted to Carmen, and now that Tom Howard was out of sight there was nothing to disturb his good nature.

The Numidian lion walked into the cage in a lazy, nonchalant manner. He evidently looked on the whole thing as a bore. But he had eaten a good dinner, felt at peace with the world, and, anyhow, it would soon be over. As he took his place he looked at the crowd with languid curiosity, yawned and acted like a lion who considered a school for a lion of his years as a nuisance, but not enough of a one to make a fuss over.

But the big Bengal tiger evidently was in an ugly frame of mind. At first he refused to enter the cage. Carmen struck him lightly with her whip. Like a flash the big lips curled up, showing the long, sharp tiger fangs, and at the same time he gave a snarl of rage, low and rumbling at first, but rising until it re-echoed from every part of the circus tent. But Carmen looked him steadily in the eye, and after a moment's hesitation the great striped beast slunk to his place. It was plain that he was in a dangerous mood.

Despite the tiger's bad temper the lesson would probably have gone on as usual had not Tom Howard happened to step beyond the entrance of the covered way leading to the quarters of the circus people when they are not in the rings. Tom was always intensely worried when Carmen was giving her animal school act. It was this anxiety which led him to leave the circus quarters. But his well meant consideration proved costly.

As Tom stepped from the canvas covered passageway Chita saw him. The sight stirred the black panther's smoldering jealousy. He stooped abruptly in his role as Carmen's pupil, jumped off the pedestal on which he had been sitting at "attention" and sent forth a fierce, snarling growl in which he expressed his hatred of the man whom he felt had usurped first place in his mistress' heart.

At the first notes of the angry snarl Carmen turned reprovingly to the black panther. She knew there was not the least danger of her pet attacking her, but he must go on with his performance or the act would be a failure.

"Chita," she said in reproachful tones, looking straight into the angry panther's eyes, and as she did this she turned her back on the still sullen Bengal tiger.

The big tiger had been growing more and more sulky as the act proceeded. His nerves were in a bad state, and the angry snarl of the panther had been the finishing touch. Now Carmen had taken her eyes off him. That settled it. He dropped from his pedestal to the floor of the cage, gathered himself for the spring and the next instant was shooting through the air, a black and yellow bar of deadly energy.

The impact of the shock threw Carmen to the floor; but, quick as the Bengal tiger had been, the panther was quicker. All thought of jealousy vanished at sight of the attack on his mistress. Before the tiger could use tooth or claw the lithe, strong limbed panther had launched himself right at the tiger's throat.

Over and over on the floor of the cage the two great cats rolled. Ordinarily the panther would have been no match for the far larger tiger, but the panther had caught his grip first, settling his sharp, deep biting teeth in the tiger's throat. This prevented the tiger using his teeth effectually, but his claws, especially those on his strong hind legs, could be used. Again and again he struck out with them, ripping through the panther's skin like a soft glove. But he could not shake the deadly grip Chita had on his throat.

Although he might be torn to pieces by the great claws, Chita meant to hold on until he felt his teeth meet in his opponent's windpipe. And through all the terrible struggle Diogenes, the Numidian lion, sat on his pedestal, lazy, good natured, only calmly interested in the life and death fight of his fierce fellow pupils.

When the circus men separated the two big cats the Bengal tiger was dead, and the black panther, torn in twenty places, was dying. Carmen was unhurt, except for a few slight bruises caused by her fall on the floor of the cage. Tom Howard was foremost among the crowd which had rushed to the cage. As Carmen placed her hand on the head of the big panther who had died to save her Chita opened his great yellow eyes, now fast dimming in death. But even in death the ruling passions of his fierce wild animal nature held strong. His eyes brightened with affection at the sight of Carmen. Then his glance fell on Tom Howard. The jealous snarl started from deep down in his throat. He half raised his head; then it sank down, and the black panther's eyes closed forever.

And Diogenes, the big maned lion, sat on his pedestal, calm, nonchalant, disinterested, aloof. He was waiting for the signal "School is over." It did not come. Diogenes waited a little longer. Then he opened his great jaws in a half suppressed yawn, dropped to the floor of the exhibition cage and trotted lazily off to the most comfortable corner of his own cage.

An Arabian Horse Story.

A pretty Arabian story is told to this effect: A man was riding upon a horse of pure blood when he was met by his enemy, who was also splendidly mounted. One pursued the other, and he who gave chase was distanced by the one who fled. Despairing of reaching him, the pursuer in anger shouted out:

"I ask, in the name of God, has your horse ever worked on land?"

"He has worked on the land for four days."

"Very well; mine never has, and, by the beard of the prophet, I am sure to catch you."

Toward the close of the day the horse that never labored was the victor, and as the rider of the degraded horse sank under the blows of his enemy he said:

"There has been no blessing upon our country since we have changed our coursers into beasts of burden and of tillage. Has not God made the ox for the plow, the camel to transport merchandise and the horse alone for the race? There is nothing gained by changing the ways of God."

Change Wrought by New Woman.

"Yes, indeed," said the old man thoughtfully after his wife had delivered a dissertation upon the progress of the sex, "the new woman is vastly different from the old."

"I thought you would realize that in time," she returned rather sharply.

"I have just been reading," he went on, "how girls used to be sold by their parents, and some of them brought fancy prices."

"But there's none of that now, thank heaven!" exclaimed the new woman proudly. "Woman has asserted herself, and"—

"No, there's none of that now," interrupted the old man. "That's all past. A man does not buy a wife in these days."

"I should think not!"

"Certainly not. It's all changed, all changed. Now he has to be paid to take her, and her poor old father has to wreck his bank account to provide the dowry. Yes, I admit that the new woman, Susan"—

Then the door was slammed as she indignantly left the room.—New York Press.

Little Girls' Hard Lot In China.

After the marriage in China girls have no part with their own family and no part in the worship of their ancestors. To have no son means no ancestral worship, and the girl is often sold as a daughter-in-law. Poor people buy their sons' wives when they are but babies, as they can be had then for a few dollars. These little ones are usually drudges in the mother-in-law's household.

A missionary overheard two women conversing. One said: "I am going to get a daughter-in-law into the house. You see, a daughter-in-law is no more expense than a servant. If I curse or beat a servant she leaves, but you can beat a daughter-in-law and get obedience, and your work will be done as you wish it." The other replied: "Just so, just so. I am thinking of getting a daughter-in-law too. I can then live at ease." As a consequence of this custom little girls look forward not to betrothal or to marriage, but to becoming mothers-in-law, when they in turn can have authority.—Good Housekeeping.

"But I shan't buy you any beer. Don't try some games on me, old bum."

"No beer?" he shouts. "Don't you help me to brace oop und be a man?"

"I shust gif some adwice," I says.

"Vhell, I shust gif you some adwice, old man. You stick by your cobbling und let adwice alone. If anybody wants adwice he comes to me. You vhas here to mend shoes, und I vhas here to adwice. Py golly, but I guess you like to get me off der force, eh?"

The Necessary Bribe.

There is everything in environment. What, therefore, is a bribe for the lad in the street is a bore to the youth in an automobile. However, this fable teaches that the reverse is sometimes true.

A certain man well known in educational affairs had been lecturing in New York and had stopped overnight at the house of a very rich merchant. On the morning of his departure he had just been introduced for the first time into the presence of the young lady of the family, aged five, when mention was made of the fact that at such and such an hour the carriage would be ready to take him to the depot.

Thereat the merchant turned to the little girl.

"Margaret," he said, "you have to go to the dentist's today. Hadn't you better ride downtown with Mr. B.? He can drop you at the dentist's, and then the carriage can return for you later, after it has taken him to the depot."

Miss Margaret smiled sweetly.

"Of course," she said, "it would be very pleasant to ride with Mr. B., but mother promised me that if I would go nicely to the dentist's I might ride there in the elevated."—Lippincott's Magazine.

His Discreet Preference.

"Don't you think you would have greater influence with the masses if you made more speeches?"

"No," answered Senator Sorghum. "I believe in giving anything I have to say to the press. When you make a speech you have to depend on your own grammar, but when you have your remarks printed you have a number of people to straighten it out for you."—Washington Star.

Putting Him at Ease.

"Now, don't you worry a bit," says the hostess to the guest who has upset a plate of soup on his trousers.

LET US GET BACK TO STRAIGHT ELECTION LAWS.

In the recent election, Maryland presented to the country the queer spectacle of an election law which permitted trick ballots in some counties and forbade them in others. The election turned out to be so close that a much smaller difference than that which this manipulation of the law was calculated to make would be sufficient to reverse the result. If the election in the country at large had been close likewise, attention of this spectacle in Maryland, with consequences by no means pleasing for Marylanders to contemplace. Even as it is, the matter is not unlikely to be made nationally conspicuous through a contest in Congress by Mr. William H. Jackson, Republican candidate in the First district. The New York Tribune discusses the subject in a leading editorial this morning in the course of which it says: "If the Maryland managers had been honest in their purpose to punish illiteracy and improve the suffrage, they would have passed a general law and enforced it in every Congress district. But their aim was neither legitimate not honest, their single purpose being to proscribe a section of the State which, formerly Democratic has in recent years become more and more surely Republican. No meaner or more despicable trick could have been played by the Maryland Legislature than this raid on the ballots in these two offending Congress districts. We trust that a Republican Congress will make short work of the Democratic victory won by this sort of 'sneak-thief politics.' Is it worth while for Maryland to make herself a target for this kind of criticism? Is it worth while for the Democratic party in Maryland to bear the odium which responsibility for trick ballots and similar performances carries with it? Is it not clear that the best chance for the Democratic party to retain its hold on the State is to be had by spurning from itself utterly all alliance with crookedness and trickery in election matters? The Democratic party in this State naturally contains a preponderance of the best elements in our citizenship; but it is precisely these elements that are alienated by offences against the principles of fair play in elections. To make itself solid with the people of Maryland, the Democratic party has only to make itself clean and straight—to eschew the miserable trickery with the suffrage that has occupied so much of the attention of its so-called leaders in the past few years.

MARYLAMD'S HONOR AT STAKE.

There is no doubt in any honest man's mind of the election of the Republican national ticket in Maryland. The miserable, petty pilfering which occurred in large a majority of the election precincts will not decieve anyone. That is precisely what the election law was intended to do. Instead of ruffianism, which requires courage and other devices which call for a certain amount of skill, the law was, with brazen audacity, framed to furnish a basis for action to the most stupid officials. It was put in their power to throw out enough ballots to secure a majority, provided they had sufficient nerve to trample on the rights of the citizens of this state. That they had no idea of the magnitude of their task on Tuesday, or that it would involve the disfranchisement of some thousands of their own party in evident from the unconcionable time that they have been engaged in making up the returns.

An honest count of an honest vote is soon made in the most remote constituencies, but the Democratic managers in this state have undertaken, perhaps, the hardest job in their variegated political experience. With the thousands of ballots cast out upon one or another trivial pretext, and in many instances without any pretext at all, they are still holding back the returns in more than one county. They should be made to understand at once that that sort of thing will not be tolerated. The voters of Maryland have rights which must be regarded. It should be made clear that it is unsafe to attempt to suppress the popular will. There are certain general laws which control elections everywhere, and if the election judges violate them they are liable to crimiprocedure, or if they plead instructions from others, the latter are liable to be joined with them in conspiracy proceedings. If a voter indicates, beyond dispute, his intention in marking his ballot it must be counted in spite of triviality. "The law makes no account of very small things."

If the attempt to deny to the Republican party its victory should be successful, the Republicans can demand certificates from the governor. The latter can appoint a day for a hearing, and if he declines it is still in the power of the Republican electors to meet and cast their votes for the Republican candidates. They can then follow the forms prescribed by the federal statute, and their votes will be in the custody of the Senate until the count of all the electoral votes by both branches of Congress, when the result of the election in this state would be decided. While the situation in this state is a lasting disgrace to the Democratic party, it is also a source of shame and humiliation to all good citizens. The honor of the state should not be blurred by the efforts to despoil many thousands of citizens of their rights.—Baltimore American.

Governor Warfield attended one session of the Maryland Sunday School Convention which was held in Baltimore recently. He made an address and among other things said:

"If I am not such a good man myself, but I have a good Christian wife. She goes to Sunday School every Sunday, rain or shine, and when the weather is too bad in the country to take the children to Sunday School she remains at home and teaches her children the catechism and the Bible. I have always been taught to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, and read my Bible, which has been in our family for over one hundred years and for which my deceased mother sold apples to purchase. Teach the children to love honesty and good citizenship." The Governor's reverence of the Bible and the Sabbath will win for him new esteem among the people of Maryland, and will help to make better citizens.

THE fatal illness of General Lew Wallace will be learned with a feeling of sadness throughout the country. The author of Ben Hur and other books, though up in years, had been looked upon as one who was likely to be among us for some time to come. His genius has left its impress upon history through several volumes, and his valorous deeds in the war of the rebellion have placed him among the heroes of that period. Indiana has furnished many notable characters in the literary world, but none shone like Lew Wallace.

Congressman Pearre Returns to Watkins Glen.

Congressman George A. Pearre, who has been ill for some months, but is now greatly improved, has returned to Watkins Glen, New York, accompanied by Mrs. Pearre, to remain until Congress convenes in December. Col. Pearre hopes by that time to have fully recovered. With Col. Pearre at Watkins are Mr. and Mrs. Merwin McKaig, the latter being his sister, ex-Congressman William M. McKaig, and Miss Mary MacGill, niece of Col. Pearre.

Dawson's Majority 10,722.

Republican headquarters at Parkersburg has complete returns from every county in the state. Boone was the last county to send in its vote. The complete returns show Dawson's majority is 10,722.

It will remain at that unless changed by the official count. Some of the Democratic papers in West Virginia still print the ridiculous claim that Dawson's majority will not be over 5,000. What earthly use they have for persistently attempting to deceive their readers is hard to understand.

Baptists in Garrett.

Mr. T. W. T. Noland as a Baptist missionary has worked in Garrett county for some years, but it was not until the beginning of the present year that a Baptist preacher was located in this big county.

Among this year's graduates at the Baptist Theological Seminary, at Louisville, Mr. W. H. Faust, a native of Georgia, was selected by the Maryland State board to serve in Deer Park and its vicinity and he delivered his initial sermon early in the summer. He has not only attracted those of the Baptist faith, but those of other denominations have attended his meetings regularly. During the past week he has been holding evangelistic services in Deer Park twice each day and the meetings have grown in interest. These meetings Mr. Faust proposes to continue there and after the close of the series he will hold like servicas at Loch Lynn, Thayerville and Elder Hill, where the Baptist Church has quite a footing. Mr. Faust has made a very favorable impression thus far, being a speaker of considerable force and well fitted for his work.

DEER PARK JOTTINGS.

Once again, Mr. Editor, after the gloom of battle of the 8th ult., and the exciting scenes, yet pleasent experiences of a gay and happy little band of the "Unterrified Democracy" as they wended their way along the turbulent water of Salt River, and have returned in safety and are so inspired and invigorated, that the reporter of this memorial voyage feels likegiving you items of interest of this most enjoyable trip. After giving you the happenings of our town, during the interim as gathered from our local reporter, will then give you as graphic an account of this famous expedition over the cleansing stream, all purified by salt which had "not lost it savor," for according to Scripture we are the "salt of the earth," etc.

Our friend and neighbor, Mr. Wm. B. Miller, one of Garrett county's best and most efficient workman at his trade, has gone to Baltimore, to work as foreman for the well known contractors, Walsh & Bro., of that city, and although depressed in leaving his good wife and two bright eyed little jewels and a sick father-in-law, in the person of Wm. L. Shaffer, we report the latter much better. Mr. Miller will work at his chosen trade in helping to build up the burned district of the Metropolis of Maryland.

Mr. Walter Engle, one of the recent acquisitions to our town, was taken suddenly faint and sick whilst attending serviee at the Union church yesterday. Just as that gifted son of Georgia, Rev. Faust, had closed one of his most stirring appeals for sinner to turn from his evil ways and live for God, Mr. Engle, owing to the warmth of the house, became faint and his devoted wife and her brother assisted him home, and there in this most cozy and elegantly appointed home soon recuperated at this writing is himself again, and true to his industrial habit is attending to his duties as usual.

Mayor E. F. Droege is suffering with a severe cold and a sprained ankle which has brought on rheumatism from which he suffers severe pain but reports from his home, this morning find him much better, and he will soon be out attending to his clerical as well as domestic duties.

Our school opened today under the efficient management of Mr. Bert Browning, and his cultured assistant, Miss Alma Crane, after a suspension of some five weeks, owing to a scourge of scarlet fever, which has been mentioned in former communications. We are glad to state this dread malady has abated and the majority of the children are attending.

Our good old friend and veteran of the civil war, John Snyder, but recently from West Virginia, who purchased a beautiful home in this place a few years ago and is now occupying it with his companion, a good and true lady, also from the "little mountain state," who has been visiting his old home the past week, returned a few days ago, and is a faithful attendant at the revival service of her church.

And now, Mr. Editor, we come to the point intimated in our preface, the trip up Salt River and the happy and safe return to our dear ones left behind.

On the morning of the 9th ult., as dispatch after dispatch flashed over the wires that Democracy had gone down in defeat beyond a doubt and that "Marylund my Maryland" had been swallowed up by Republican votes, our hearts sank witnin us, but summoning courage to meet the issues gracefully, as we had met them in the past, and in darker days, after consulting with political friends of both parties we decided to build our boat and through the kindness of Walter Bros., we secured timbers of the old Davis Store building, so recently torn down and sold to these genial brothers, and they kindly and gratuitously gave us all the timber from this old store house once owned by our noble candidate, the "Grand Old Man of Maryland and West Viginia." With this Democratic timber cut and sawed in the good ante-bellum days when Democracy, pure and simple, of the Jeffersonian type ruled and reigned supreme over this glorious land from the cold and chilly Yankee land to the golden fields of California, from the northern lakes and borders of Canada to the tropical clime of the lovely Southland and Gulf of Mexico, we, with the help of this good Republican firm, and the efficient aid of an old sailor, in the person of that true and never terrified Democrat, Mr. George Marley; and the advice of Mr. George Hennen, a liberal and genial Republican, and the active aid of our old friend, Sebastian Hinebaugh, one of Garrett county's most staunch and true Democrats and the chairman of the District Committee and the only member of that committee that manifested any interest in our campaign, we hurriedly employed hands, and on the morning of the 10th launched our noble craft with the following officers, crew and invited guests: Capt., Wm. D. Hoye; lieut-captain, Wm. B. Griffin; navigator, our venerable old sailor, Mr. George Marley; electrician and master mechanic, Mr. George W. H. Lohm, the efficient and true Democrat of Maryland; conductor and general manager of the culinary department in the hold where all the rich viands, champaign, wine, and luxuries are stored, Mr. Sebastian Hinebaugh, the courtly knight to see especially after the fair sex of this cultured expedition; ship's agent, our good Republican friend, ex-Squire J. L. Wheeler; pilot, our young Democratic friend, Mr. Abraham Freeland; boatswain, our young Republican, Master Gay Wheeler; messenger, the corpulent and jolly Democratic boy, Master Louis Lohm; chaplain, that God fearing young Georgian, Rev. Wm. H. Faust. After christening our noble craft, by Miss Kate Lohm breaking a bottle of our champaign over the bow amidst the cheers of hundreds of our citizens regardless of party affiliation, this famous craft was named by two of Deer Park's noble ladies of Democratic faith, Miss Ellen J. Hoye and her sister, Mrs. L. D. Thrasher, wife of our efficient postmaster, with her bow pointing to the south she rushed from the skidway and plunged into the pure and brimy stream, with the appropriate name "Lady of the Myth" and as she settled in the waters of the river, the gang-plank was thrown out, and the guests were invited by the gallant bachelor-captain, in his most classic and elegant phrases, to join us on this historic expedition. The following Democratic ladies and gentlemen together with many Republican ladies and gentlemen, accepted: Mrs. George Hennen, as chief guest of honor in the state room, Mrs. G. W. H. Lohm, as chaperon, who are specially mentioned becamse of their culture and refinement. Misses Sadie and Nellie Thrasher, Sadie Laughlin, Mt. Lake Park, Alma Crane, Josie and Kate Griffin, Grace and Lulu Marley, Grace Walter, Nora Specht, Emma Glotfelty, Jessie Wheeler, Florence Thrasher, Annie Clary, Mary Garrett. The matrons were Mrs. Walter Engle, Mrs. E. F. Droege, Mrs. P. J. Garrett, Mrs. L. D. Thrasher, Mrs. George J. Walter, Mrs. James W. Walter, Mrs. George Marley, Mrs. J. L. Wheeler, Mrs. Etta Lashorn. The gentlemen were George Hennen, our genial and liberal Republican, who was by unanimous consent selected as toast master; his son, George, Jr., and Mr. Clarence Lashorn as first and second mates; Messrs. S. P. Specht and Wilfred Chadderton. With this array and the famous Cornet Band aboard, and with banners to the morning breeze and Sergeant Landes attending to halyards that lifted Old Glory to wind, amidst applause this jolly, mythical crew, started from in front of the late summer home of our smiling and much lamented Vice Presidential Candidate, the band playing "Maryland My Maryland," the gangplank was drawn in and gracefully did "The Lady of the Myth" move out on this purified river of salt and brine. As the ladies waved their snowy white handkerchiefs as emblems of purity and the gentlemen gave their most graceful salute to the friends left behind, with tears coming from eyes unused to weep, we sailed forth on this unknown voyage. With our electric propellor and trusted electrician, we sailed at the rate of a hundred miles a second and were soon at the head waters of Salt River where a telegram awaited us saying, "Maryland, My Maryland, hangs in a balance, and all is not lost." Immediately we tacked about and with joyous shouts and the band playing "Dixie," our gallant boat soon left the fountain of this stream far in the rear, and with our genial conductor at all times willing to frequent the hold our spirits were soon doubly revived and our toast master with his manly courtesy placed upon the banquet table of the state room, where his good Democratic wife, and cultured Virginia lady of ante-bellum days presided, and with all inspiring words by way of a toast, this graceful Republican said "ladies and gentlemen, to my regret, but I hope a pleasure to you my Democratic friends, the news has reached us that your fair state is likely to be cast in the columns of the faith of my dear wife and for her sake as well as all the fair ladies of this expedition, I partake of this elixir of lite and ask you all to join the manager of the hold in wishing a safe return to the loved ones left behind." With cheers to this toast we moved down the stream with lightning speed and in 4000 seconds our mountain town hove in sight and cheer after cheer rent the air and as we glided into port glad friends came aboard to greet us.

But finding the news from Maryland unverified we held a hasty consultation and by a unanimous vote we decided to use "The Lady of the Myth" and take a pleasure trip. Entering the placid waters of the Great Youghiogheny, which forms a confluence with the Salt River at this place, and our hold being well filled with all the rich viands that sustains the inner man, we cast anchor in front of the distinguished state chairman of West Virginia's summer home, the much chagrined Col. John T. McGraw, and again waving an adieu to friends we start on a journey that will live in mythical history and be stored in the memories of the voyagers for ages in the future of this great country of ours.

As we glide down this noble Indian stream we soon enter the waters of the Monongahela at McKeesport, thence down the Ohio via Pittsburg to Cincinnatti, Louisville, Cairo, Vicksburg. Casting anchor at this historic city where we viewed the battleground and siege of this, one of General Grant's most noted victories, where he and General Sherman overpowered the gallant General Pemberton on July 4th, 1863.

Weighing anchor we again are borne swiftly along the sluggish Father of Waters and enter the Crescent City and Metropolis of the South, thence on through the Gulf of Mexico, Yucatan channel, through the Gulf of Honduras and the Caribean Sea to Colon, where we halt and view the prospective "big ditch," one of President Roosevelt's pet schemes.

From this famed locality we again set sail for Porto Rico, a lovely little island, where the colored brother rules, thence by Santiago where we sailed around viewing the locality where the gallant Schley annihilated the Spanish fleet with its heroic admiral, the chivalrous Cervera, and also viewing the channel that entered Santiago harbor, the wanton wreck of the old Merrimac and the heroic feat of the world-famed Capt. Hobson.

With hearts stirred by emotions that words fail to express in our sympathy for the then oppressed Cubans and with feelings of veneration for the lamented McKinley who so nobly came to the rescue of this noble, bleeding and chivalrous people who followed the lead of the grand old General Gomez who defended this "Pearl of the Antilles" for so long against the blood thirsty Spaniards commander by that inhuman brute Weyler.

Again we weigh anchor and with the shout "Cuba Libra" we sail for the Florida coast. After loading our hold with tropical fruits we hasten on our journey touching at Tampa, thence along the coast to Sumter, where the first shot was fired that was heard around the world, then on to Wilmington by way of Cape Hateras, entering the Chesapeake Bay at or near Old Point Comfort, and soon we are in Maryland waters where the bivalves are in great abundance, and from oyster sloops we supply our larder with those toothsome luxuries.

We now enter the placid waters of our own beautiful Potomac, and passing many points of interest we are most impressed as we pass Mount Vernon and our bell tolls and we all reverently lift our hats in passing the tomb of him who was "first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen." Soon we cast anchor again at the foot of Seventh street wharf at the national capital, and then our committee on appointments report and propose that we as a whole pay our respects to the Nation's Chief.

We march to the White House and are graciously and courteously introduced to the President by our genial toast-master. The ladies were greeted by the mistress of the White House and our fair young damsels were welcomed to the blue parlor by Miss Alice the accomplished eldest daughter of the President.

Our committee respectfully suggested to his excellency the following cabinet officers, with an informal address by our chaplain as to the merits of our recommendations: Secretary of the Treasury, Sydney E. Mudd, of Maryland; Secretary of War, David E. Dick, of Maryland; Attorney General, Chas. R. Schirm; Secretary of Agriculture, Sergeant John W. Landis; Secretary of the Navy, J. Allen Paugh; Postmaster General Alex. C. George, the two latter of historic Deer Park.

After a final adieu and thanks from the Chief Executive for the worthy prospective cabinet officers our excursionists weighed anchor for home, and sped up the Potomac to the foot of the great Alleganies where the pure waters trickled down the mountain side, we were agreeably surprised to find Dumont with his air ship to waft us safely home across the great Backbone, and landed us this 15th day of November in the good year 1904, and were most delightfully received and welcomed back to dear old Deer Park by all her citizens.

With greetings to the Editor by our special reporter, we again say—

MORE ANON.

Proverbs

"When the butter won't come put a penny in the churn," is an old time dairy proverb. It often seems to work though no one has ever told why.

When mothers are worried because the children do not gain strength and flesh we say give them Scott's Emulsion.

It is like the penny in the milk because it works and because there is something astonishing about it.

Scott's Emulsion is simply a milk of pure cod liver oil with some hypophosphites especially prepared for delicate stomachs.

Children take to it naturally because they like the taste and the remedy takes just as naturally to the children because it is so perfectly adapted to their wants.

For all weak and pale and thin children Scott's Emulsion is the most satisfactory treatment.

We will send you the penny, i. e., a sample free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

For a long time the banks of the country did little advertising. The Pittsburg banks led in the crusade which has made advertising by banks the regular thing and not a fad of a moment. The banks which have advertised have increased their deposits and their profits enormously as compared with the deposits and earnings of banks which have not been advertising. The form which their advertising took was newspaper publicity. The bank which uses the newspapers can get more business and get it quicker than in any other way. This is not a theory but a demonstrated fact.

Dr. G. W. Slick, of Grantsville, aforetime veterinary surgeon of Thoburn Post, G. A. R., came down to vote Tuesday, and returned Wednesday feeling that the country he had fought so valiantly to save was again lost. He was cheerful enough to state, however, that though he did not know whether the bond proposal in his county to raise money to build a new court-house and jail had won or lost. He believed, however, that the majority were against it. He went so far as to say there is an extensive sentiment in the northern part of the county, latent but strong, in favor of a new county, including territory from both Garrett and Allegany, and Frostburg as the county-seat! Then, with an electric road from Grantsville to Frostburg hundreds of peoples could come down to testify before the grand jury where only a few can afford to travel 110 miles to Oakland and back and be away from home but 3 days for that purpose! It was one of the strongest presentations of a real, big, meritorious enterprise the Journal has heard since 1876.—Frostburg Journal.

FIGHT AT RAILROAD CAMP.

Female Cook Cleans Up Gange of Foreigners In Oakland.

A gang of foreign laborers employed by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company as track repairmen, and housed in camp cars located on the Hotel Siding in Oakland, were paid off on last Friday and celebrated the event by indulging in the cup that cheers too strenuously. Returning to their car they got into a rumpus with the female cook employed in the camp who immediately "cleaned up" on the foreigners with a big stick. One man was knocked from the car and fell over on the rail of an adjoinihg track, breaking two or three ribs and otherwise injuring himself. Some others were more or less bruised, the majority getting off with sore heads, blackened eyes or peeled faces.

Notice to Trespassers.

Notice is hereby given to all persons not to trespass upon the lands of the Stricker Lumber Company, lying on both sides and adjacent to the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company between Forty-water Station and Frankville in Garrett county for the purpose of hunting. W. S. Street, a former employe of the Preston Lumber and Coal Company, was arrested one day last week in Pittsburg, charged with having stolen a check from one of his fellow-employes of the same company, and after forging the endorsement deposited it in the Terra Alta Bank when he issued checks to a number of parties. Cashier Crane, of the Terra Alta Bank, traced the man to Pittsburg and his arrest followed. He made good the amount and was allowed to go free.

A MILD WINTER

The Weather on September 29th, Said to Rule the Year.

For many years Abraham Strausser, of Bloomburg, has made a study of weather, winds and the moon to such an extent that he has become a successful prognosticator. For years he has foretold what the coming seasons would be like and it is seldom that his prophecy has been wrong. Strausser says that the winter is regulated by the wind on the 29th of September. When the wind is from the east there will be a great deal of snow. When the wind is variable then the winter will be open and sloppy, and winds from south and west indicate a mild winter. The wind on the 29th day of September this year came continually from the south and west without a particle of variation, and you can put it down that we will have a mild winter with little snow. There will be no sleighing before Christmas. Last year the wind blew directly from the north and the winter was severe and long. Strausser claims he has not missed foretelling the weather for many years.

GOOD ROADS.

Governor Bachelder of New Hampshire on Highway Improvement.

New Hampshire is one of the states which are making rapid strides in the improvement of her roads. Governor Bachelder of that state—and he is also an officer of the national grange—is a very enthusiastic advocate of road improvement. In a recent address he said:

"The development and prosperity of any state or nation depends in some degree upon the transportation facilities provided, and such facilities included not only our rivers and harbors and our great railway and steamboat companies, but also the highways over which all our people are transported.

"The important matter now before the friends of good roads is to arouse the people to a realization of their responsibility in securing favorable state and national legislation on the subject. Another important matter is the construction of roads adapted to the needs of travel over them. Much harm has come to the good roads movement in some sections of the country through the advocacy of more expensive roads than the resources of the people would warrant and demand. Costly stone roads are economical upon portions of our highways, but we must not overlook the fact that there is a vast mileage of roads that could be permanently improved by the judicious expenditure of a comparatively small sum of money per mile. We should give due prominence to this fact in considering the matter from a state or national standpoint.

"As an official of the national grange I desire to say a word to the farmers of the country in regard to national aid for road building. The farmers have been loyal to the interests of the nation in every emergency of the past. They have contributed their full share in proportion to their wealth to the revenues for the support of the government. The ablest statesmen and most successful business men contributing to the development and prosperity of the country point to the farms as their birthplace. When our country has been in danger the farmer boys have responded nobly to her defense. We have uncomplainingly contributed our share to the enormous expenditures of the national government for river and harbor improvements, the construction of canals and the erection of costly buildings in our great cities and we do not regret it.

"We now ask in the name of justice that national aid be granted for the improvement of highways. This involves the establishment of no new policy, but the extension of the former one. We ask the loyal support of those who have been benefited by our contribution to other public matters to which I have referred. I believe the farmers of the nation, representing more than a third of our population, are practically unanimous in favor of such a movement and will give it their unqualified support."

MARRIED 50 YEARS.

Mr. and Mrs. Robinson Celebrate Golden Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. John Griffin Robinson of Baltimore, celebrated their golden wedding Monday evening with a family reunion and a gathering of intimate friends. There was also a quadruple christening of little grandchildren.

Mr. and Mrs. Robinson have 10 children living and 20 grandchildren, and almost all of them were at the family reunion. The children are Mrs. Thomas J. Tull, Mrs. W. E. Messersmith, Mrs. E. O. Jones, Mrs. T. Earl Witters, Miss Willie H. Robinson, Miss Grace Robinson and Mr. Howard Robinson, of Baltimore, and Mrs. M. C. Hinebaugh and Dr. John G. Robinson, of Oakland. Mrs. Hinebaugh and two children and Dr. Robinson's wife and family left Oakland Saturday for the gathering of the clan, and Dr. Hinebaugh and Dr. Robinson left on Monday.

An interesting feature of the reunion was the baptism of four of the little members of the third generation—Ruth Elizabeth, Ralph Carleton and Martha Jane—the little daughters and son of Doctor and Mrs. J. G. Robinson, and Mahlon Carleton, the little son of Doctor and Mrs. Hinebaugh.

The Salvation Of "Whitey" Bowen

By HOWARD FIELDING

Copyright, 1904, by Charles W. Hooke

THERE was a woman whom destiny appointed to be the salvation of "Whitey" Bowen, and a very remarkable appointment it was. Had I been in destiny's place I should not have selected her for such a service. She would have seemed to me much more likely to destroy than to save him or any other man in whom she happened to take an interest. Yet aside from a single instance of heartless and mercenary conduct I know nothing reprehensible that she ever did.

She was in fact a mystery. She arrived in the rough little city of Carillon, N. M., on the edge of an October afternoon and went to the Merchants' hotel, where she wrote upon the register, "Mrs. Celia Lorne and maid." The maid came a few hours later by a train from the opposite direction. She was a colored woman of middle age and of a singularly somber demeanor. There was an ill founded rumor afterward that Mrs. Lorne came from St. Louis and the maid from Denver.

The lady herself was slender, dark eyed and somewhat intense in her manner, yet always under control. She had narrowly missed the fatal gift of beauty spoken of by the old romancers. Her face was spoiled by high, prominent cheek bones and thin, straight lips. She was not past thirty and might have been believed had she called herself twenty-five, except that nobody ever believed Mrs. Lorne. That was one of her peculiarities. I know of only a single serious falsehood in which she was detected, yet long before that time I had learned to distrust her statements as if they had been uttered by a habitual liar. So far as I am aware, it was the same with all who became acquainted with her in Carillon, and this was no secret from herself. She used to make a jest of it while declaring that she was the most truthful of women. Even "Whitey" Bowen, who was in love with her, could not take her word.

We called him "Whitey" because of his pale yellow hair and very light gray eyes. He was a handsome fellow and wonderfully well built. His father was a Kansas farmer and was called well to do, as we learned from the son, but later developments proved that the elder Bowen must have been a bit of a miser and extremely reticent about his affairs, for he was worth five times as much money as the members of his own household supposed. He had sent "Whitey" to the Ohio State university, and the boy had made an excellent record in scholarship and athletics. The father and son quarreled in the summer following the young man's graduation, and "Whitey" admitted to me that it was because he knew too much.

"I tried to make my father over," said he. "I couldn't be satisfied with him as he was."

Upon another occasion he was more explicit and stated that the first grave quarrel arose from his attempt to reform his father's table etiquette. It appeared that Bowen senior had the pernicious habit of eating with his knife and that he bitterly resented any interference with his liberty in this respect. There were some hasty words and a suggestion that "Whitey" would better learn how to earn his food before he set himself up as an authority on feeding, and this was the trivial beginning of much sorrow. "Whitey" went forth from his father's house; but, unlike the prodigal of Scripture, he carried no portion of goods with him. After brief wanderings he came to Carillon, where he eventually found employment as a brakeman for the Santa Fe railroad.

The schedule of his toil gave him most of his leisure in Carillon, which was not a good place for a young man. "Whitey" Bowen brought few bad habits with him. It was indeed quite unnecessary, for they could be acquired in our city without the slightest difficulty, and I regret to say that "Whitey" showed a considerable aptitude. The fact is that he felt disgraced by his quarrel with his father

He had the terrible handicap of a start in life which destroyed his self esteem. Moreover, he had absolutely no interest in railroading and did not care to rise, although he might have done so easily, for he was a man so thoroughly reliable by nature that not even strong drink could destroy this quality in him, and, besides, he had the immense advantage of a splendid personality, which made him known and remembered by his superiors.

After he had been in Carillon about six months he began to receive regular letters from his father. His mother was long since dead. I saw some of the letters. The earlier ones were full of a stubborn pride and an offended authority. They gave the boy an option of complete submission to the paternal will and were more than vague in regard to the rewards that would follow. Then I began to detect an undercurrent of anxiety and an old man's longing for his son. The feeling was sternly repressed. Only a phrase here and there revealed it. There were quaint, almost laughable, hints of pecuniary assistance in case the young man should be in difficulties, but no money ever came.

"Whitey" always replied to these epistles, but with distressing brevity. The tone was always perfectly respectful, but it must have been direful for an anxious father to read those deadly short sentences. Three or four of them penned in an enormous hand covered half a sheet of paper and conveyed as little information as ever I saw in a letter.

By and by the elder Bowen began to hint at illness, and then indeed the son showed an increasing anxiety, but it did him no good. There was something which he wanted his father to say in one of those letters, something which would have called the boy home, but it was not said, and I never found out what it was.

It became obvious to me after a little while that the old farmer was really failing toward his grave and that he knew it right well. I began to urge "Whitey" to go home, but without success. He could not read between the lines of those letters. He was not old enough to recognize that presentiment which comes to a man of advanced years when the end of the long journey really draws near.

There was, however, one letter which moved "Whitey" more than the others. It contained a bit of news about a girl in the home town, and this news, though of no more consequence than a new gown—so little, in fact, that I have entirely forgotten what it was—had been expressed with a crude and simple tenderness. The sentence was one of those which an experienced writer of romance would give much to be able to pen, yet the like of it will come to him only when he forgets his art. It showed that this girl was dear to the father because he always thought of his son when he looked at her. Then indeed I had strong hope of sending "Whitey" home, but Mrs. Lorne appeared in Carillon and spoiled the chance.

From the first meeting between them this woman exerted a strange and contradictory influence. Whatever she said to him seemed to produce an effect exactly opposite to that which would have been the ordinary sense of the words. She showed no great liking for him and did not encourage him to seek her society. Yet he was drawn to her, not as a man may be tantalized into striving after that which is difficult of attainment, but because he felt from the very beginning that she was his friend.

"Mrs. Lorne is the most sympathetic woman I've ever met," said he to me after a conversation to which we three had been parties.

I remember staring at him in amazement, for of all the cold blooded, cynical talk that ever I heard in this world Mrs. Lorne's upon that occasion was easily the chief. What element of sympathy with anybody or anything "Whitey" had been able to find in it I was unable to discover. He felt her sympathy, he declared, and that was the end of it.

I ought to say here that Mrs. Lorne's conduct while in Carillon was severely circumspect. For instance, she had a private parlor at the hotel, but neither Bowen nor any other man was received in it, though there was nothing to prevent. In the public parlor or upon the veranda Mrs. Lorne entertained all her male acquaintances, and, though she took the wrong side of every moral question and applauded every sinner who was mentioned in her presence, she preserved a certain delicacy of language and theme and required it from all with whom she conversed. Therefore her utterly wrong hearted view of life was the more dangerous. An exultant sympathy with evil may be expected of a coarse and rude transgressor, and its influence is discounted, but when a woman of exterior refinement takes it upon herself to be the devil's advocate she stands a chance to carry her case in the courts of this world.

"Mrs. Lorne stirs up all the good that's in me," said 'Whitey' to me one day. "That woman must be my salvation."

Upon the other hand, she openly encouraged the young man's wildness, laughed at his best aspirations and praised him for the worst of his escapades.

Among the singular contradictions of her influence I will mention this: Though he was drawn to her so strongly at first and for a time gave up his thought of going home, he presently began to move in the opposite direction.

"I don't know, I don't know," he would say to me while pacing up and down my room in the dead hours of the night. "I've been talking with Mrs. Lorne this evening. Perhaps, after all, I ought to go home."

"Did she tell you to?" I would ask.

"No, no; not exactly," he would admit with hesitation. "In fact, she rather spoke against it; admired my spunk and all that. But somehow she made me see that it's the right thing to do."

The situation was in some respects incomprehensible to me. I knew that the boy was in love with Mrs. Lorne and that he had no reason to be hopeful. She was supposed to be a widow, but as the information came from herself alone it was to me wholly unreliable, and though she were really free it would not make "Whitey" Bowen's chances any better, for Mrs. Lorne would never marry a poor man. The chances were overwhelming that the end of this romance would be conventional, yet no less tragic for its commonplace quality. "Whitey" would be led finally into a mad proposal; he would repeat it many times, and at last, despairing, he would plunge into wild dissipation and make a miserable end.

I now know that Mrs. Lorne had more accurate information regarding "Whitey's" prospects than he himself had. She happened to have a correspondent in his home town, and she had learned that Bowen the elder was almost a rich man, that he was in very bad health and that he still loved his son. She had not come to Carillon with this knowledge. My opinion is that she had been sent there as a result of some treaty with her family, following a scandal which involved some serious pecuniary irregularity of hers—a crime, in fact. It is needless to state the evidence upon which I base this verdict, but it is fairly conclusive and is supported by the fact that she remained at Carillon exactly one year, though during the last month or two she must have been anxious to leave.

Meanwhile "Whitey" drifted more and more into her influence, and yet he was ever more clearly persuaded that he ought to go home. I am sure that he had already proposed to her once and had accepted a flat refusal precisely as he always took everything that she said—exactly opposite. He was even cheered by the rejection. Then came a really grave letter from home. The father's state of health was nearly as bad as it could be, and he wrote to plead for his son's return.

"Whitey" took this letter to Mrs. Lorne, and she told him not to go. That evening he settled all his affairs and climbed aboard the engine of a fast freight bound east. The engineer was Andy Russell, a splendid fellow and a good friend of "Whitey." I was at the station in a pouring rain to bid the boy goodby.

An hour later a man came running to my office, where I was sitting alone, and in gloom, glad that "Whitey" had gone, yet missing him to the bottom of my heart.

"No. 21 has been wrecked!" cried the messenger, bursting in upon me. "She's all piled up a mile this side of Leonard's. The engine crew are dead, and 'Whitey's' gone with them—under the engine, the whole lot. What do you think of that?"

I did not say what I thought. I ran to the station bareheaded and did not utter a word till I arrived there. This is what had happened: A washout had undermined the rails at a point about fifteen miles from Carillon, leaving them standing with nothing under them, as will sometimes happen. Like ghosts the two bright lines of iron gleamed in the rays of the headlight; like ghosts they vanished, and the great machine plunged downward. The cars that followed piled themselves so high above the pit that the wrecking derrick which was sent out from Carillon could not reach the top of the pile.

I obtained permission to go out with the wrecking train, and while it was being made up I waited at the station. I stood outside in the rain, too sick at heart to feel the need of shelter. Suddenly a hand clutched my arm, and I turned to face Mrs. Lorne.

"Is this true?" she cried. "Is it true that he is dead?"

"Yes," said I, "it is true."

She thrust a sheet of yellow paper before my eyes. There was a lamp above my head, and I could read the words. It was a telegram from "Whitey" Bowen's home—from Mrs. Lorne's correspondent there. It contained the information that "Whitey's" father had died that afternoon, leaving the bulk of his property to his son, an amount exceeding $100,000.

"That is mine," said she in a tone as cold as steel. "I am his wife."

"His wife!" I cried. "When did this happen?"

"That will be proved at the proper time," said she. "The money is mine. And, isn't it queer," she added in an indescribable tone, "I sent him a note to be handed in to the engine cab at Slayton's, three miles up. I applauded his resolution and told him to go home and never come back."

"YOU HAVE SAVED ME."

"I got your note," said a voice behind me, "and I came back. You have saved me."

It was "Whitey" Bowen. As ever, he had taken her advice by contraries. He had walked back along the rails in the drenching rain because she had told him to go on.

At sight of him Mrs. Lorne screamed, the first emotional outburst to which I ever knew her to yield. Then she turned and fled through the rain.

"Did you hear?" I gasped.

"Yes," said he wearily. "It isn't true. I suppose she had made some sudden plan to prove our marriage, but of course she can't do it now. I shall never see her again. As soon as this wreck is cleared I shall go home—too late, too late! But this has made a man of me, my friend. My salvation has been in it somehow."

The True Sympathy

By Mrs. FRANK LESLIE

IS Sympathy, with its pretentious great S, the most precious balm for a wounded heart?

Yes and no.

Far be it from me to deny that there are forms and measures of sympathy that are indeed healing and sweet, but HOW SELDOM ARE THEY FOUND! It must be unobtrusive to begin with. Like violets or lilies of the valley, it is to be known more by the subtle fragrance of its shy presence than, like the sunflower, by its breadth and insistence of form and color.

I have had friends whose very silence was the sweetest of sympathy—friends whose light touch never hurt the wound they healed; who never, by word or even look, suggested that there was a wound UNTIL I THREW OFF THE COVERING with which we all instinctively cloak our hurts from the common gaze.

A friend like this, a friend who is content to prove sympathy BY SILENCE until the sufferer invites speech, is far more likely to be admitted to the innermost chambers of the heart than the one who loudly knocks at the outer door, clamoring:

"Open, open! I have come to sympathize with you!"

To be pitied openly and avowedly AND TO BEAR IT SWEETLY is probably the last test of a saint ripe for canonization, but I for one have no idea of how such a being may feel. It is not my metier, and I fully believe in at least one old and vulgar adage, "Cobbler, stick to your last!" So, not claiming saintship, present or prospective, I am free to confess that to be pitied frankly arouses the most murderous qualities of my nature, and, although the fetters of civilization may chain both my tongue and my hands, the pityist would probably be very much alarmed if she could see my heart.

That phrase "Tell me all about it!" is one that the acceptable sympathizer NEVER uses. It is as fatal to the desired end as it is to throw open a window and hurl a handful of grain at a bird which you wish to lure to a cage it has deserted. The true way is to softly open the window, strew the grain inside where it is quite obvious, BUT MAY BE TAKEN OR LEFT, as the victim may choose, and then yourself retire out of sight. It is pretty sure that by this stratagem you will finally have your bird just where you want him, and in process of time he will warble out all the secrets of his heart to you. But rushing at him and shouting, "Now, tell me all about it!" is THE VERY LAST WAY to win his confidence.

Another kind of sympathizer and a very offensive one is the person who essays to "keep up your spirits" in some season of bereavement and affliction. I once saw a friend of mine driven nearly mad by this sort of a Job's comforter. She came to the house of mourning for a stay of some days and apparently had laid in a stock of funny stories, society gossip and all sorts of conundrums, epigrams and frivolities generally. We never sat down at the table but this flood was loosed upon us, until one day my friend BURST INTO TEARS AND LEFT THE TABLE, very greatly to the surprise of Mme. Malaprop, who inquired of everybody:

"Why, what is the matter? Did anybody say anything to remind her? And I was trying so hard to keep up her spirits and all!"

A kindred spirit to this, but not so objectionable because she is not so funny, is the officious sympathizer, the person who insists upon distracting the mind of the sufferer by forcing all sorts of ordinary details upon it. If it is bereavement and the comforter is a woman, she insists upon discussing the mourning clothes and offering to run out and bring patterns, or send in some bonnets, or tell about the present mode of wearing a widow's veil. She discusses sleeves and has an opinion upon the new skirts and ABSOLUTELY DRAGS assents or dissents from the pale lips of the sufferer.

Time is not a healer. HE IS A DESTROYER. Time is the most heartless of sympathizers or comforters, for he brings no thought of comfort or self justification. In fact, the harsh and bitter and cruel points of a great sorrow are those that time preserves and insists upon to the very last. Some kinds—nay, I will allow all kinds—of grief grow less poignant after awhile, but it is not because time has healed the wound, but BECAUSE HE HAS DESTROYED THE SENSIBILITY and the memory and the environment of the sorrow.

THE BEST OF ALL THE SYMPATHIZERS THIS WORLD HAS EVER PRODUCED WAS THAT EASTERN SAGE WHO, BEING REQUIRED BY HIS KING TO PRODUCE A MOTTO SUITED TO EVERY STATE OF MIND POSSIBLE TO HUMANITY, ENUNCIATED, "THIS, TOO, WILL PASS."

The Religious Life of the Home

By the Archbishop of CANTERBURY

IT would be vain to ignore the warning voices which tell us, on either side of the sea, of a certain decadence in THE DEFINITELY RELIGIOUS LIFE OF THE ORDINARY HOME—a falling off, that is, in the very force which gave its distinctive inspiration and its distinctive power to so much of our grandsires' lives.

If that be true—and, in spite of all explanatory qualifications, nobody will, I think, say it is wholly false—it surely behooves every gathering of churchmen to consider well what they can do to safeguard the men and women, AND, ABOVE ALL, THE CHILDREN, of America and of England from a peril whose gravity it is impossible to overestimate, because it affects the very foundation of our Christian life.

I am not presumptuous enough to try to judge of THE DEGREE to which this danger is at present yours. You can tell, as I of course cannot, whether adequate provision is somehow being made in the America of today for securing that the children shall nowhere grow up ignorant of the fullness AND THE SIGNIFICANCE of their Christian heritage.

FAITH

By John Greenleaf Whittier

LONG for household voices gone,
For vanished smiles I long,
But God hath led my dear ones on,
And He can do no wrong.

I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

And if my heart and flesh are weak
To bear an untried pain,
The bruised reed He will not break,
But strengthen and sustain.

No offering of my own I have,
Nor works my faith to prove;
I can but give the gifts He gave,
And plead His love for love.

And so beside the Silent Sea
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from Him can come to me
On ocean or on shore.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

O brothers! if my faith is vain,
If hopes like these betray,
Pray for me that my feet may gain
The sure and safer way.

And Thou, O Lord! by whom are seen
Thy creatures as they be,
Forgive me if too close I lean
My human heart on Thee!

THE NOSE AND THE EYES

By William Cowper

BETWEEN Nose and Eyes a strange contest arose;
The spectacles set them, unhappily, wrong;
The point in dispute was, as all the world knows,
To whom the said spectacles ought to belong.

So Tongue was the lawyer, and argued the cause,
With a great deal of skill and a wig full of learning,
While chief baron Ear sat to balance the laws—
So famed for his talent in nicely discerning.

"In behalf of the Nose, it will quickly appear
(And your lordship," he said, "will undoubtedly find)
That the Nose has the spectacles always to wear,
Which amounts to possession, time out of mind."

Then, lolding the spectacles up to the court,
"Your lordship observes, they are made with a straddle,
As wide as the ridge of the Nose is; in short,
Designed to sit close to it, just like a saddle.

"Again, would your lordship a moment suppose ('Tis a case that has happened, and may happen again
That the visage or countenance had not a Nose,
Pray, who could, or who could, wear spectacles then?

"On the whole, it appears, and my argument shows,
With a reasoning the court will never condemn,
That the spectacles, plainly, were made for the Nose,
And the Nose was as plainly, intended for them."

Then shifting his side (as a lawyer knows how),
He pleaded again in behalf of the Eyes:
But what were his arguments, few people know,
For the court did not think them equally wise.

So his lordship decreed, with a grave, solemn tone,
Decisive and clear, without one if or but,
That whenever the Nose put his spectacles on,
By daylight or candlelight—Eyes should be shut.

SONNET

By William Drummond

ACCORDING to Allibone's "Dictionary of Authors," William Drummond, commonly known as "William Drummond of Hawthornden," is distinguished as the first Scottish poet who wrote well in English. Drummond was the son of a "laird" and succeeded to the title and estates after being educated at Edinburgh and in France. He was born in 1585 and died in 1649.

I KNOW that all beneath the moon decays;
And what by mortals in this world is brought,
In time's great periods shall return to nought;
That fairest states have fatal nights and days.
I know that all the muses' heavenly lays,
With toil of sprite which are so dearly bought,
As idle sounds, of few or none are sought;
That there is nothing lighter than vain praise.
I know frail beauty's like the purple flower
To which one morn oft birth and death affords,
That love a jarring is of mind's accords,
Where sense and will bring under reason's power:
Know what I list, this all cannot me move,
But that, alas! I both must write and love.

DAY IS DYING

By George Eliot

DAY is dying! Float, O song,
Down the westward river,
Requiem chanting to the Day—
Day, the mighty Giver.

Pierced by shafts of Time, he bleeds,
Melted rubies sending
Through the river and the sky,
Earth and heaven blending;

All the long-drawn earthy banks
Up to cloud-land lifting;
Slow between them drifts the swan,
'Twixt two heavens drifting.

Wings half open, like a flower
Inly deeper flushing,
Neck and breast as virgin's pure—
Virgin proudly blushing.

Day is dying! Float, O swan,
Down the ruby river;
Follow, song, th requiem
To the mighty Giver.

Johnny—Who ever heard of an old maid named Flossie?

Papa—Yes. I guess that's a fact.

Harry—That's funny. What do they use when they want to nail campaign lies?

"Now, Johnny," said the teacher of the juvenile class, "can you tell me what human nature is?"

"Yes, ma'am," replied Johnny. "It's people before they get into society."—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Flower Girl.

At the age of six she has just had her first experience as flower girl at a wedding and has thereby accomplished an ambition of some years' standing.

"Do you know," she said after the ceremony was over and she had taken off the dress made for the occasion and put aside the large basket of flowers that she had carried so proudly up the aisle, "I would rather be a flower girl than anything else at the wedding."

"What! Rather than the bride?"

"Yes."

"But she is the chief person at a wedding."

"I know it, but the bride can be a bride only once. The flower girl can be flower girl just as often as she is asked to be."

Thereby it will be seen that this youngster is one of those who disbelieve in remarriage by the widow or widower and an enemy to divorce.—Philadelphia Press.

The Eternal Feminine.

She had been through school and college
And could write herself A. B.;
She had studied a profession,
Which had added an M. D.;
She had dwelt in college settlements
And had clear, decided views
On political developments,
And she read the daily news.
But still she remained all feminine
Despite acquired lore—
She could never meet a woman
Without noting all she wore.

Sherman Foot Loose In Georgia

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

November 16-22, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

WHEN Sherman made up his column for the march through Georgia he picked out Kilpatrick, the "Little Kill" of the eastern battlefields, to lead the single division of cavalry which would do outpost work for the moving army. Although the purpose was to avoid pitched battles on the march to the sea, the chief of the troopers was selected because he was a daring fighter. Sometimes a few squadrons of cavalry will stir up a hot fight even if the affair falls short of being a battle. And there was a fighting man on the other side of the lines to match "Little Kil"—namely, General Joe Wheeler, who led a division of Confederates on horseback.

Wheeler and Kilpatrick were both very young men, as generals go, being in their early twenties. Both had made records as daring raiders, and both had led mounted charges with all the dash and energy of one of Napoleon's heroes. The Confederate authorities knew nothing of Sherman's plans or destination, but Wheeler was looked to to keep in close touch with the moving column of Federals, oppose its march when possible and try to discover the object of this novel and audacious Yankee enterprise. Sherman's army marched in two columns—namely, the right and left wings, led by Generals O. O. Howard and General H. W. Slocum. Sherman with Slocum rode out toward Augusta, eastward, and Howard took a southerly route along the railway leading to Macon. Kilpatrick in person, with part of his command, acted as the vanguard of Howard's wing. Before he had ridden beyond the old battleground around Atlanta he struck the troopers of Wheeler's cavalry, on the watch, and pressed them back to Lovejoy's station, on the Macon road and the scene of an encounter between Sherman's men and Hood's in the previous September.

GENERAL JOE WHEELER SCOUTING IN FRONT OF SHERMAN.

Wheeler was not alone at Lovejoy's for a couple of days previous to Kilpatrick's appearance in the field General G. W. Smith, an experienced soldier from eastern battlefields, reached that point with a detachment of Georgia militia to act as support to the Confederate cavalry. Smith mustered about 2,000 men and had along three batteries of artillery. Wheeler's cavalry came riding back upon Lovejoy's the evening of Nov. 16, followed closely by Kilpatrick's boys in blue. At the same time the scouts brought in word that a Federal column had been seen ten miles to the east of Lovejoy's, marching for Macon.

Believing that he would be flanked and cut off from Macon by the enemy on the east, Smith withdrew from Lovejoy's and by a forced march reached Forsythe, thirty-five miles distant, in twenty-four hours, getting ahead of the Federals. Smith's hasty departure from Lovejoy's left that post to Wheeler, who had two brigades of cavalry and two guns. His line was formed in the old Confederate works of September. Kilpatrick attacked with a rush, dismounting his troopers and leading them on in two columns. At the first rush the Federals carried the slender works and a reserve column followed up, capturing the guns and chasing the retreating enemy out on the Macon road.

This affair at Lovejoy's was the first spirited action of the campaign, and Wheeler's troopers fought bravely against superior numbers, knowing that they had been abandoned by their supports and the position had been flanked. Kilpatrick rode on toward Macon, keeping ahead of Howard's infantry on its right flank. The column soon reached the Ocmulgee river and crossed over on two pontoon bridges brought along for the purpose. Two days were lost at the crossing, for the bank of the river was steep and slippery from recent rains. However, while the troops and trains were crossing the vanguard pushed ahead toward Macon. Kilpatrick cut loose from the column and dashed for the Georgia railroad running eastward from Macon. Just east of the city he held up a train of cars and, after destroying it, tore up a mile of track, effectually cutting Macon off from help on the east.

Meanwhile there was a speck of war on the horizon at Macon. News of Sherman's departure from Atlanta had reached the ears of General Beauregard, the Confederate commander of the district, located in northern Alabama, and also General Hardee, Confederate commander at Savannah. Beauregard had promptly ordered General Dick Taylor to take all the forces he had in Alabama into Georgia and head off Sherman. Hardee hastened in person to Macon to find out what was up in the enemy's lines. Sherman and Slocum in their eastward march threatened to strike the state capital, Augusta, and, scenting danger, Governor Brown and his adjutant, General Robert Toombs, fled to Macon. Hardee's keen insight told him that Sherman was pointing for Savannah and that the Macon region was in no danger. He ordered General Smith to march eastward and head off Sherman from Augusta, then hastened back to Savannah to get ready for battle there. He just escaped Kilpatrick's dash on the Georgia railroad.

Smith sent his men out of Macon the morning of Nov. 22 under the lead of his senior brigadier general, P. J. Phillips. Smith remained in Macon to look after ammunition and supplies, telling General Phillips to wait for him at Griswold, a few miles east of Macon. At the same time Wheeler moved off by the south and east, intending to get between Sherman and Augusta. Smith ordered Phillips to avoid battle with the Federals if he met them and work his way south to a junction with Wheeler.

At the very time that Phillips marched out of Macon eastward the advance guard of Howard's column started on the last stretch toward Gordon, a station on the railway about twenty miles east of Macon. General Wood's division brought up the rear and was approaching Griswold, the destination of Phillips. Phillips, either in his anxiety to get through to the east before the route was closed to him or because he wanted to try his mettle with the Yankees, attacked a brigade in position with vigor. This brigade, led by Colonel Walcutt, had been out on a reconnoissance toward Griswold and, seeing the enemy coming up, drew back to the crest of a hill which was flanked on either side by a swamp.

The sole approach to the hill where Walcutt's line stood was across open ground. Phillips had four brigades of infantry and two batteries, while Walcutt had but two guns. Phillips' men rushed to the attack like veterans and tried repeatedly to turn Walcutt's flanks at the swamps, but every charge was repulsed, and Phillips finally retreated after losing over 600 men killed or wounded. Walcutt lost less than 100, but was himself wounded and disabled.

Smith recalled Phillips and sent him off southward and around to Savannah by rail. The useless but heroic battle fought by Phillips was the only clash of arms of any note in Sherman's march to the sea. Wheeler also started east, swimming his troopers over the rivers encountered and keeping well off Sherman's front, where Kilpatrick followed. Before the end of the month these two lively leaders were spurring daily and hourly.

Isaiah's Message To Judah.

Isaiah almost succeeds in effacing his own personality from his message. The book is of set purpose, non-autobiographical. His history can only be idealized. He is believed to have been of royal blood, a nephew of King Uzziah, and much at the royal court. From the fact that he describes himself as in the temple court exclusively for priests, he is believed to have been of the priestly order. Some say his father was a prophet who trained his son to succeed him. His education was evidently grounded upon the sacred books of his country, and they affected his style. His description of his call, the celebrated temple scene of the sixth chapter, has never been surpassed in reverence and spirituality. His ministry was long, running through the the reign of five kings—some say forty, some sixty, some even eighty years. His very garment was a silent sermon. It was of sackcloth. His mother's character is inferred by his references to women(xlix, 15; lxvi, 12,13, and by contrast iii, 16-25). His own name is significant—"Jehovah saves." He was contemporary with Jonah, Amos, and Hosea, but younger. The story that he suffered martyrdom under Manasseh by being sawn asunder is, of course, without support.

Over against this faint and uncertain personal notation, the definiteness and power of the message is all the stronger by contrast. Prophetic authorship culminates in Isaiah. For the number and greatness of his ideas he is unapproached. Yet symmetry is maintained in manifoldness. Energy and liveliness are not wanting, yet a calm spirit of self-restraint breathes through it all. The vocabulary is rich and the diction pure. His images are striking, his representations dramatic, his antithesis pointed. Other prophets have an excellence, Isaiah had excellencies. He is a fire-tipped tongue sublime;" his nature glowing, intellect lucid, will imperious, imagination brilliant.

Amos is the only prophet who approaches Isaiah in the high polish of his style. Yet the prophet's style is just as certainly subordinate to the substance of his message as his personal history is. It is a fearful and fearless, and at the same time highly patriotic arraignment of his native land. King, nobles, priests, people are inexorably called to judgment. Charge, specifications, evidence, argument, verdict, sentence—all are here. The call to confession, contrition, and reformation; the proffer of forgiveness and cleansing; the assurance of peace and joy; the promise of personal and national security and prosperity—these, too, are all here. We seem to have stumbled upon the heart of the New Testament in the center of the Old. No wonder Isaiah is called the Fifth Evangelist.

Calvin thinks Isaiah may have affixed a synopsis of his message to the temple-door, much as Martin Luther nailed his ninety-five theses to the church-door in Wittenberg. If so, the greatest possible publicity would have been given to it and authetic copies readily made of it. But whether so or not, this was a light which could not be hid under any bushel. It was a noble, courageous, patriotic contribution to the making of better State. Nothing is kept back for the sake of court favor. "Set thine house in order, for thou shalt die and not live" is his fearless message to the king.

Each bold utterance is provoked by some impending national peril—threatened invasions of Syria, Israel, Edom, Philistia, and Assrvia He deals not so much with the past or future as with the present. He is pre-eminently the prophet of the present tense. His message has to do with current events. He does not deal with his ancestors or with posterity, but with his contemporaries. He convicts of sin, directs in duty, consoles in trouble. There is nothing tenative in his judgment, nothing equivocal in his demands. He is imperious and masterful, but at the same time statesman-like. It has been aptly said that perhaps there has never been another prophet like Isaiah, who stood with his head in the clouds and his feet on the solid earth, with his heart in the things of eternity and with mouth and hand in the things of time, with his spirit in the eternal counsel of God and his body in a very definite moment of history.

The suggestion of this particular paragraph for special study is exceedingly happy, for it is practically the the whole prophecy in epitome. "Hear, O heavens!" is a "grave and magnificent exordium," like the solemn voice of the crier in the court of heaven, calling the great arraignment. God is Plaintiff, Israel defendant, Isaiah the absorbed observer. There are three strophes—the first closing with verse ten, the second with verse eighteen, the third with verse twenty-four. There is the charge and testimony, the setting aside of the objections of Israel, the offer of reconciliation on amendment, and finally the threatened judgment which the rejection of the gracious offer makes necessary.

The Teacher's Lantern.

The very position of Isaiah in the canon is significant. Although written later that others, it yet stands first among the prophecies. Isaiah is easily first of the prophets. He is more frequently quoted in the New Testament than all the other prophets put together.

History of the prophets is absorbingly interesting. They make a brilliant galaxy from the Samuel on—men like Othniel, Gideon, and Samson, prophets of the sword, and Hosea, Joel, Amos, prophets of the pen.

History of prophecy is equally entertaining—the function and possibility of the prophetic office; how the personality of the prophet is conserved: he is not a speakihg trumpet, but a speaking man; a seer of seeing man; not so much a mechanical predictor of future events as a man with a vision of the bearing of current events upon the future.

The excellence of Isaiah's style is largely due to his great familiarity with the Hebrew Scriptures. He shows his appreciation by incorporating several hymns into his writings. We have a modern analogy in the case of John Ruskin.

By the best translation one of the favorite texts is lost at least in the former use of it. "Come, let us reason together" can no longer be used as a proof-text of the condescension of God, entering into a discussion as with an equal. It is rather an ultimatum, the voice of the judge to the accused. "Sum up the pleadings!" "Let us bring our dispute to an end."

"The ox and the ass knoweth." Jeremiah's contrast is between the sensible stork and insensible Israel. The Bible is an invaluable "Nature Book." Its observations are singularly wide, varied, minute, and accurate.

"Except the Lord had left a remnant." This historical fact of "the remnant" is the hope of every age, nation, and Church. Society always has salt. There are always those who will not bend the knee. That is the only reason why the "gates of hell" do not prevail.

Red is the most ineffaceable dye. You can not make red white without fairly destroying the fiber. But the alchemy of grace works the miracle. Special significance attaches to the words from the fact that the princes to whom they were uttered wore crimson robes.

CRITICISM OF HEALTH BOARDS

State Board Makes Plea For More Effectual Local Organization.

In the annual report of the Maryland State Board of Health the board makes a plea for more efficient local organization, and upon this point draws the following conclusions:

"Many of the incorporated towns have good charter provisions for boards of health, so that there are now fifty-three local boards of health in the state. The best of them are very good, and the poorest are very poor, some of them so inefficient that the money spent upon them is little better than wasted. Now is the time to mend this fault. If the principle of local government of counties is not to develope now, we shall in a few years find the state covered with numerous town boards of health acting under charter provisions, working independently of each other, often at variance among themselves, without definite resposibility to any central authority, and practically incapable of the co-ordinated activity upon which the safety of the state depends.

"Four Maryland counties have each had in one year more smallpox than the city of Baltimore has had in five years. Smallpox visits us but occasionally, and the damage inflicted by this disease is not worth one moment's consideration beside the harm done by common infections against which the county boards make no effort whatever. The county boards must be strengthened, and their supremacy in their political limits must be maintained. The existing method of organization of county boards of health it good and should not be disturbed.

"In practice, however, one finds that county commissioners, who compose boards of health are often quite ignorant of sanitary operations, and cannot during their short terms, become informed upon these subjects. They must appoint a physician as health officer, and they prefer that the office shall be accepted and administered. The county commissioners very rarely meet as boards of health. Many of them do not desire or expect any report from their health officers, and some of them refuse to sit at all as boards of health. The men selected as health officers are, as a rule, respectable physicians but they seldom have any practical familiarity with their official duties. After his appointment the health officer usually waits for an emergency to to begin his practical education. He learns nothing about the restriction of the common diseases always prevalent about him, for the county commissioners have not authorized him and perhaps have been forbidden him to do the simple things which are required by law.

"Unless the public mind grows excited about an unusual kind or amount of sickness, the county health officer may conclude his official term without having done his community a penny's worth of professional service and without having gained a penny's worth of knowledge or skill in sanitation. Such is the status of sanitary administration in one-third of the counties of Maryland, and it is very expensive. Let us emphasize the point that this neglect is expensive. The expense as expressed in the waste of money on the maintenance of such boards is very slight. When these idle boards are confronted with what they consider to be emergencies, it simply means that they have been caught asleep. Moreover, when they do proceed they incur much unnecessary expense and all the injurious accompaniments of haste and alarm. Even in the presence of familiar disease, such as measles, scarlet fever, diphtheria, whooping cough, typhoid fever, local health officers sometimes grow suddenly very active under stimulus of popular excitement and do very extravagant and unnecessary things.

"It would be hard to estimate the annual loss to the state from closing public schools on account of contagious diseases, but the loss is certainly greater than the amount of money paid in salaries to all the health officers in the state. It is an irrational and unnecessaay practice, and would disappear if health officers were instructed in the more definite and less expensive methods of controlling transmissable diseases. This is but an illustration of a common sort of hygiene error.

"Unwise and costly restrictions of personal liberty, disturbances of private business sometimes of the peace and comfort of whole communities, add to the cost of inexpert sanitary government. The law never intended that preventive measures should cost as much or nearly as much in time or money or discomfort as the diseases against which they are directed.

"Under the false idea that prevails some boards of health exist only for the purpose of suppressing epidemics, whereas their true function is to prevent epidemics. This notion that boards of health are merely of occasional utility is also very expensive. Our experience included the history of one small epidemic costing a county over $500, which beyond all doubt would never have occurred if the local board, actually in possession of the exact and timely information, had spent the one dollar which the emergency called for. This is a very definite instance, but we know of others where one-tenth or one-twentieth of the amount eventually spent, if applied at the right time and place, would have met every need of the situation.

"All this waste grows out of ignorance, and much of it could be avoided if we could bring the weaker boards of health in Maryland up to the level of the best boards. To do this requires but little more than that the boards shall be assembled once a year at one place, for the purpose of learning their duties, exchanging their experience and perfecting their methosd.

LETTER TO W. F. King. Oakland Md.

Dear Sir: Let's talk it right out before folks; there's nothing to hide in your business or ours; if there is, we'd better hide ourselves.

We are in trade to make money; so are you. We make it by saving our customer's money; so do you. Our object, in trade, is to save your customers' wood from rotting and iron and steel and tin from rusting; yours the same.

We work for thousands of property owners; you for a few. We can do some things that you can't do; we have the facilities. You can do some things that you can't; you are there. Let us work together; be faithful to one another. We can serve our customers better by working together and being faithful to one another.

Your dollar, put into our paint, will paint more feet than in any other way; and the paint will last longer. This saves you money, and saves your customer's money. That's all there is in our whole business.

Yours truly

The Christmas Designer.

Winter fashions as set forth in The Designer for December are stylish and essentially practical, and are augmented by three pages of charming party costumes which will prove acceptable at this season when dainty rainment is in active demand.

"Points on Dressmaking," a valuable department of the magazine, gives explicit directions for making fur collarettes and muffs of new design, and its sister department, "Lessons in Millinery," tells how to make an exquisite evening hat. The Designer caters to the woman who sews, and in addition to the above features contains this month novel Christmas gifts in which dainty needlework is a necessary factor. In the literary portion of the magazine is a holiday play for amateur production entitled "The Snow Man," "A St. Nicholas Party," an exquisite poem, "At Bethlehem," and two short stories, "A Christmas Romance," and "How Dorothy Found Santa Claus." "Making Up for Private Theatricals" is an article which will be highly appreciated by amateur actors, who seldom pay sufficient attention to this very important part of the stage business, while "The Lady and the Lunch," the first instalment of the valuable series, "In the Interest of Beauty," discourses, on a subject too often treated with carelessness. "A Christmas Alphabet Supper" is an original idea for entertainment, and droll and pretty schemes for the presentation of gifts and decoration of the Yule tree are supplied in generous quantity. In fact, the December Designer is just what a magazine should be at this season—brimful of good-will to all men, with a strong leaning toward the woman contingent.

Such is the status of sanitary administration in one-third of the counties of Maryland, and it is very expensive. Let us emphasize the point that this neglect is expensive. The expense as expressed in the waste of money on the maintenance of such boards is very slight. When these idle boards are confronted with what they consider to be emergencies, it simply means that they have been caught asleep. Moreover, when they do proceed they incur much unnecessary expense and all the injurious accompaniments of haste and alarm. Even in the presence of familiar disease, such as measles, scarlet fever, diphtheria, whooping cough, typhoid fever, local health officers sometimes grow suddenly very active under stimulus of popular excitement and do very extravagant and unnecessary things.

"It would be hard to estimate the annual loss to the state from closing public schools on account of contagious diseases, but the loss is certainly greater than the amount of money paid in salaries to all the health officers in the state. It is an irrational and unnecessaay practice, and would disappear if health officers were instructed in the more definite and less expensive methods of controlling transmissable diseases. This is but an illustration of a common sort of hygiene error.

"Unwise and costly restrictions of personal liberty, disturbances of private business sometimes of the peace and comfort of whole communities, add to the cost of inexpert sanitary government. The law never intended that preventive measures should cost as much or nearly as much in time or money or discomfort as the diseases against which they are directed.

"Under the false idea that prevails some boards of health exist only for the purpose of suppressing epidemics, whereas their true function is to prevent epidemics. This notion that boards of health are merely of occasional utility is also very expensive. Our experience included the history of one small epidemic costing a county over $500, which beyond all doubt would never have occurred if the local board, actually in possession of the exact and timely information, had spent the one dollar which the emergency called for. This is a very definite instance, but we know of others where one-tenth or one-twentieth of the amount eventually spent, if applied at the right time and place, would have met every need of the situation.

"All this waste grows out of ignorance, and much of it could be avoided if we could bring the weaker boards of health in Maryland up to the level of the best boards. To do this requires but little more than that the boards shall be assembled once a year at one place, for the purpose of learning their duties, exchanging their experience and perfecting their methosd.

The Christmas Designer.

Winter fashions as set forth in The Designer for December are stylish and essentially practical, and are augmented by three pages of charming party costumes which will prove acceptable at this season when dainty rainment is in active demand.

"Points on Dressmaking," a valuable department of the magazine, gives explicit directions for making fur collarettes and muffs of new design, and its sister department, "Lessons in Millinery," tells how to make an exquisite evening hat. The Designer caters to the woman who sews, and in addition to the above features contains this month novel Christmas gifts in which dainty needlework is a necessary factor. In the literary portion of the magazine is a holiday play for amateur production entitled "The Snow Man," "A St. Nicholas Party," an exquisite poem, "At Bethlehem," and two short stories, "A Christmas Romance," and "How Dorothy Found Santa Claus." "Making Up for Private Theatricals" is an article which will be highly appreciated by amateur actors, who seldom pay sufficient attention to this very important part of the stage business, while "The Lady and the Lunch," the first instalment of the valuable series, "In the Interest of Beauty," discourses, on a subject too often treated with carelessness. "A Christmas Alphabet Supper" is an original idea for entertainment, and droll and pretty schemes for the presentation of gifts and decoration of the Yule tree are supplied in generous quantity. In fact, the December Designer is just what a magazine should be at this season—brimful of good-will to all men, with a strong leaning toward the woman contingent.

A HANGING IN THE OLDEN TIME.

How William Crist Barterd His Body for Gingerbread.

WITH THE MILITARY AND MUSIC

He Went To Eternity—The Crime for Which He Was Hung Was Committed On Dog Ridge Near Selbysport.

Quite recently there was published in a Baltimore paper an account of the murder trial and execution of George Swearinger for wife murder. He was hung, as is well known historically in Cumberland in 1829. Richard Beall being sheriff and executioner. This was the first case of administering the extreme penalty of the law in Allegany county. There are yet just a few who saw the awful scene.

The next case of the kind was William Crist, who was tried for the murder of Abraham Frey in 1843, and was convicted at the October court of that year, and hanged the following month in Cumberland. It was a case of great interest and created quite a sensation at the time. It is believed your many readers would be glad and even benefited by reading a truthful and reliable account or history of this noted case, now personally remembered by only a few spared ones. It is, therefore, proposed by one of that smal! few to write up the occurrence in the interest of and on the lines of history.

The murder was committed on Dog Ridge, Selbysport district, now Garrett county, in the early fall of 1843. Crist's victim's head was crushed with a large stone and his dead body placed behind a log and covered over with leaves. He was found a few days later. Suspicions at once fell upon the guilty party. He skipped over the line to a little hamlet known as Clarklevsburg, Fayette county, Pa. A warrant was issued by the local justice of the peace and placed in the hands of Richard Fairall, constable of the district. He was brave and determined in the discharge of his official duties, and when he got on the track of the murderer he did not stop at the southern brink of Mason and Dixon line, but passed over by a few miles and captured his man and brought him back to the local authorities. No point was ever made as the legality or illegality of the arrest. The constable was not forgotten for his courageous work. Here is what the Maryland legislature did for him at its December session, 1843, chapter 14: "Be it enacted, by the General Assembly of Maryland that the Commissioners of Allegany county be and they are hereby authorfzed to levy the sum of $30 and pay the same to Richard Fairall on account of his expenses incurred by him in the hanging of William S. Crist, the murderer of Abraham Frey."

The motive or cause for this foul murder was a woman, Elizabeth Frey, the wife of the slain man. She was indicted with Crist as accessory before the fact, at the same term of court, but was acquitted after the principal had been tried and convicted. The same counsel acted in her case. Womanly sympathy aided in her acquittal.

The grand jury who found these indictments were William Shaw, foreman; David Scott, Dudley Lee, Leonard Shircliff, David Hinkle, Jasper Robinette of A., Hanson Brown (brother of the author of this paper), William Athey, Archibald Casteel, Godfrey Fazenbaker, George M. Blocher, Jasper Warnick, Wm. Chambers, Mathias Duckworth, Johnathan Rinehart, William Stanton, James Chisholm, Jeremiah Tasker, John L. Browning, Henry Sanbower and Cornelius Kight.

The jury that tried the case were Jacob Rice, foreman; Charles Norris, Moses Porter, Thomas W. Dawson, Owen McElfish (the last survivor died only a few years ago), Martin Rizer, Sl[illegible]ry Hammill, James Twigg, Rubin d[illegible]ley, O. S. Crampton, James H. Hoblitzell and William Hoblitzell. They came to a just verdict without difficulty or delay, tho' the evidence was what the law calls circumstantial, and a strong defense was made by two able lawyers, Wm. Price, in his full professional manhood, with a splendid reputation, and George A. Pearre, in his rapid ascension to professional prominence. The prosecution was ably conducted by Hanson B. Pigman, State's Attorney, and William V. Buskirk, a brilliant lawyer, and an unfortunate one. In poverty and dispair, only two years later, he blew his brains out with a shotgun and bespattered the wall of the courthouse wherein they had given inspiration and voice to his eloquence.

State's Attorney Pigman was in delicate health. A few years after the noted trial made a sea voyage to the West Indies for the benefit of his health, but he died in the Carribean seas. The witnesses in the case for the State were John Slicer, Thomas Frey, Mary Hawk, Rachel Moore, Caroline Myer, John Dillinger, John Griffith, Hilton Frantz, Richard Fairall, Mary A. Frey, G. W. Frazee, John Frantz, of Jos., Aaron Frazee, George Springer, Rubin Springer, Thomas Huff and Squire Huttan.

The court who heard the case were the Buchannans and Abraham Shriver. Acting Clerk John Beall, Sheriff, Norman Bruce, his deputy, Edward Gilpin; State's Attorney Hanson, Briscoe and Pigman; the jailer or turnkey, Charles Brace, father of Theodore Brace, who was a few years ago one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Missouri.

The writer at the time referred to was in his last teens, but owing to the old friendship between his family and that of the sheriff (Norman Bruce) he was allowed special privileges. In the night before the execution, the generous sheriff invited him to go with the sheriff to the cell of the doomed man in the antiquated jail of the county.

There he sat with his iron bracelets and hobbles upon him smoking his pipe with no apparent concern about the dread realities of the morrow. The kindly sheriff drew from his pocket a pair of low shoes, pumps as they were called in those days, and asked the man of death whether they would answer for the purposes of "tomorrow?"

"Oh, yes, they are nicer than necessary."

At his elbow was a dark coffin and on its flat top a pile of ginger bread, sufficient to treat a country school at a holiday. He was a great lover of this kind of food, it was as tobacco to him.

The story was he sold his body to the doctors for as much of this bread as he needed during the few remaining days of his life. The doctors certainly carried out their part of the contract as to the cakes. And the other side of it was made good during the night of the day of execution. The body was operated upon with a galvanic battery, such as was then in use. was reported some little twitching of the nerves and muscles were produced, but no life or sensibility recalled.

At the appointed hour, the willing, but guilty man was taken from the "old jail" by the ministers of the law to the deathly drop at the selected spot—a large platform with an extensive drop or leaf on hinges, held up by a rope over a beam fastened to a post in the rear. The severnance of the rope by the sheriff with a hatchet caused the drop to fall from under the feet of the man, and in this way he was hurled into eternity. He struggled long and hard, and his death was a painful one. His neck was not broken as there was but little fall as the neck rope reached to the beam. It was said that his neck was not broken purposely, so as to furnish the doctors with a good subject for their experiments upon a dead body, but they were failures.

The wretched man had for a considerable time to face a vast multitude of people from the platform to see him expiate his crime upon the gallows. He appeared to be the calmest of all; sat upon the deadly drop in a devout manner while the religious exercises were conducted. He had tobacco in his mouth and a number of times arose from his seat to cast his spittle beyond the new planks of the platform which was so soon to drop from under him, and which he did not wish to soil. Here was politeness in the worst of men, even in the direst extremity. He even aided the sheriff in adjusting the fatal rope and the cap that was to screen a distorted face from the multitude. He joined in singing an old time hymn in a voice louder than all others. He was a large and powerful man, his loud voice chanted the following:

This is the way I long have sought,
And mourned because I found it not.

This was certainly a remarkable incident upon such an occasion. Of course he had no agent in the selection of the hymn. The ministers who officiated were Rev. Prettyman and Rev. Peter L. Wilson, of the Methodist church.

A disagreeable incident. Among the crown was Micheal Crist, a brother of the victim. He happened to be within the sight and hearing of the writer, who heard the one-eyed brother say at the supreme moment: "That is a hard sight after all," and a little later: "My $5 are gone."

It appeared the disappointed brother came down from the mountains of Somerset county to see whether he could in some way get the coveted claim.

After the doctors were done with the body it in some way fell into the hands of Joe Shoemaker, a man of much more notoriety than reputatoin. He flaved it and tanned the hide into leather and cut it up into small bits for sale. Saw a small piece—quite white and thick as shoe leather. It was said after the human leather was exhausted the leather from a sheep skin was substituted for the genuine article. All this was disgusting and barbarous in the extreme. It occurred just sixty-one years ago in this very month. The like would not be tolerated now, glad to say.

No doubt it will appear strange to many persons of this day to learn that upon the occasion described there was a military company, known as the Cumberland Guards, probably more for display than necessity. There yet survives one member, the venerable Jno. B. Widener, 86 next Christmas day. He has seen or knows of all the seven executions in old Allegany. Another strange feature of this strange exhibition (so it may be called) was a band of music at the platform, which played some religious melodies. The late Prof. Michael Weisel was the instructor of these instrumental musicians. One of the band yet survives to describe the scene, George F. Gephart. He was then hurrying out of his teens. So was the author of these reminiscenses.

In those days executions were something in the way of great exhibitions or shows, which were anxiously and eagerly waited for and attended in great masses by the people. But not so in later years. By wise and suitable legislation by our State, they are now consummated privately within the walls of prisons. So it should be.

The purpose of this carefully and plainly prepared paper without any effort for show or sensation, was to add something to the treasures of histogic matter for Allegany county's future historian. J. B.

REPUBLICANS CARRY THE STATE

The Official Returns Show That Roosevelt and Fairbanks Have a Plurality of 344.

Official returns from Worcester and Charles counties have been received at last, over one week after the official count in every county was completed, and they show that seven Democrats and one Republican will represent Maryland in the electoral college. The official returns will now go to the State Board of Canvassers, which must meet within 30 days after the election to promulgate the result in the state.

Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte is the one Republican elected, he having received more votes even than any Democrat. His plurality over Brown, Democrat, is 344, which also shows that Roosevelt and Fairbanks carried the state by that plurality. Mr. Bonaparte ran so much further ahead of his colleagues than ex-Governor Brown ahead of his Democratic colleagues that all the Democrats are able to slip in between the leading Republicans and the others. The lowest Democratic vote was received by Mr. T. Herbert Shriver, who drops out to give place to Mr. Bonaparte, but Mr. Shriver's vote was 312 ahead of Mr. Bretz's, the next highest Republican after Mr. Bonaparte. Mr. Shriver is beaten by Mr. Mudd, Democrat, by one vote. The final result in the state is as follows:

CANDIDATES ELECTED.

Bonaparte, (Rep.)	110,088
Brown, (Dem.)	109,744

RACE ISSUE FIGHT ON IN MARYLAND.

Democratic Machine Opens Up the Last Phase of a Forbidding Struggle.

WARFIELD FIRM AGAINST MEASURE

The Law, If Such It Be, Will Probably Eliminate 50,000 Voters in the State—The Machine Being Overworked.

Unmindful of the lesson taught by the election of November 8, the Democratic machine has determined upon one last desperate play to maintain its control of the party in Maryland.

Chairman Murray Vandiver, of the State Central Committee, has officially demanded, in a letter to Governor Warfield, that his Excellency advertise the negro disfranchising act passed by the last Legislature to the end that it may have a place on the official ballot at the next general election, which will take place in 1905. This bill, when it was learned that Governor Warfield would veto it, was not submitted to him, but was sent to the clerk of the Court of Appeals. That the Governor will not grant the request of Mr. Vandiver is certain, and his reply will be a stinging rebuke to the machine.

The result of the last election, in the minds of the best element of the party, settled the negro question in Maryland. The negroes in many counties displayed sufficient intelligence to vote the trick ballots, and the Democrats came within 300 votes of losing the state.

But the machine is in a bad way. The prestige of Senator Gorman, in this last election, has suffered a stroke that in the minds of his opponents was the finishing blow to his career. The machine realizes that its sun has set unless 60,000 negro voters can be absolutely eliminated from participation in elections. Hence a fight has been begun that for the next six months is bound to attract the attention of the nation to Maryland politics.

In anticipation of the refusal of Governor Warfield to promulgate the order for the submission of the constitutional amendment to the people, the state and the machine have engaged counsel, and the next move will be to mandamus the Governor. This will go to one of the circuit courts of the state, but whatever the decision, it will immediately be carried to the Court of Appeals. The machine openly asserts that the decision in their favor is as good as rendered now.

The main question for the courts to pass upon is whether a bill passed by the Legislature can become a law in the face of the refusal of the Governor to approve the measure. Leading lawyers of the state disagree on the point and a great legal fight over the question will be made. The state will be represented by Attorney General Bryan and Edgar H. Gans, both of them lawyers of the very highest standing. The machine will be represented by John P. Poe, the author of the amendment, and by several other lawyers of learning and ability.

The amendment which the machine will move heaven and earth to cause to be submitted to the people, under the guise of a negro disfranchising measure, constitutes the most iniquitous attempt ever made in any state to perpetuate the rule of a political close corporation. Here are the clauses that "mean business":—

Every male citizen of the United States having the above qualifications of age and residence shall be entitled to be registered so as to become a qualified voter, if he be

First—A person able to read any section of the Constitution of this state submitted to him by the officers of registration and to give a reasonable explanation of the same, or if unable, from physical disability, to read such section, able to understand and give a reasonable explanation thereof when read to him by the registration officers; or

Second—A person who on the 1st day of January, 1869, or prior thereto was entitled to vote under the laws of this state or any other state of the United States wherein he then resided; or Third—Any male lineal descendant of such last mentioned persons.

No person not thus qualified by coming under some one of the above descriptions shall be entitled to be registered as a qualified voter nor be entitled to vote.

The second and third clause of the infamous measure encompass the "grandfather clause" plan of disfranchisement and of itself, if not modified by the preceding clause, would probably eliminiate 50,000 colored voters in Maryland. But this "grandfather clause sinks into insignificance beside the iniquity that could and doubtless would be perpetrated under the provisions of the first section. On the face of it, to unthinking people, this section contains what might be called a "square deal" for the colored voter, on the ground that if he had advanced far enough in education to meet the requirement of being able to read and explain the constitution of his state, the "misfortune of birth" would not act as a bar to his exercising his right of franchise.

But that is just where the mistake creeps in. The innocent words "give a reasonable explanation," secretes the conspiracy by which the machine hopes to retain its grasp on the state.

Who are the judges of whether the "explanation" is a reasonable one or not?

The registration officers, of course.

And who appoints the registration officers?

The machine, of course.

In a word, the officers of registration become the absolute determining power of the right of citizens to vote.

Can the amendment carry? It is an exceedingly doubtful proposition. Baltimore city, with its large cosmopolitan population, is counted upon to give from 20,000 to 30,000 against it. In the city there are at least 15,000 naturalized citizens, who under this amendment would be disfranchised. They would have to stand the "educational test." They could not do it. In Baltimore, also, is the greatest opposition to Senator Gorman. On this ground alone the independent Democrats to a man may be counted upon to vote against the amendment.

On the whole the rural communities may be expected to support the measure. They want relief from the negro in their town, and county affairs. They argue that, as they pay practically all the taxes, the shiftless portion of the community should have no say as to public expenditures.

Yesterdar (Wednesday) afternoon at a little after two o'clock the Death Angel stole silently into the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Offutt Miller on Alder street and gently wafted the spirit of Mr. Miller into the presence of the One who gives life and claims it at the allotted time.

The deceased has been a great and uncompiaining sufferer since early in the spring when he was attacked with an ailment which for a time puzzled his physicians but later pronounced as pernicious anemia or impoverishment of the blood.

Mr. Miller was engaged in the merchandise business in Oakland for a number of years, prior to which time he clerked for Mr. Daniel E. Offutt, his uncle, and later for Mr. George W. Legge when the latter was actively in business.

About twelve years ago he was married to Miss Ella Peddicord, daughter of Mr. Thomas J. Peddicord, of Oakland. He was a son of Mrs. S. M. Miller, proprietress of the Commercial Hotel. His wife, mother, one brother and six sisters survive him.

Mr. Miller was well and favorably known in Oakland and all sections of Garrett county. He had built up a lucrative business by his strict and honorable dealing, his place of business being located on Oak street where he recently completed a large and vesy handsome store building.

No arrangements have as yet been made for the funeral.

Aunt Cassandra's ...Fan

By... Harriet Whitney Durbin

Copyright, 1904, by Harriet Whitney Durbin

Sister Evelyn said she thought it was very inconsiderate of me to fall out with Joe the day before her wedding, seeing we were to be bridesmaid and groomsman, Joe and I.

It was no very serious matter we disagreed about. Indeed, the primal cause thereof is somewhat misty to me now. I can, however, recall that Joe was on his "who but me" behavior for a considerable time, and when I scorchingly demanded who he was anyway he became sarcastically humble and said, "Oh, nobody; only a worm," after which he grew top lofty again and observed that at any rate he was a self respecting worm and wouldn't be stamped on.

"I wanted every one to be amiable on my wedding day," plainted Evelyn, "and if you and Joe don't stop spatting you'll never be married yourselves."

"Well, then," I said, "the world will have one quarrelsome couple the less." And I began to sing. Yet in my heart I knew that I was giving Evelyn a bluff, for I was already repenting of my saippiness, and my panoply of pride would have gone all to tatters at a soft word from Joe. He didn't seem inclined to speak it, however, and I was determined not to make my eyes red and my nose glossy for Eve's wedding. So I went around with a stiff spine and my teeth tight together.

Evelyn was the first of us girls to flit from the home nest, and naturally we were all a bit exercised over the flight. Father's jokes were supposed to be spontaneous, as usual, but somehow the stitches showed, and mother, like Kathleen Bawn, had "a smile on her lip and a tear in her eye." But it took Aunt Cassandra to turn good and sentimental. I am her namesake, and I am sentimental, too, but I could not possibly sentimentalize about Uncle Jason. Not that I mean to disparage him, for he is gone from earth and was a good man while here, but he did have such a long neck. And from the latest recollection I had of him there was about as much romance in him as in a barn door. Nevertheless, Evelyn's preparations reminded Aunt Cassandra of the day before her own wedding, and when I wandered into her room seeking diversion I found her holding pensive communion with the souvenirs in her middle bureau drawer.

That drawer, with its quaint contents, was an object of immense interest to me. It brought up slices of a past before my entrance into the world. There were in its depths many odds and ends of the pomps and vanities with which Aunt Cassandra had adorned herself in her youthful days. There was a pair of balloon-like undersleeves, fine and soft, with narrow embroidered bands, all faintly yellow and scented with some old flower fragrance like musk rose leaves. There was a string of coral beads. There was a curious, flat, black bead bracelet, an old lace bertha, and there was a sacred little black case with a snap fastening in which were two photographs, one of Uncle Jason and one of Aunt Cassandra, taken soon after their marriage. They were of that old fashioned style in which you see nothing at first but a square of shiny glass which you have to tip about this way and that before you can distinguish the photograph.

"OH, JOE, JOE!" I GURGLED AS HE CAUGHT ME UP TIGHT.

There were other objects of interest in that drawer, but chief of all to me was a yellowish white fan of satin and ivory.

"I'm going to will you that some day," auntie said, seeing my wistful gaze.

"I wish you would," I replied, "and in the meantime I wish you would lend it to me for the present occasion. It will go so beautifully with that old yellow lace mamma gave me."

"Take it," auntie said pensively. "And now run away, like a good little girl. I am wandering in the past today."

I saw nothing of my recreant Joe until the next day. He came early and made himself useful telephoning for things. I saw him a few minutes. I had left auntie's fan lying on the back parlor table, and when I ran down for it there was Mr. Joe idly twiddling the fan in his fingers.

"I am sorry I have to trouble you for my fan, Mr. Harley," I said sedately. He handed it over with a most stately bow, and I fled in confusion. When I had got my bridesmaid toggery on I whirled open the marvelous bit of carved ivory and old satin, and as I did so my eye alighted on two lines faintly penciled on the soft, creamy satin:

Dear Cass—Will you forgive me—say?
For I'm your ever faithful J.

Ah, J., best beloved J.! It only needed that scrap of apology to send the penitent tears rolling out of my eyes. Down I flew, pellmell, and landed in J.'s arms at the foot of the stairs.

"Oh, Joe, Joe!" I gurgled as he caught me up so tight the end of his necktie nearly went down my throat. "I've been so hateful. Of course we'll forgive each other and be friends once m-m-more, won't we?" Here I crushed the white carnation he wore in his buttonhole, but he did not mind—just kissed me quite recklessly until a door in the hall opened and father's head stuck out.

"I hear geese," he announced, whereupon one of the geese flew upstairs.

All that I can tell about Evelyn's wedding is that it was the sweetest wedding that ever happened, except one which followed on its heels shortly after.

When I returned Aunt Cassandra's fan I gave her two extra hugs. "It's a magic fan," I said and kissed it.

"It is a magic fan," she assented, "and if it helped you make up your tiff with Joseph it's the second time it's been a peacemaker. Oh, dear, how well I remember my first quarrel with your Uncle Jason before we were married!" Auntie had a dreamy, far in the past expression on her good little face, and I knew she was reveling in her old romance. I shall always maintain that Uncle Jason was an exemplary man, but could any one for a moment compare him to Joe? Why, who but Joe would ever think of mending a misunderstanding by means of a beautiful couplet on a fan? Connect Uncle Jason with anything like that bit of sentiment! I was waxing indignant at the idea when Aunt Cassandra spoke again:

"Do you see those two lines about in the center of the fan, Cassie, in pencil? Well, Jason and I had not spoken for nearly a week, though we were anxious to make up our quarrel. One evening at a party I left my fan—this one—lying upon a table. I saw Jason fooling with it, but I didn't notice what he was doing. After awhile, when I got possession of it again, I saw those lines: 'Dear Cass, will you forgive me—say?' Why, what's the matter, Cassie? You look as if you were going to explode."

For a moment I thought I was; then I almost shrieked; then I almost wept, but what I did do finally was to tumble back on the bed and laugh. And therein I considered that I showed wisdom, for after all, were not Joe and I just as firmly relinked by Uncle Jason's muse as we could have been by Joe's?

"I'm a bit light headed, that's all," I said as I got up and kissed aunty. "Uncle Jason was a real poet and a dear besides."

Higher Mathematics.

James Hogan was no doubt an important person in Branbury, as he was the only man who could be hired to saw and split wood or to use a lawn mower. He never lost a chance to impress this fact upon a casual listener.

"I've got to get through this job for your ma quick as ever I can," he announced to the small son of one of his employers. "I'm losing 60 cints an hour right along every minute I'm here. There's three folks waiting for me now, and I don't know how they're going to get along till tomorrow without me, anny one of 'em."

"Why, Mr. Hogan," said the boy respectfully, "I don't see how you're losing 60 cents an hour when mother pays you 20, and you couldn't be but in one place and"—

"Have you got as far as geomethry in your studies?" inquired Mr. Hogan coldly, resting his arms on the handle of the lawn mower.

"N-no, sir," admitted the boy.

"Whin you do, you'll understand a good manny things that's hid from you now," said Mr. Hogan, resuming his leisurely progress over the lawn.—Youth's Companion.

Misquotations.

"'When Greek meets Greek, then comes the tug of war,'" said a young man.

"You are wrong in that quotation," his companion objected. "That is one of a number of famous sayings that are misquoted always. It is from Nathaniel Lee, and its right reading is, 'When Greeks joined Greeks, then was the tug of war.'

"Another misquotation is, 'It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good.' This is from Thomas Tasser, a sixteenth century worthy, and it should run, 'It's an ill wind that turns none to good.'

"'Out of sight, out of mind,' is from Lord Brooke, but it was 'Out of mind as soon as out of sight' as Lord Brooke wrote it.

"'First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen' should run, 'First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his fellow citizens.' This famous sentence is from a resolution laid before the house of representatives in 1799 by General Richard Lee."

Valuable Sheep's Head.

Butchers of Bethnal Green, London, were surprised recently at the sudden popularity of sheep's heads with their customers. They could not begin to supply the demand. Inquiry developed the fact that gold had been found in the teeth of the sheep which had been shipped in cold storage from Australia. The sheep evidently came from some region where there are gold outcroppings on the surface, and close grazing left some of the particles in the teeth of the sheep. An attempt will be made to ascertain from what region the sheep were shipped.

The Great Destiny of America

By Count APPONYI of Hungary

THROUGH the gigantic St. Louis international exhibition America advances some steps more toward that leadership in the material world AND IN THE WORLD OF IDEAS which seems to be her glorious destiny. In the world of material interests her powerful competition may be felt as a hardship in old Europe, but in the world of ideas her influence is wholly and recognizedly beneficial. Realizing that distinction between the realms of matter and of ideals, I cannot but give expression to a patriotic soreness of heart at seeing my own country, my Hungary, so poorly represented in the world's fair. It is entirely our own fault, and nobody else is to blame for it, if we neglected this grand occasion for showing what advance Hungary has made in agriculture, manufacturing, art, public instruction and all kinds of useful work since her great revival, which dates from hardly more than four decades.

I came to you in a congenial state of mind, with heart open to the moral wonders of your country, still greater in our eyes than her MATERIAL ACHIEVEMENTS. What impressed me most, personally, in the intercourse which I had with plain workingmen as well as with the master spirits of the country was the fact that nowhere on the globe was the moral as well as the material standards of life, the well being as well as the dignity of our poorer brother, SO HIGH AND SO SAFE as in this country, and that makes her a noble sight to the world—not the wonders of her industry, not the palaces of her millionaires, but the consciousness of the greatest possible comfort to the greatest possible number of men as being THE CHIEF AIM OF ORGANIZED SOCIETY. This it was that went directly to my heart.

Another phenomenon, probably the offspring of the former one, is the simple self reliance, the refreshing optimism, which pervades every individual, PERVADES THE WHOLE COUNTRY—the faith in the inexhaustible resources of democracy to cure its own shortcomings by the power residing in it for man as well as for community.

Democracy is really power because IT IS TRUTH. All other organizations are fictions. The truth is that out of the work, out of the thrift, out of the toil of the many, springs the power of the nation. If the formal attributes of power are taken away from that reality of it, then fiction reigns and truth re-enters into possession of her own only when the form of power IS GIVEN BACK to those in whom all of its essence resides. You here in America are making the greatest experiment of true democratic government the world has ever seen; you make it on behalf of the whole world, which tends toward that goal. And if we follow with peculiar interest the lot of those who emigrate to your shores from our own countries, and to whom we are bound by the natural ties of consanguinity and common history, we do so NOT IN A SPIRIT OF INTOLERANCE as if we should like them to be anything else but true citizens of the country with which they have thrown in their lots.

We do it actuated in the first instance by an indestructible feeling of kinship, but we do it chiefly because in their ability to thrive on this democratic soil we see good forebodings of the adaptability of our race to the form of human society of which you are the standard bearers, but which will be universal ere many years are gone.

Qualifications of the Teacher

By WILLIAM H. MAXWELL, Superintendent of Schools, New York City

THE first of the qualifications required of persons seeking entrance to the teaching profession is SOUND PHYSICAL HEALTH. For some years there was no provision in Brooklyn that intending teachers should be subjected to any test of their physical fitness for the work of teaching. I well remember that when I proposed that such a test should be made in the case of applicants for teachers' licenses the proposition was received with coldness by the then board of education, with derision by the Brooklyn press and with something like indignation by those members of the teaching force who express their views in anonymous letters to the newspapers. I mention this incident because it is highly significant of the TRANSFORMATION that has taken place during the last seven years in public feeling toward matters educational. Now no one objects to the physical test. The pension law is no doubt largely responsible for this change in public opinion.

But there is a more vital reason for the physical test than the financial interests either of the city or of the teachers. It is wrong to place in charge of children a person who cannot lead in physical training exercises, or who cannot endure the nervous strain of class room work, or whose natural sweetness of disposition may be permanently soured, or whose intellectual resources may be impaired by the ravages of disease.

IMITATION IS THE STRONGEST NATURAL FORCE IN THE EDUCATION OF THE CHILD.

The second essential qualification for admission to the teaching profession is sound and extensive scholarship. The law of this state fixes the minimum of scholarship by requiring graduation from an approved high school before entrance may be obtained to a city training school. As our high schools progress, as I trust they will, to cover in their curriculum the work of the first two years of the average college this law will gradually become EVEN A GREATER SUPPORT than it is at present to the standards set for admission to the teaching profession.

The third great element in the teacher's preparation is professional training. This large field includes logic, psychology, the science of education, the history of education and methodology. I invite your attention only to four phases of professional training which, in my judgment, have received too little attention in the past—physical training, child study, appreciation of the great teachers AND THE SELECTION OF TOPICS.

PATION

Stronger Than Hate

By Frank H. Sweet

Copyright, 1901, by Frank H. Sweet

"Halt!"

The command rang out sharply, and the figure skulking through the rice field hesitated, then turned and came slowly toward the sentinel. It was clad in the uniform of a common soldier.

The sergeant of the guard was near, and to him the man was transferred and taken directly to the tent of the commanding officer.

"A deserter, your distinguished highness," the sergeant reported, saluting.

The officer looked up from a chessboard on which he had been maneuvering men in lines of battle. He was a strong, handsome fellow, with a hard face. As his eyes fell upon the prisoner he started slightly.

"You, Kurino?" he exclaimed.

The prisoner smiled satirically.

"Even I, Shithiro," he answered, "though I suppose I ought to add 'noble and distinguished highness' now that you are an officer."

The other waved his hand impatiently.

"You may go," he said to the sergeant. "I wish to speak with the prisoner alone a few minutes." Then as the sergeant withdrew, "You understand what this involves?"

"Of course," coldly. "Deserting is death."

"Yes, death," grimly. "And I will see that the penalty is paid tomorrow morning at sunrise. But, greater than death, you have the disgrace of deserting. That will go with you into the grave and out to darken the thoughts of all your friends."

Kurino threw back his head scornfully, his eyes flashing.

"That is a lie, Shithiro," he said, "and you know it. I am not a deserter. I am not even a part of your miserable command. I am a Korean and was seized and forced into your company unlawfully. I have taken no oath and made no promise, and it is not deserting for me to get away if I can."

Shithiro's hard face did not change.

"Tomorrow morning at sunrise," he repeated. "In cases of desertion the army has no time for sentiment. It would not be safe. There are too many dissatisfied soldiers who are ready to follow a bad example. You were seized on Japanese soil among other men whose duty it was to be in the army. Your name is on the roll, and you have tried to desert. That is enough."

"IT IS FOR NUYAMA. I LOVE HER TOO."

"So it seems. But you know why I was on Japanese soil."

"To see the daughter of Laio," slipped involuntarily from the officer. He bit his lips.

"Yes," boldly, "to see Nuyama, the daughter of Laio, the great merchant of Miyaz. It was with her father's consent, and we were to be married in a month. It lacks but four days now. That is why I tried to get away, for you have prevented my sending any word." He was silent a moment, then went on contemptuously: "You could not harm me in my own country, Shithiro, for I am more powerful there than you are here. So you took this way. You thought I could be removed from your path in battle. But my trying to leave makes it easier. Now you can kill me at sunrise and have it appear a duty, and you will try to advance your interests by what you call my disgrace. But it will be all feathers in a gale," his voice commenced to ring. "I know Laio, and I know Nuyama, and they will not change. Nuyama has said she loves me, and she will continue to love me in spite of all that you and the world may do, for that is a woman's way.

"You will seek to win her father; seek to win her without her father, perhaps, as you have already tried, but it will be useless. And if you try to win her through what you call my disgrace she will hate you, hate you, Shithiro, I know. Yes," at the sudden whitening of the officer's face, "and you know too. Nuyama is a goddess among women, and I would rather die with her love than live with her hate. You may do your worst."

Shithiro's hand trembled visibly as he raised it to his eyes to shade them for a moment from the other's gaze.

"You are mistaken, Kurino," he said at length in a low voice. "I did not have you seized, as you think. I did not even know you were in my company until a few days ago.

"When I discovered you were here, though, I admit I was glad. It put you out of my path temporarily, and there was the chance of your being killed. And now this mistake of yours has solved that part of the problem permanently. I am not having you pay the penalty because you are in my path, mind, but because you are a deserter. Any man in the army would suffer the same. But in this case," frankly, "I am glad, though," a note of doubt coming into his face, "perhaps I shall not speak of your disgrace to Nuyama and her father. I may concede you that mercy."

Kurino smiled understandingly.

Shithiro saw the smile, and his face darkened.

"Malu!" he called harshly.

The sergeant entered.

"Take this prisoner to the guardhouse and watch him closely. Have everything ready for the execution at sunrise."

In the guardhouse, with the curious, unfriendly eyes no longer watching him, Kurino's scornful composure vanished. He squatted upon the earthen floor, with his eyes fixed drearily upon the little square hole through which fell a shaft of light. The hole was too small for him to squeeze through, and there was a double guard outside the door. This was to be the end not only of his political advancement in Korea, but of that sweeter possibility which he had won and must now lose.

The hours dragged by until from the shifting light he knew that it was after midnight. Then the door opened and some one came in. He did not even turn. It was a guard solicitous of his safety or perhaps come to mock him.

"Kurino!" a voice called.

Kurino sprang to his feet, wondering, for in the voice was the same dreary hopelessness that he had been feeling.

"Shithiro!" he exclaimed.

"Yes. I—I have been thinking it over, and it is as you say. Nuyama would hate me. Here," thrusting a paper into Kurino's hand, "it is an honorable discharge from the army. It will pass you through the lines. Now go!"

"What!" incredulously. "You let me go free?"

"Yes, yes," more harshly. "But it is not for you. It is for Nuyama. I—I love her too. I would rather die than for her to think ill of me. Now go! Go! Go!"

At the door Kurino looked back involuntarily. Shithiro was squatted upon the earthen floor, gazing hopelessly at the little square hole through which the light dropped.

A Long Time Between.

When Thomas B. Reed was in California on one occasion he visited the Lick observatory on Mount Hamilton. It was a wonderful November day, full of gold and the bloom of flowers. Mr. Reed looked down at the gorgeous landscape 4,000 feet below, and, turning to one of his hosts, he said:

"Colonel, this looks too much like a special display got up in honor of the occasion. Tell me what a typical winter day in California is really like."

The Californian thought at once of a day in February so warm that after a morning bath he had lain in a hammock outdoors, smelled the roses on the trellis and listened to the trill of the meadow lark among the almond blooms.

He began to describe it eloquently. "Thirteen years ago, on Feb. 22, I took a bath"—

He paused to arrange his account of the roses and the meadow lark. Mr. Reed broke the pause.

"Well, colonel," he said in admiration, "you do know something about cleanliness out here, don't you?"

Marked by Their Occupation.

"A man's occupation," said a magistrate, "marks him so unmistakably that I can tell at a glance what he does for a living.

"There is, for instance, the violinist. You can tell a violinist from the fact that he carries his head on one side. The groom and the cavalryman have bow legs, and when they stand still they hold their legs wide apart, as though there were a horse between them.

"The painter may be detected by the mark of the palette hole on his thumb. The pianist's enormous hands identify him. From constant practice they become abnormal. Weber, you know, could stretch two octaves.

"Men that work amid the vapors of mercury, copper and arsenic have a green mucous membrane and greenish hair and skin. The players of flutes and clarinets have thick, distended cheeks and tough, leathery lips.

"The scrubbers of floors have swollen knees, and often, afflicted with the disease called housemaid's knee, they limp."—New York Press.

The Return.

"Oh, Clarence, darling, so you are home at last?"

"Yes, my precious wife. And how deliciously sweet it is to be here!"

"What ages it has been!"

"Yes, dearest, hasn't it? I thought the time would never pass!"

"I thought so, too, darling. Clarence, I don't believe you've changed a mite since you went away. It is marvelous!"

"And you, dear one, look quite as familiar as ever. I declare I should have recognized you anywhere."

"And the house—does it look familiar too?"

"I declare it does, though it seems a long, long dream since I saw it last."

"Clarence!"

"Ethel!"

Cataclysm.

Then this young pair spent the rest of the evening renewing acquaintance with everything, for it was the first day he had gone back to the office after the wedding trip.—Virginia Niles Leeds in Life.

Bowser Acts Quickly

He Suddenly Decides to Go to the World's Fair and Brooks No Delays, but His Mother-in-law Arrives and Vetoes His Plan.

[Copyright, 1901, by T. C. McClure.]

THERE were animation and enthusiasm in Mr. Bowser's demeanor at the dinner table the other evening, and he kept Mrs. Bowser guessing all through the meal, but he did not keep her waiting long after their return to the sitting room.

"Mrs. Bowser," he began as he lighted a cigar and waved it around with profound dignity, "I think you will readily acknowledge that I am a man of action."

"Yes, I have seen you act," she admitted.

"No sarcasm, please."

He looked at her for a moment and flushed up and swallowed, but he wanted to prove his case, and after a bit he continued:

"We have known that there was to be a world's fair at St. Louis for a year past, haven't we?"

"Of course."

"But have I ever said that we would attend it? Have you even heard me say I'd like to go?"

"I don't think so. While everybody else, even down to the banana peddlers, have gone or are going, it is a subject you have kept clear of. I mentioned it once, but you fell asleep while thinking out a reply."

"You but corroborate what I have said, Mrs. Bowser. Not knowing whether I could shape my affairs to go, I have said nothing about it. Of what use to promise you to go and then fail to keep it? Today, however—today at 4:30 o'clock, I saw my way clear, and now, only two hours later, I have the satisfaction of announcing to you that we shall make a two weeks' visit to the fair."

"You dear, good man, but how nice of you! I can be ready in about ten days, and I shall look upon it as the great event of my life."

"I think I observed that I was a man of action?"

"Yes, you said so."

"And I am going to prove it in this case. We leave on the 9:30 train in the morning."

"But how can we?" she exclaimed in terror. "I have got to have about fifty different things, and it will take at least two days to pack the trunks. You surely"—

"The trunks will be packed tonight, and what you lack you can buy at St. Louis. I understand that they have at least one dry goods store there. Having discussed the matter in all its bearings, we will now go upstairs and proceed to pack."

"But it can't possibly be done. If you had ever packed a trunk you would know"—

"Mrs. Bowser, I was packing trunks before you were born. You couldn't have been over five years old when I wrote and published a little book entitled 'How to Pack a Trunk In Seventeen Seconds.' That book is to be found in almost every house in America today. I should say that we ought to take three trunks with us. We may not pack the whole three in less than one minute, but we can do it in five and then sit down and talk about what we expect to see."

"Can't I have four or five days?" she pleaded.

"Not a day. We leave at the hour named."

"But two days, then—even one"—

"Mrs. Bowser," he said as he made for the stairs, "we will now go up and pack, and after you have seen me fling the things into a trunk and lock and strap it half the terrors of trunk packing will be gone. The trunks are in the storeroom, but I will have them out while you are throwing that yaller eyed cat downstairs. I hope he starves to death while we are gone."

The three trunks came out. Mr. Bowser ripped off three of the handles and made the splinters fly from the door casings in doing it, but he made record time. Winter garments packed in camphor were emptied out and kicked aside, while Mrs. Bowser stood with quivering chin and helpless look. Then he entered the closet and lifted three or four of her dresses off the pegs and chucked them into one of the trunks with an abandon that brought out the exclamation:

"For mercy's sake, don't do that! If you fling things in that way they will have a thousand creases and wrinkles by tomorrow."

"Woman, don't worry about creases and wrinkles," replied Mr. Bowser as he went after a second load. "The instructions as laid down in my book are all right and have been adopted by all the leading actors and actresses and the traveling public generally. Let me get another armful."

"If we've got to pack this way I—I don't believe I want to go to the fair. Those things would be simply ruined when we got there. I'll agree to be ready by tomorrow night."

"At 9:30 in the morning, Mrs. Bowser."

"Then I won't go."

"Very well. I told you I was a man of action. It is now a quarter to 8. In five minutes my trunk will be packed and downstairs, and at 9:30 in the morning I set out for St. Louis all by my lonesome. I am no man to shilly-shally. I either go or stay. You can go to your mother's or send for her to come here, but I am off in the morning."

Mrs. Bowser sat down on the bed and began to weep softly, while he grabbed his clothes from the closet, and his shirts and collars from the dresser and began to toss them into one of the trunks. He was thus engaged when a voice announced:

"I thought it was about time I came down and took you in hand again, Lemuel Bowser!"

It was his mother-in-law. She had found the front door unlocked and walked in and upstairs. He stood looking at her with his eyes bulging out for a long minute before he could utter the words:

"What, you here again?"

"Yes, sir. I seem to be all here, and it appears I have come in good time. Mary, what's the matter?"

"He's—he's going to the St. Louis fair!" sobbed Mrs. Bowser. "He's going alone be-because I can't pack three trunks in five minutes!"

"I can't fool away my time," explained Mr. Bowser, as the mother-in-law turned to him with a look of inquiry.

"And you'll go alone, will you?"

"I will."

"You'll do nothing of the kind! Drop those things!"

"What have you got to say about it?" he demanded in tones he tried to make firm, but which wabbled about a good deal.

"Don't you bristle up to me like that, Lemuel Bowser—don't you do it! I have attended to your case several times before, and I shall do it this time. You don't stir one step. Take those things out and hang them up again."

Mr. Bowser looked at her and hesitated for a moment and then sulkily obeyed.

"Now put those winter goods back and the trunks where they belong. I had a feeling all this week that it was my duty to come down and take you in hand."

"If you've come down here to raise a row with me don't drive me too far. I don't want a fuss with you, but"—

"But you can have one right away!" she finished. "You may now go downstairs until I am ready to take your case up. Don't upset chairs nor break vases or I'll make it the worse for you!"

Mr. Bowser descended with a wild idea of smashing everything he could and setting fire to the remainder, but he thought better of it and put on his hat and walked around town for two long hours. When he got back to his own house all was darkness, and he knew that the women folks had gone to bed. They might not be asleep yet, however, and he sat down on the doorsteps to think. The cat, which had been out looking for a scrap and failed to find one, came and sat down beside him, and together they watched the night grow old and the new moon come up.

After an hour a pedestrian came along and stopped to lean on the gate with dejected and weary air. He and Mr. Bowser saw each other, but it was ten minutes before the latter asked:

"Why don't you go home?"

"Why don't you go in and go to bed?" was queried in reply.

"I can't. My mother-in-law has arrived."

"Same here!" wailed the stranger as he brushed a tear from his eye and passed on. M. QUAD.

THURSDAY, NOV 24, 1904.

MR. HILL sadly reflects that not even a Corporal's guard will see him to the station when he goes to the umbrageous foliage.

IF IT is all the same, the Democratic donkey would prefer to take a rest for a lustrum, for the purpose of efforts at recuperation.

PRESIDENT DIAZ has recommended the adoption of the gold standard to the Mexican Congress. Wasn't the election enough, without adding other heavy weights to the pile under which Mr. Bryan is reposing?

MR. BRYAN is varying the monotony by giving columns of advice to President Roosevelt on how to run the country and do his duty. Mr. Bryan is a loud talker with a continuous voice yet it will probably be considered that the voice of the electorate of the country is all-sufficient.

"IT WOULD seem that Rooseveltism catches the popular fancy everywhere outside the solid south," says The Atlanta Constitution. But, neighbor, how about the fancy catching in West Virginia, Maryland and Missouri? How about the gain of two Republican Congressmen from Old Kaintuck?

MARYLAND'S VOICE MUST NOT BE STIFLED

The returns for the election held Nov. 8th, have at last been canvassed by the various Boards of Canvassers and after an exasperating delay of more than a week it is given out that Mr. Bonaparte, one of the Republican electors, is elected together with seven Democrats. The Board of Canvassers of Charles county, refused to canvass the returns from that county at all until the Republicans had prepared a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel them to do their duty. Charles county gave a handsome Republican plurality and the presumption is that the Board was waiting to see if the result in Charles would effect the result in the State. The Republicans defeated the Democrats in Maryland in spite of trick ballots and an unfair election law, and this fact is well known to Democrats as well as to Republicans. When it was found that contrary to the expectations of the Democrats, the Republican hosts had won the victory, then the work of delaying the returns commenced and at the end of a week it was announced that Mr. Bonaparte, Republican, had won but that the Democrats had elected remaining seven by small pluralities. Had each voter who went to the polls been able to express his honest judgment at the ballot box, Maryland would have given Roosevelt at least four thousand plurality. Many were confused by the style of the ballot and some of them are very intelligent men. The counting of the ballots was done in many cases in a go-as-you-please way. For example—In Baltimore a ballot marked for each elector of the political party representing the candidate, was counted but in a number of the counties such a ballot was not counted. Thousands of men were disfranchised, Democrats as well as Republicans, but so long as 50 per cent. more Republicans than Democrats suffered, the Democratic managers are pleased with the law.

The election law as now written is a disgrace to the State and has given Maryland an uneviable reputation throughtout the nation. The trouble is that the tricky Democratic managers tried to disfranchise the negro by a cunningly devised ballot law. The result is that no man's rights are secure and elections conducted under it are not accepted as the honest judgment of the people. If it is desired to limit the suffrage why not meet this question in an open and manly way and not tangle up our election machinery and trifle with the most sacred rights of a free people. Whatever may come of the investigation now being conducted by the Republicans to determine whether or not a contest shall be made, one result is clear, and that is, the people will demand a change to the system in vogue under Republican rule when our elections were honesly conducted, the result speedily ascertained and accepted without question. Maryland's voice must not be stifled.

POLITICAL INFLUENCE OF INDEPENDENT PAPERS.

It is the boast of many of the big newspapersthat they areindependent, that they are not party organs. They boast that the day of the party organ is passed, that it has and can have no influence. If one is to judge from the election which has just passed the independent newspapers are not over-influential. In New York a majority of the big papers were for Parker and yet he was beaten worse than Bryan whom they were all against except one. In Maryland all the big newspapers were for Parker except one and yet Parker's vote in Baltimore, the home of the big newspapers, was less than Bryan's in 1900 when only one paper supported him. It may puzzle these big newspapers to account for this condition, but to us the reason is not far to find. These big newspapers are purely business affairs and the people have come to so regard them. Their editorial utterances the people regard as simply a part of the paper and they carry, to say the least, no more weight, no more conviction than do the paid advertisements or the local political news.

In short, these big papers have ceased to have that hold on the people which they used to have before the day of their independence. They have become independent of party and their readers have became independent of them. As business enterprises they have grown and prospered, but as leaders of political thought and potential influences in shaping political events, their power has greatly lessened.

A NEW COUNTY

The Frostburg Mining Journal in its last issue used the bond question, which was almost unaminously voted down in Garrett county at the recent election, as the basis of an argument for the formation of a new county made up of parts of Garrett and Allegany counties. Philosopher Oder's argument for a county along the lines above referred to are not based upon a sound foundation. The only reason why the bonding was adversely voted upon is the fact that the people don't want new buildings. If a new county should be formed building at the new county seat would of course have to be erected and the expenditure of the people's money for this purpose would as a natural consequence have to follow.

The Journal's argument for the formation of a new county follows:

Bonds for new court-house and jail failed to carry in Garrett county.

Of 3,000 people who voted for President 2,465 voted upon the bond proposal.

Of the latter number 738 voted for, 1,727 against

That is 30 per cent. voted in favor of new county buildings, 70 per cent. in favor of "letting" bad "enongh alone."

The risk of a similar result in Allegany county last time was not taken.

Cumberland, after permitting the court-house to burn down, decided that it couldn't do without a new one, and afraid to "trust the people," determined to rebuild without "the people's consent."

Cumberland is a costly town to Allegany county.

But to return.

Until further notice it is not to be conclusively held that the popular majority of Garrett county is actually opposed to new county buildings so much as to new county buildings at Oakland.

This is indicated by the fact that 7 districts remote from Oakland favored the bonds with a vote of 71 to 1,137 against.

Only in Oakland did the proposal carry—by 450 votes of 573 cast.

The fact is, the vote at Selbysport, Grantsville, Accident, Sang Run, Johnson's, The Elbow and Bittinger—1137 against the bonds shows that the people want a new county with Frostburg as the county-seat!

This is laughed at, of course, but only by people who, glorying in freedom for themselves, are often strangely ready to deny it to others.

COMPLETING LONG DISTANCE LINE

The Work on Pittsburg-Baltimore Telephone Extension Near Cumberland.

Not far from this city there is a large gang of linesmen busily erecting poles and stringing wires and thus completing one of the most complete independent telephone systems in the country which will link Baltimore and Pittsburg together. The operations, which are now in progress began in Pennsylvania, where they were under the supervision of the Tri-State Telephone Company, of Connellsville. Now it is understood that the Maryland Telephone Company of Baltimore has taken up the work and will complete it into the Monumental City. The work is being pushed as rapidly as possible. It will not touch Cumberland.

Several weeks ago the Daily News published an article concerning an independent long distance telephone service between Baltimore and Washington and Pittsburg, in which various companies, including the Maryland Telephone Company, of Baltimore, the Garrett County Telephone Company and the Somerset Telephone Company were interested. A meeting was held in Keyser to complete the arrangements some time ago and the telephone activities in this vicinity is the result.—Cumberland News.

DEER PARK JOTTINGS.

Once again we give to the readers of your newsy paper the happenings of our little town. Hoping they may prove of interest to your many readers and fully realizing that with former kindness and courtesy on your part, Mr. Editor, they will not find lodgment in the waste basket.

The first and most regretable item to relate is that we must have in our town an incendiary, for this morning (Nov. 22nd) at about 3 o'clock Mr. Charles R. Savedge's livery stable was burned to the ground. At the time of the fire there were in the stable four head of horses, with some five conveyances in the shed, a lot of harness and one sleigh. Mr. Savedge succeeded in saving the horses and part of the harness and all the vehicles, but the sleigh and a number of articles, together with about one ton of oat straw and some hay was consumed. Loss about $600.

The series of interesting meetings at the Union church continues and are growing in interest each day and scores are pleading for pardon and the salvation of their souls The great efforts of that Godly young Baptist minister, Rev. Wm. H. Faust, for the past three weeks is reaping a harvest, like "bread cast upon the waters, it is returning after many days."

Rev. E. Manges and wife some days visiting friends, after preaching on Sabbath last and attended Rev. Mr. Faust's services on Saturday last. We are glad to say we have two good men of God as pastors—men that all our people have confidence in.

Our good friend, Mrs. Renhart Menkee, of near Kertz Chapel, visited friends to day and did some shopping. We are at all times glad to welcome this cultured Russian lady, and as she and her husband are of our faith we bid them a hearty welcome to our church and homes.

Misses Emma Glotfelty and Nora Specht have been visiting for the past week friends and relatives at McHenry, returned to their home Sunday and report says they were kept busy relating to their friends their pleasant experinnces of the famous voyage as invited guests on the Salt River expedition and the pleasure excursion, etc., to the many friends of McHenry and vicinity.

We were suprised to hear that Mr. Solomon Tasker, an old citizen of near Kitzmillersville, in District No. 13, and veteran of the Civil war, is gradually ossifying, and is expected to live but a few days. As a man of medium size and never weighing over 160 pounds, he now weighs over 300 pounds and one arm (the left) is entirely usless and as hard as stone. We have this from Dr. Copeland, of Blaine, and an other expert physician, that this peculiar case is a fact. Mr. Tasker is about 72 years old and will be remembered by the citizens of Oakland as having been adjudged insane some few years ago and was an inmate of the county jail for some time and afterward sent to an asylum and became partially restored mentally, but physically a wreck.

It was the pleasure of the writer to visit, on Monday last, Kitzmillersville and Blaine, the first named in Maryland the latter in West Va., and connected by a bridge across the North Branch of the Potomac. We could hardly realize what improvements had taken place in the last few years since we had visited this progressive town. It now has a population of about one thousand souls, with two fine churches, a model school building, mill, wool factory, three or four stores, a drug store, a first class hotel and some elegant homes of modern architecture.

Our old friend and comrade, Wm. H. Pool, and sons own and operate the woolen factory, and our mutual friend of years ago, Mr. J. H. Rafter, is the manager of the Blaine Mercantile Co.,—and has a large well filled store and does a thriving business. He and Mr. George Kitzmiller are largely interested in the Blaine Mining Co., and besides this mine there are five other companies operating and shipping coal from this point on the West Va. C. & P. R. R., viz, on the Maryland side of the river, Hamill Coal and Mining Company, of Garrett County; Davis Coal Company, J. M. Davis & Bro., of near this place, owners and proprietors, but no relation to the famous Davis Coal & Coke Co., of National repute as coal men. On the West Virginia side is the Wabash Coal Co., Smith Coal Co., Dill Coal Co., and with the Blaine Mining Co., of Maryland, makes six companies that ship vast quantities each day, and working some hundreds of miners, who have homes in this place and all good, law abiding citizens as was attested at an early hour on Monday morning when one of their homes caught fire about five o'clock. All the clothes of the family were consumed in the flames, but on going to the scene we found hundreds of these people assisting and helping their neighbor and friend who had been so unfortunate. The house was owned by my friend of years standing, Mr. Thomas Harvey, who lives near Kitzmillersville, on that beautiful farm, with its magnificent stone house so handsomely finished in hard wood. The town property was rented to the North American Coal Company by Mr. Harvey, and occupied by one of their employes. Loss about $400 for house, contents supposed to be $75 or $100.

To say that we enjoyed our hasty visit to this hospitable town, would be but a feeble expression. We were delighted at the royal welcome to the home of our comrade and the greeting of his good, kind wife, she a friend I had met and had been entertained at her parental home in years gone by—the late Henry Hamill, father of your fellow townsman, Mr. M. R. Hamill, of the First National Bank.

To this dear comrade, who we have met and kept in touch with and the remenicences, as we "fight our battles over" are always entertaining and enjoyed. His vivid recollections of the exciting scenes of forty years ago, so concur with my own that when we meet the hours seem too short, the midnight hour finds us talking: and as we bear the same given name and our fathers old friends in the good old ante bellum days, Will and Will seem like twin brothers.

Having attended church tonight and scratched these Jottings before retiring and having had a busy day, we say good night, and

DR. J. A. THORN:

When I first consulted you, five weeks ago, I was unable to see the chair you offered me, so bad was my eyesight, and was so rapidly growing worse that I am convinced that in thirty days I should have been totally blind. I was unable to sit in a room with a light without great distress, nor could I sleep my eyes troubled me so much.

Now I can see almost as well as ever; could read if you would permit it; sleep like a top, and lamp light distresses me no more.

These facts will be substantiated by personal interview.

NEW PIPE ORGAN TO ARRIVE

And Be Placed In St. Paul's Church Within Two Weeks.

An official of St. Paul's M.E. church received a letter a few days ago from the manufacturers who are engaged in building the new pipe organ for that congregation which stated that the work on the instrument was nearing completion and would be shipped without further delay, certainly within a week. Allowing several days for the transportation of the organ it is confidently believed that the instrument will be here and in place for use during the first weeks of December.

In explaining the delay in the manufacture of the organ the makers stated in the letter above referred to that in laying out the plans one item in the contract escaped their attention which necessitated the work being done over again.

TELEPHONE CABLE HERE.

Two Hundred Wire Capacity and Will Be Strung Within a Short Time.

The new cable ordered some weeks ago for service in Oakland by the Garrett County Telephone Company, arrived in Oakland from the Chicago factory Monday of this week. The cable is nearly five hundred feet long and weighs about fifteen hundred pounds.

As soon as new and heavier poles can be erected and other necessary outside work done, the work of stringing the new acquisition will be commenced. The line will be run from the central office in the Ravenscroft building up Alder street to the corner of Third and north on that street where all converging lines will be entered into the cable. The numerous wires strung along both Second street and Green street wil be very considerably decreased and the danger of contact with live wires materially decreased as a consequence.

Vertical writing in the schools of Washington county must go. The objection urged against this fad have been found to be well grounded. However, fads must be adopted now and then and later dropped in order to show that the schools are "progressing."

Mr. E. J. Fringer, of Oakland, who spent several months in Illinois, where he was the guest of his brother, returned to Oakland Tuesday evening. He was accompanied as far as Pittsburg by his daughter, Miss Lulu, who also visited in the west, where she will remain a short time as a guest of friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Davis went over to Morgantown, W. Va., yesterday morning where they will be guests of relatives a few days and where they will witness the dedication of the new Methodist church on Sunday next. The edifice is considered one of the finest structures in this whole section of the country, costing in the neighborhood of $100,000.

The new elevated walk leading from Second street to Railroad street, was completed Tuesday by Mr. Joseph M. Crim and his force of hands. The walk is a substantial, well built affair. Its completion reopens the short cut to the Railroad station which is appreciated by every one in town who has any business to transact at that place or other business places along Railroad street.

The series of sermons to young men being preached in St. Paul's M. E. church by Rev. J. B. Workman, is attracting the attention and thought of many of the people of Oakland and many young men are in attendance each Sunday evening. The subject announced for next Sunday night is, "What If All the Young Men of Oakland Should Become Christians?"

Mr. Charles S. May, the Swanton merchant, has installed an electric light plant in his town, the power to drive the machinery being furnished by the engine used to operate the flouring mill which is also owned by him. The plant, though small, answers the purposes for which it was put in. Light is furnished several of the stores of the town, and a number have been located along the streets. Private houses are also lighted.

Mr. James Brock, the merchant tailor, and Mr. Paul Kochje, who has been engaged in the meat business here for a year or more, have formed a copartnership and on Saturday purchased from Messrs. W. A. and Oliver Maffett their meat and provision store located in the Bolden-West building on Second street. The store will be managed by Mr. Kochje who is an affable and energetic young men. The new firm has the best wishes of THE REPUBLICAN for its success.

Mr. W. H. Chadderton, of Deer Park, manager of the Altamont Springs Farm, was in Oakland yesterday on business and made this office a brief business visit. Mr. Chadderton states that nearly every day prominent stockmen and farmers from nearly every section of the country visit this farm and there gain new knowledge with respect to the storage of winter food for the stock, the arrangement of barns and other buildings and farm work generally.

Clubs have been organized in Grafton and Fairmont for the purpose of seeing to it that no child in either town shall go with an empty stocking on Christmas morning. There is some room for such an organization in Oakland. Many a child will have its little heart torn with grief and displaced with the awful feeling that Santa had forgotten its whispered needs if something is not done to prevent. The ladies of Oakland should meet and form just such a club and we are sure the men will contribute liberally to the fund.

Sheriff Edward E. Frantz on last Friday sold at public auction to Hon. George C. Sturgiss, of Morgantown, and Mr. Fred. T. Martin, of Fairmont, West Va., the electric light plant at Mountain Lake Park, the purchase price being in excess of six thousand dollars. The sale was ordered by the Circuit Court under an execution in favor of the Munsey Electric Company which corporation installed the plant. The machinery will be put in perfect repair and will be operated next summer to furnish light at the Park as usual.

A Clinton county man named Moon married a girl named Shine and somebody said it was all moonshine, but it wasn't—it was a change of the moon. A short time ago his wife presented him with a young daughter, and that of course was a new moon. Then he went to town and got drunk for joy and that was a full moon. When he started home he had only twenty-five cents in his pocket and that was the last quarter. His mother-in-law met him at the door with a rolling pin and then there was a total eclipse, and he saw stars.—Ex.

The Rev. L. E. Goodwin has resigned his charge in St. Matthew's Parish, certainly for the winter months, to accept a call to Florida until some time next spring, and will probably leave the Parish for his new field about the last of the present month. Mr. Goodwin is a priest of the Church of England coming to the United States within the last year and to this parish last spring. He is highly and affectionately esteemed by his church members as a successful Rector, a preacher of exceptional ability and with scholarly qualities of a rare order heightened by travel in most every land and contact with most every people.

This paper is issued one day earlier than usual this week in order that Thanksgiving Day may be observed by the editor and office force in accordance with the proclamation of President Roosevelt. On this day every American should endeavor to possess a grateful heart. All have cares and many know the pangs of grief, yet there is an abundance of sunshine in every life if we but look for it. In commemorating the day it will be well if the American people, grateful for the blessings and achievements which have come to them, shall find in the solemn festival new consecration to duty, that they may fearlessly go on in the course to which a High Destiny leads the nation.

HIS MAJESTY THE TURKEY

By A. W. FERRIN

[Copyright, 1904, by A. W. Ferrin.]

IT was Benjamin Franklin who said that the turkey and not the bald-headed eagle should be the American national bird, and the tribute which the patriot-philosopher paid to the piece de resistance of the Thanksgiving day feast is better deserved now than it was in Franklin's day, for, while an occasional eagle still flits from crag to crag, on the turkey the sun never sets. The turkey follows the flag, whatever the constitution may do, and wherever Uncle Sam has set his foot, whether in the snowdrifts of Alaska or on the flowery soil of the Philippines, Thanksgiving day is honored equally with the Fourth of July. Even in the effete capitals of Europe the aristocratic partridge and pheasant have to give way on Thanksgiving day to the ponderous gobbler.

"RAISING" A TURKEY IN KENTUCKY.

The eagle is a pirate; he cannot sing and his beauty is greatest at a distance. All he can do is to soar aloft, and, while his single stunt may be emblematic of freedom, it is of a freedom which respects not the rights of others. Consider the turkey, how he grows. He toils not, neither does he spin, yet Solomon in all his glory never ate more delicious food than he furnishes. His plumage ranks him little lower than the peacock, while his "gobble" makes music compared to the hoarse scream of the far flying eagle. All he lives for is to enhance the joy of his human friends. Then, too, he is distinctly an American. The bald eagle is, it is true, also an aborigine, but there are other eagles. The czar, the kaiser and the emperor of Austria bear eagles on their shields. The turkey was never even heard of in Europe before the voyage of Columbus. For nearly four authenticated centuries the turkey has roosted on his genealogical tree in the forests of America, and before the white man came the red Indians who sprang from the soil venerated him.

The first turkey appeared in written history about the year 1520, when the Spanish conquerors of Mexico found him at the court of Montezuma. Specimens of the new fowl were sent home to Spain by the companions of Cortes, and within five years thereafter the turkey appeared in England, where he soon became a general favorite. Civil and natural history had not then been reduced to an exact science, and in the common confusion of America with the Indies the turkey became involved. The name Turkey was then often used as a synonym for the orient; hence the erroneous appellation which the bird has never been able to shake off. The French made the same mistake, for they call the turkey to this day dinde or coq d'Inde (Indian cock). However, the turkey by another name would taste no sweeter, and popular disapprobation of the sultan has never extended to the fowl which bears his country's name.

It is a moot question among ornithologists whether the present day turkey is a descendant of the Mexican bird domesticated in England and brought back to America by the pilgrim fathers or is the wild turkey of the United States tamed. Whatever the tame turkey's remotest origin, the breeders frequently introduce into their flocks wild turkeys captured in the woods or raised from eggs to give stamina and the gamy taste so prized by epicures, and the barnyard bird may now trace his lineage to Montezuma's imperial coop or to the wilds of the north, as he chooses.

Rhode Island has been until recently the principal turkey state, with Connecticut a close second, but now western turkeys are coming into the eastern markets in large numbers, and Kentucky is also making a good bid for the banner.

The Rhode Island turkey still keeps his reputation as the best born and best bred bird of his species in America, however, and it is from the Rhode Island ranges that the president's turkey comes every year. Hiram Vose, the famous turkey buyer, has been sending annual turkeys to the White House since General Grant was there, and no complaint as to their quality has yet been registered by the recipients.

The "bronze" turkey is Rhode Island's pride, and this bird adds to its beauty unparalleled delicacy of flesh and immense size. It is recorded that the turkey sent by Mr. Vose to General Grant weighed forty pounds. Mr. Cleveland's turkey weighed fifty pounds, but Mr. Cleveland is a much heavier man than Grant was. For President Roosevelt the farms of Rhode Island have been scoured this year for a record breaking heavyweight and one with a reputation as a fighter and the father of a large family. Most of the presidential turkeys have been raised at Westerly, on the farm of Elias Miner, otherwise "Asia" Miner by analogy.

In Kentucky, as in Rhode Island, the outdoor method of turkey raising is being extensively practiced. Turkeys have always been regarded as difficult to rear. The new method is to imitate natural conditions as far as practicable and thus to save the flocks from the epidemics and other ills of civilization to which they have long been heirs. The birds are provided with neither shelter nor roosts even in winter. They are fed liberally and in the spring are furnished with half barrels for nests, but there is as little interference as possible with their ways of living. Whole corn, sweet apples and grasshoppers are considered the best turkey food. Cornmeal, which is more commonly used, fattens the bird more rapidly, but renders the flesh of poorer quality. Breeding by selection, picking out the largest individuals from generation to generation, is largely responsible for the greater size which the domestic turkey obtains over the wild bird.

Thousands of turkeys are raised by Kentucky negroes on their little holdings, and to the negroes also falls the task of slaughtering and picking the fowls grown on the large ranges. For this work they get 2½ cents per turk. The roads during the early days of November are dotted with marching flocks leaving the farms and converging on the towns, where the birds are dressed and packed into refrigerator cars or placed alive in wicker baskets to be shipped to every point of the compass.

Despite the abundance of turkeys in Kentucky, the negro's proverbial love of fowl and the natural disposition to regard stolen fruits, or turkeys, as sweetest require the owner of a turkey yard to be careful about locking up at night. Turkey shoots and raffles are very popular with the colored folk, and the lucky winner of a bird carrying home his prize in triumph would not change places with Caesar leading captive kings in chains behind his chariot.

The First Thanksgiving.

The earliest recorded appointment of a Thanksgiving day was in 1623. There had been an unfavorable season for the young American colony, and starvation seemed imminent. To avert the terrible calamity a day of humiliation and prayer was appointed, and in the midst of the solemn observance the rain descended copiously. The crops afterward yielded an abundant harvest. To thank God "with all their hearts for the good world and the good things in it," the first American Thanksgiving was officially proclaimed and duly celebrated in the fort church, and Elder Brewster preached a sermon.

Thanksgiving with a Vengeance

AUNT ELECTA

BY WILLIS D. HAWKINS

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY WILLIS D. HAWKINS.

The Old House.

THE sitting room fire was to be built, but Chester Harding, with the basket of kindling before him, sat in the low, splint bottom rocker and stared gloomily into the deep, old fashioned fireplace—the same chair in which his gentle little mother, twenty-five years ago, had rocked and crooned and kissed away his baby troubles—the same fireplace before which his own beautiful wife had last night lulled their precious baby boy to sleep.

The dead ashes on the cold hearthstone seemed to have something in common with the burnt out hopes that lay so chill upon his comfortless heart. What had he to be thankful for?

Soon the dear old homestead was to pass to hands far worse than those of strangers, hands that would desecrate and destroy through sheer malevolence.

Chester.

Motherless at nine and fatherless three years later, he had been left to the care of his Aunt Electa, a strong, despotic spinster with decided opinions and a vigorous way of expressing them. His father, not long before his death, had been worsted in a financial transaction by his own brother, Chester's Uncle James, and had been compelled to mortgage the homestead and its contents to save himself from immediate ruin. Aunt Electa had ever afterward detested her brother James and openly denounced his pious professions as wicked hypocrisy. She had drawn him (Chester) into the relentless warfare against Uncle James, and the vengeful uncle, cut from the same piece as the vengeful aunt, had bought and foreclosed the mortgage in the hope of throwing her and her ward out of house and home. Aunt Electa, enraged to almost superhuman energy, had moved heaven and earth to raise the necessary money and had bid in the property.

Chester was aroused from these recollections by his wife, who had come to dress the baby by the sitting room fire. The joy of the sun bright morning was in her thankful young mother heart as she began with merry mock seriousness to chide her dilatory husband for not having yet even laid the kindling.

Uncle James.

"Look at your naughty papa," she said, holding the baby before him. "Shame on a big, lazy fellow!" She took a little dimpled hand in hers and pointed a tiny pink finger at the object of this make believe shame.

Chester turned toward her with a forced smile and took the baby from her arms.

"Why, Chester, what is the matter?"

He kissed her trembling lips. "There!" said he. "I was only foolish for a moment over some thoughts about the long ago past, before I had your beautiful love to make me always, always happy."

Still she appealed with her big brown eyes turned wistfully up to his, and he saw that it was useless to delay her enlightenment longer. Already her Thanksgiving day had been spoiled.

"Well, little girl," he said, with an effort to make light of the matter, "we must give up the old home. I have been served with notice to quit."

"Why? What for? Notice from whom?" It was shocking intelligence. She knew how dearly Chester loved the old place he had lived in so long.

"From Uncle James," he answered. "He owns everything here. Aunt Electa left no will, and her brother, being next of kin, inherits all she owned."

Mrs. Harding had risen and now stood beside the chair, holding her husband's head against her breast. "Never mind, dear," she said, with tender sympathy; "we shall some time have money enough to buy the old place back."

Mrs. Harding.

But Chester shook his head. "Some time is as bad as no time. In a week Uncle James will have the house torn down and its contents scattered to the winds. I know him. He will chop down every tree and gloat over the knowledge that each stroke of the ax cuts into my heart. He hates me as relentlessly as Aunt Electa hated him."

The rest of the forenoon was passed in dismal despair. Mrs. Harding, with that niceness of perception which comes of true sympathy, had decided not to have the Thanksgiving dinner she had planned. It would be a mockery, a reminder of the blessings Chester had missed. So she set the table for the simple meal they ordinarily had at midday. It was nearly ready when the doorbell rang, and Chester, inwardly resenting intrusion, responded.

"I trust I am in time for dinner," said a cheery faced man whom Chester recognized as the new Methodist minister, who had been pointed out to him on the street the day before.

"Such as it is, you are in time for it," said Chester.

The minister had stepped inside before even this dubious invitation was extended. Chester showed him to the sitting room and went to tell his wife.

"Did—you—ever!" When a little woman opens a pair of big brown eyes to their widest limits, utters those three short words as if each were a separate explosion and drops her hands in final despair you may know fate has done its worst. And if you have long been under the strain of a really great grief this heaping on of petty misfortunes is apt to stir a sense of the ridiculous in you. Chester, looking into his wife's dejected face, burst into uncontrollable laughter, which it was difficult to keep the minister from hearing. Grasping his sides with both hands, he staggered about the dining room, trying in vain to suppress his paroxysms, until his wife, catching the infection, joined him in the idiotic Indian dance, stuffing her apron into her mouth to smother her shrieks of laughter.

The Baby.

Near the end of the dinner the minister chanced to speak of Chester as a member of his church, and Chester corrected him. It then transpired that the minister, having received an invitation to dine with James Harding, had asked for "Mr. Harding's" house, and had been directed to Chester's.

After due apologies for his mistake the minister asked the privilege of reading a chapter from the Scriptures, and Mrs. Harding brought Aunt Electa's big clasp Bible, the only one in the house. At sight of the book Chester reproached himself for having shamelessly forgotten a tacit promise he had made to his aunt on the day of her death.

The Bible.

Aunt Electa's fatal illness had been characteristic of her—short, sharp, violent—and she had died in a convulsion. To the last she had stoutly maintained that she was not going to die and had insisted on being pillowed up that she might fortify herself to bear her pains by reading her Bible.

"Chet," she had said between writhings, "I don't lay the claim I ought to religion; but, I tell you, when I'm in pain or trouble there's nothing that bolsters me up like the book of Job. When you're in trouble and haven't any old aunt to come to read the book of Job. It's mighty solacing." In an hour she was dead.

Now, when the minister was gone, Chester, sitting again in the low rocker with the baby on his knee, asked his wife to read the book of Job to him.

She had finished the first chapter and begun the second when she turned the leaf and a loose sheet fluttered out. As she picked it up her eye caught the boldly written words, "Last Will and Testament of Electa Harding."

"Chester!" Her tone startled him. "The will!" She almost fainted.

The document was offered for probate next day, and, though the witnesses had moved away, there was no doubt about Aunt Electa's sprawling signature.

"What could have possessed her to hide it away in such a place?" asked the mistress of the old homestead.

"I think I know," answered the master. "I think she wanted Uncle James to hope awhile so that he might suffer all the more in the end."

"Isn't that a dreadful spirit to wish to pursue one's enemy even after one is dead? Chester, do you think Aunt Electa is in heaven?"

"She is if she knows how badly Uncle James is cut up."

POINTS for CARVERS

By A. B. LEWIS

[Copyright, 1904, by A. B. Lewis.]

ALWAYS count noses just before you carve the turkey, and don't forget to include your own proboscis.

If you invite your relatives to dine with you on Thanksgiving, it is wise to help them to turkey first. They have probably skipped one or two meals to be in shape for the feast and are hungry enough to start a riot.

Don't invite your mother-in-law to a Thanksgiving dinner and carve the turkey in such a way that it will fly off the platter and strike her in the face. A Wisconsin man tried that trick last year, and the old lady caught the turkey and took it home and devoured it.

THE OLD LADY TOOK IT HOME.

If the bird is particularly tough and you have difficulty in carving it, don't get angry if some one yells, "Take an ax!" Mark that person and see that the least desirable portions of the fowl go on his plate.

Don't heave a sigh of relief and think the worst is over when you have at last helped everybody to turkey. You'll just about sit down to eat the juicy portions you have laid aside for yourself when the plates will begin to come back again.

In carving a very tough turkey stand back from the table as far as possible. This will give you a better chance to escape from the house in case the carving knife slips and the diners are covered with hot gravy.

If you are invited out to Thanksgiving dinner and think you will be asked to carve the turkey it would be well to wear a coat of mail, get a permit from the police to carry a revolver and practice running for a couple of weeks.

It is well to start some lively discussion among those at the table when you are about to carve. This will draw attention from you, and no one may notice that your knees are wabbling and your lips moving in prayer.

If by any chance the turkey slips from under your carving knife and be deposited in some one's lap, do not join in the laugh that will follow. Remember you will have troubles of your own when the guests depart and you are left alone with your wife to face the music.

Don't glare at your wife and create a scene if the turkey is cast iron and puncture proof. In that case it may be cooked over the next day and you will save on the butcher's bill.

Last, but not least, don't take it out of the children if you happen to break a five dollar meat platter in carving a two dollar turkey. It is the dog's fault, of course, and he should be kicked all over the dining room.

THANKSGIVING DAY AMONG INDIANS

The Indians of the southwest have accepted Thanksgiving day along with other customs of their white neighbors, though they have adapted it to their savage ideals until it bears little resemblance to the festival instituted by the pilgrim fathers. The government agents on the reservations of Oklahoma and Indian Territory have in recent years fixed upon Thanksgiving day as the date for the great beef issues and the payment of annuities, and their ruddy wards are in consequence provided not only with good cause for thankfulness, but with the wherewithal to demonstrate their gratitude to the Great Spirit in the conventional manner.

HUNDREDS OF INDIANS ARE DANCING AND MAKING MERRY.

One might travel through a reservation on Thanksgiving day without seeing one occupied tepee. Every one is at the gathering place waiting for the moment when the agent shall let loose upon the herds grazing on the hillside the bands of painted warriors. Medicine men are holding executive sessions, and the squaws and children are running races in their glee. Hundreds of Indians are dancing and making merry. When the word is given for the beginning of the chase a wild, weird chanting runs throughout the camp. Suddenly from their lodges burst forth the young men, clad in gay trappings and armed with long shining rifles. Off to the herd they dash; the crack of a gun is heard, and the bellowing of the cattle, the fierce shouting of the hunter and the fusillade of rifle shots make one believe that a battle is in progress. Half an hour or more the chase is kept up, while the wildest excitement prevails in the camp. Squaws are sharpening long knives and the medicine men are chanting invocations for the success of the hunters. Then the warriors come riding back in a long column, dragging the beeves as trophies behind them, singing the buffalo song.

The squaws skin and dress the beef, the medicine men invoke the blessing of Manitou, and the Indians rush to the carcasses and eat their fill.

What Thanksgiving Means.

THANKSGIVING means a lot of things!
Upon the farm when we were boys—
Still memory about it sings
And accents all its olden joys.
How many things are brought to mind—
From turkey fit for kingly feast
To pies of every sort and kind,
From mince to pumpkin, nicely creased.

AND who were there? Who were not, say,
From grandpa to the youngest boy?
It seemed just no Thanksgiving day
If one were absent from the joy.
It was a feeling next to that
Religion twines around the soul;
That one must have a homelike chat
This day, else it had missed its goal.

GOD bless the old Thanksgiving days
Upon the farm when we were boys!
For memory about them plays
As round naught else of modern joys.
From other days they stand aloof,
As holier ones forever may,
And typify in our behoof
Eternity's Thanksgiving day.

MY AIN COUNTREE

By Mary Lee Demarest

I AM far frae my hame, an' I'm weary aftenwhiles,
For the langed-for hame-bringing, an' my Father's welcome smiles;
I'll ne'er be fu' content until mine een do see
The gowden gates o' heaven, an' my ain countree.

The earth is flecked wi' flowers, mony-tinted, fresh, an' gay,
The birdies warble blithely, for my Father made them sae;
But these sichts an' these soun's will be naething to me
When I hear the angels singing in my ain countree.

I've His gude word of promise, that some gladsome day the King
To his ain royal palace his banished hame will bring;
Wi' een an' wi' hearts runnin' o'er, we shall see
The King in his beauty, an' our ain countree.

My sins ha' been mony, an' my sorrows ha' been sair,
But there they'll ne'er mair vex me, ne'er be remembered mair;
His bluid hath made me white, His hand shall dry mine ee,
When He brings me hame at last to my ain countree.

Like a bairn to its mither, a wee birdie to its nest,
I wad fain be ganging noo to my Saviour's breast;
For he gathers in His bosom witless, worthless lambs like me,
And He carries them himsel' to his ain countree.

He's faithful, that hath promised; He'll surely come again;
He'll keep his tryst wi' me, at what hour I dinna ken;
But He bids me still to watch, an' ready aye to be
To gang at any moment to my ain countree.

So I'm watching aye, an' singin' o' my hame as I wait,
For the soun'in' o' His footfa' this side the gowden gate.
God gie His grace to ilka ane wha listens noo to me,
That we a' may gang in gladness to our ain countree.

THE CORAL INSECT

By Lydia Huntley Sigourney

TOIL on! toil on! ye ephemeral train,
Who build in the tossing and treacherous main;
Toil on! for the wisdom of man ye mock,
With your sand-based structures and domes of rock,
Your columns the fathomless fountains' cave,
And your arches spring up to the crested wave;
Ye're a puny race thus to boldly rear
A fabric so vast in a realm so drear.

Ye bind the deep with your secret zone—
The ocean is sealed, and the surge a stone;
Fresh wreaths from the coral pavement spring
Like the terraced pride of Assyria's king;
The turf looks green where the breakers rolled;
O'er the whirlpool ripens the rind of gold;
The sea-snatched isle is the home of men,
And mountains exult where the wave hath been.

But why do ye plant, 'neath the billows dark,
The wrecking reef for the gallant bark?
There are snares enough on the tented field,
Mid the blossomed sweets that the valleys yield;
There are serpents to coil ere the flowers are up,
There's a poison drop in man's purest cup,
There are foes that watch for his cradle breath,
And why need ye sow the floods with death?

With moldering bones the deeps are white,
From the ice-clad pole to the tropics bright;
The mermaid hath twisted her fingers cold
With the mesh of the sea-boy's curls of gold,
And the gods of the ocean have frowned to see
The mariner's bed in their halls of glee;
Hath earth no graves, that ye thus must spread
The boundless sea for the thronging dead?

Ye build—ye build—but ye enter not in,
Like the tribes whom the desert devoured in their sin;
From the land of promise ye fade and die
Ere its verdure gleams forth on your weary eye:
As the kings of the cloud-crowned pyramid,
Their noiseless bones in oblivion hid,
Ye slumber unmarked mid the desolate main,
While the wonder and pride of your works remain.

THE WORLD

By Jones Very

POSSIBLY the foremost of our American sonneteers has been Jones Very (born at Salem, Mass., in 1813; died there in 1880). Very was graduated from Harvard in 1836 and taught Greek in the college for two years. In 1843 he was licensed to preach, but he was never ordained. He was a Unitarian in belief and a transcendentalist and mystic. "Jones Very has always piped the sad, sweet notes of religious melancholy," says one critic.

'TIS all a great show,
The world that we're in—
None can tell when 'twas finished,
None saw it begin;
Men wander and gaze through
Its courts and its halls,
Like children whose love is
The picture-hung walls.

There are flowers in the meadow,
There are clouds in the sky—
Songs pour from the woodland,
The waters glide by;
Too many, too many
For eye or for ear,
The sights that we see,
And the sounds that we hear.

A weight as of slumber
Comes down on the mind;
So swift is life's train,
To its objects we're blind;
I myself am but one
In the fleet-gliding show—
Like others I walk,
But know not where I go.

One saint to another
I heard say, "How long?"
I listened, but naught more
I heard of his song;
The shadows are walking
Through city and plain—
How long shall the night
And its shadow remain?

How long ere shall shine,
In this glimmer of things,
The light of which prophet
In prophecy sings?
And the gates of that city
Be open, whose sun
No more to the west
Its circuit shall run!

A Glimpse Into the Future by Some Wise Men

THE scientists gathered eagerly about their corps of excavators.

"We are about to unearth something of great value to history," said the head of the party, "and it is well that we all be here. I will ask you to keep strict watch on what turns up now for future generations."

The workingmen picked up their electric spades once again. Taking out his radium lantern, Professor A. D. Fourthousand turned its rays upon the hole and signaled them to go ahead. The spades struck into a soft and fluffy substance, which was thrown out with ease. Presently the air was filled with the flaky bits, one of which the professor caught and examined carefully. Surreptitiously touching his tongue to it, he smiled a knowing smile.

Suddenly one of the workmen brought to view a closely bound block of faded paper, cut into strips an inch square. With trembling hands the scientists gathered it up and cut the worn ropes which surrounded it.

"Coupons!" they exclaimed, reading the almost indecipherable lettering on them.

The professor tossed his skull hat into the air.

"The mystery of ages has been solved!" he cried. "Now we know what terrible calamity occurred, burying the great American cities beneath tons and tons of this substance! The slips of paper are the last link in the chain, establishing beyond peradventure the fact I have so long claimed would be proved. It was no upheaval of nature, no frightful volcanoes, that buried these great municipalities under uncountable acres of dust. It was"—he paused to allow his words to have their full weight—"it was a deluge of breakfast foods which put an end to the great nation!"

By 9 o'clock that night every inhabitant of the world knew of the great discovery, and the telowaves were carrying the news to the residents of Mars.—Judge.

Happiness at Last.

"My first husband," confides the snake charmer to the dog faced man, "was the india rubber marvel."

"And were you happy?" asks the dog faced man, sorting over his stock of photographs.

"Not at all," she sighs. "He was that dignified there was no getting along with him. Why, after they put his name in big letters on the posters he never would unbend at all, and so, of course, after awhile we separated."

"You gave him the bounce, did you?"

"You might say I did. But, of course, a lady longs for companionship, and so it wasn't long until I had married No. 2."

"Who was he?"

"He still is. He's the ossified man with this show."

"I should think you'd find him hard hearted."

"Not a bit of it."

"Good husband, is he?"

"Perfect. Why, I can wrap that man around my finger any time."—Chicago Tribune.

Young Doctor's First Consultation.

The young doctor was very proud at being called into consultation.

"I have summoned you, doctor," said the great physician, "because you knew young Cashley at college. Have you reliable information as to his financial condition?"

"Yes, sir. He has half a million in his own name."

"Very well, sir. That will do. I am sure now that he has a serious case of appendicitis, requiring an operation."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

His Choice.

She evidently was determined to prevent his speaking. He was equally determined that he would speak there, then and much to the point. With heavy earnestness she asked:

"What tree do you love best?"

"Yew," was the laconic and instant answer, and then he was started.—St. Louis Republic.

Didn't Look It.

"Say, Willie, we's got ter separate. When I looks at yer well fed figure I hasn't the heart ter tell de unsuspecting people dat we ain't hed er meal in three days."—Boston Journal.

Couldn't Tell a Lie.

"I don't believe Wopsley can tell the truth."

"Why don't you?"

"Because I told him a lot of lies last night and he didn't seem to know it."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

General Hood at Spring Hill

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

November 29, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

SPRING HILL doesn't figure in the list of decisive actions of the civil war, but it would if results were taken into account in place of desperate fighting and heavy losses.

There were not many thoughtful people in the Confederate states in the autumn of 1864 who did not believe their "jig was up" when Atlanta succumbed, following Vicksburg and Chattanooga in the west, and Grant planted the victorious army of Gettysburg on the south of James river and stayed there, with Richmond all but in his grasp. Yet there were some bold spirits who held that the god of battles might see to it that the weaker side should have one more chance, with fair play and no favor, and one of those was General J. B. Hood, that dashing, daring Texan who saucily made faces around the corner at Sherman after the latter had hustled him out of Atlanta by giving him the toe of the boot, as it were.

After two weeks of a game of "fox and geese" Hood found himself in the presence of a large body of Sherman's troops in the mountains of northwestern Georgia and determined to offer battle, but when he canvassed his own soldiers he found that the spirit of fighting had vanished. Repeated disaster and retreat had filled the hearts of his battle scarred veterans with the prevailing hopelessness. In this crisis nothing would fit so well as the motto, "Be bold, be bold, and evermore be bold!" and of boldness Hood had an apparently exhaustless supply. He resolved to give Sherman the slip once more and march rapidly to Nashville, Louisville and Cincinnati, strike terror to the north, win the smiles of France, who waited a good excuse for aiding the Confederacy, and bring up at last on Grant's rear in northern Virginia after crossing Ohio and the Blue Ridge. Was ever the dream of a daring military adventurer wilder than that? But what was to hinder? Sherman, distance and the scattered Federal troops to be met with on the way? As for the last two obstacles, Hood's soldiers were equal to the march, and equal also, he believed, to any improvised force that could be raked up to impede him in all the west. Sherman himself, he believed, would turn and go back south, and that is just what he did do.

Hood marched westward across Alabama 150 miles, victualing and equipping his army en route for their wonderful venture into hostile territory. By the middle of November he was crossing the Tennessee at Florence, Ala. His numbers, including the cavalry that would join him, were about 40,000. Sherman believed that his lieutenant, General Thomas, with a corps of about 12,000 men under General D. M. Stanley, and an indefinite force of mounted and dismounted cavalry, could hold the line of the Tennessee river and keep Hood south of it. He afterward added the Twenty-third corps, under General J. M. Schofield, 10,000 strong, which he detached from his main army before starting for the sea.

In point of fact, Hood went around the Federal army, supposed to be guarding the southern border of Tennessee, and once across the river made for Columbia, on Duck river, the direct route to Nashville. The ever alert Forrest preceded him and was on the point of seizing the crossings of the river when the advance of the Federal army under Schofield, falling back by forced marches upon Nashville, came up to dispute the way. Schofield held and fortified Columbia.

Meanwhile General J. H. Wilson, a cavalryman under Sheridan in Virginia, had reached Tennessee to lead Thomas' cavalry. When he reached the front along Duck river he found his troopers coping with Forrest, who was bent on crossing above Columbia, east, to seize roads leading to Spring Hill, in Schofield's rear, so as to cut him off from Nashville. Wilson warned Schofield to abandon Columbia and, strangely enough, drew back his own force by a route farther east through Hurt's Corners and Mount Carmel, leaving the road open to Forrest to dash on to Spring Hill.

But Schofield, for all, had the inside track to the key point and, acting on Wilson's warning, had sent General Stanley with all speed back from Columbia toward Spring Hill. It was the 29th of November, the day of all others in 1864 when, if luck counts at all in war, the Confederacy had a last chance. At noon that day Stanley's men double quicked into Spring Hill and soon began to fight with Forrest's troopers for the mastery. Forrest was beaten, and Stanley held the road open.

Yet Forrest was not Hood's best card in this game. At the head of his leading division, a crack body of men under the intrepid General Cleburne, he had crossed Duck river at Huey's and at noon of that day was marching boldly northwestward to the pike between Columbia and Spring Hill and between Stanley's isolated division and Schofield's main force at Columbia. Moreover, he had left the corps of General S. D. Lee south of Duck river and in front of Columbia to attack Schofield and push him along the pike into the trap prepared for him at Spring Hill. At that moment there was nothing to stay the march of Hood's 40,000 Confederates on Nashville, Louisville and the north except Stanley's band of 4,000 men at Spring Hill and a mob of unorganized recruits and convalescents at Nashville with Thomas.

The hope of the west lay with Schofield, and he was virtually surrounded and cut off at Columbia. Hood's hope—the forlorn chance of the south—lay in placing a wall of bayonets across the pike and shutting Schofield off at Spring Hill, when the Federal army in the west would be at his mercy. Calling Generals Cheatham and Cleburne to his side, Hood directed their eyes upon the pike where Schofield's wagons and their infantry guards were moving from Columbia back to Spring Hill. Said he to Cheatham: "General, do you see the enemy there, retreating rapidly to escape us? Go with your corps, take possession of that pike at or near Spring Hill. * * * Do this at once."

His subordinates moved away to obey this command and himself to order up another corps, and, this accomplished, Schofield's army would be lost. Forrest's cavalry held all of the crossroads from the pike north of Spring Hill, in a line east and south, to Duck river, having bowled Wilson's men off to the northeast out of reach. From 3 o'clock until dark there were constant skirmishing and some heavy fighting near Spring Hill between Stanley's men and those of Cheatham and Forrest, but Hood returned to the spot at dusk only to find that Cheatham had not put his line across the pike. Cleburne's division that had been relied on for that feat had blundered in the first attempt and then come to a dead standstill. Hood brought with him the leading division of Stewart's corps and, learning of Cleburne's failure, ordered that body of troops to form on Cleburne's line so as to carry it across the pike. But by this time Stanley had given the Confederates a taste of genuine fighting that stirred up their caution.

Their assaults on the pike at Spring Hill had been stubbornly repulsed, and Stewart went about his work on the slow and sure plan of reconnoitering. In the end his troops went into bivouac along the pike and not across it.

As the evening rolled on Schofield's wagons and men hurrying away from Columbia marched along the pike under the eyes of the pickets of Cheatham and Stewart and were fired upon, but they zealously went their way. Hood at length called upon Forrest to do the work the infantry had failed in, but when the redoubtable trooper got his men in line they had no ammunition and would not advance.

A band of about 2,000 under General Jackson galloped on northward and attempted to cut the pike beyond Spring Hill, but were repulsed, and from midnight to daylight of the 30th Schofield's men retreated, virtually unopposed, in the presence of superior numbers of their foes resting idly within earshot of their march. For General Sherman to have counted in advance upon such unexplainable conduct on the part of Cleburne, Cheatham and Forrest, with Hood among them and at their head, would have been madman's folly. But that, and that alone, saved Tennessee and the north and checked Hood's daring adventure.

The most reasonable explanation of Hood's conduct on the night of Nov. 29 is that he tired himself out physically during the afternoon, and his usual high courage oozed out with his waning energy.

So slight a thing as dyspepsia lost a great battle for Napoleon. Why may it not be true that a slight overstrain of some sensitive faculty of Hood on that busy afternoon prevented a reversal of Confederate fortunes in the west and warded off a grave Federal disaster? GEORGE L. KILMER.

Ephraim occupied a fertile territory, stretching across the heart of Palestine from the Mediterranean to the Jordan. In the midst stood Samaria, the capital, on a commanding eminence. The tropical luxuriance of the valleys hung about it like thebacchanalian garland on the brow of the banqueter. And its exuberance was as evanescent; for its glorious beauty was a fading flower. Destruction was at hand.

The capital, court, and people were enslaved to drink. Under its subtle delusion they were in perfect ease. With the proverbial stupidity of the drunkard, they felt perfectly safe, trusting in the mountain fastness of Samaria. With sense of justice blunted by the use of intoxicants, and their basest passions inflamed, they oppressed the poor and crushed the needy. With the insatiable thirst which the use of alcoholic liquors always begets, they kept crying, "Bring, and let us drink"—the Samaritan equivalent to our modern bacchanal, "Here's a health to you." (Amos vi, 1.)

But the judgments of God are abroad. The irresistible Assyrian, Shalmaneser, mighty and strong, is God's instrument of wrath. He looks upon Samaria like a peculiarly tempting morsel; like a fig ripe in June, so rare and succulent that one swallows it as soon as it is in his hand; does not even think of laying it aside to preserve it or eat it at his leisure. His coming will be like a tempest of hail, a destroying storm, a flood of waters; figures peculiarly impressive in that latitude, where in an hour the dryest water-course becomes an awful torrent. This prophecy had its literal fulfillment 721 B. C., in the ninth year of Hoshea, king of Israel. The country was ravaged by the Assyrians under Shalmaneser, and Israel deported into the cities of Assyria and Media. (2 Kings xvii, 9-12.)

The prophet now turns from Israel to Judah. He contrasts the imperishable crown and diadem, glorious and beautiful, rewards of piety, on the brow of Judah, the righteous and faithful residue, with the fading garland of voluptuous pleasure on the brow of drunken Ephraim. God shall help Judah's judges on the bench and her warriors at the gate. This has been aptly called a Messianic pendant to the foregoing picture of Samaria's fall.

But Judah, too is not free from this degrading sin. Even her priests and prophets are infected with it. And the people will not endure the prophet's rebukes. Listen to their drunken scoffing: "Does Isaiah presume to instruct us? Does he take us to be just weaned, that he adopts such a childish way? Here and there, with no set order, and conning his words over, as if we were still in our primers,

"Tzav lat-zav, tzav lat-zav, Quv laquv, quv laquv."

Ewald says: "We must conceive the abrupt, intentionally short, reiterated, and almost childish words of verse ten, as spoken in mimicry, with a mocking motion of the head, and in childish, stammering tone."

The prophet rejoins: "Ah! if you will not let me teach you, the Assyrians and Babylonians shall, and their foreign accent will seem more like stammering and twaddle than my instructions." If they had only hearkened to the prophet's voice, they might have found rest from warlike preparations, and that more blessed rest which comes from obedience to the Divine precepts.

But the Lord's word was offensive to them from its vary simplicity. They rejected it: so, like a drunken man, the nation tottered and stumbled to its ruin.

The Teacher's Lantern.

The Prophet Isaiah appears in a new role. He is par excellence the temperance reformer of his age. He is the model for every age. He is not intemperate in his attack upon intemperance. Yet for moral earnestness he is not surpassed.

Drunkenness is usually insolent. It was ribald and abusive toward the prophet. But this did not deter him. He warded off the sneer with a terrible denunciation.

Canaan was the bridge between Syria and Egypt. The world-powers of that age coveted it. Possession of it was a strategic necessity. It could be used either as a thoroughfare or a buffer. But the Israelites might have held the country against all comers. Its mountainous character was a natural defense. Horses and chariots (the artillery of the ancients) could not be used there.

But drunkenness was the real foe to the northern and southern kingdoms. It led to their overthrow. They were "overcome of wine" literally wine-smitten. They were hit as with a hammer, stricken to earth. Israel never rose again, and Judah a mere shadow of former grandeur.

The luxurious refinement of the kingdom of Israel and its crimson-clothed nobles as described by Amos, makes one think of the palaces and villas of Pompeii as they have been brought to light by extensive excavations—"summer and winter houses, ivory palaces, gardens, vineyards, fig-orchards, olive-yards, melody of viols, beds of ivory, fragrant ointments, and wine by the bowlfull" is the prophet's inventory. This cultivation of æsthetic effects for eye and ear and palate is not in itself reprehensible. But a halt must be called when thebenificent Giver is forgotten in the greedy enjoyment of the gift. And the proportion of life must be maintained. To lose that proportion, even in perfectly innocent things, is to be intemperate. Intemperance of any kind tends to lower the moral tone. Intemperance persisted in ends in total loss of moral tone. The Man becomes a Thing. This is in a sense the unforgivable sin. For the human is the temple of the Divine, and when the temple is ruined the Divine must make His exit.

In our day, as in Isaiah's, some priests and prophets err in vision through drink or other forms of intemperance. But discrimination must be made between the genuine and the professional priests and prophets. There is a spurious officialism which counts for nothing in the cure of souls.

There are ninety texts in the Old Testament which refer to the sin of drunkenness, and many more in the New Testament. The Bible is a red lantern swung across the path of youth.

Every one is under the highest moral obligation to cast the full weight of his influence everywhere and always against this evil.

LEGAL GIANTS TOPROBE ELECTION

Determined Fight Will Be Made to Gain Control of the State.

With the state election nearly a year off the Republicans are preparing for the fight and are mapping out a plan by which they hope to defeat the Democrats in those counties wherein the Wilson bill is operative.

Under the provisions of that act the names of the candidates for office in certain black belt counties must appear on the ballots without party designations. The act is operative in Anne Arundel, Calvert, Charles, Frederick, Garrett, Kent, Prince George, St. Mary, Somerset, Talbott and Worcester counties, and in each of these the ballots next year will contain the names of the candidates for state offices, for the Legislature and for the various county offices.

At the last election but two marks were required on the ballot—one after the names of the Presidential candidates and one after the congressional candidate—and the illiterate were easily taught to make these two marks. To vote for a full Republican ticket at the next election it will be necessary to make from six to twenty marks on the ticket—varving in the different counties according to the number of local officials to be chosen. The constitutional amendment will also be placed on the tickets and will require an additional mark "for" or "against."

To circumvent the apparent effort to confuse the illiterate vote the Republicans have been discussing various methods, and a plan has been formulated to nominate only one man on the ticket in counties heavily populated with negroes, so that they can be taught to vote for that nominee and against the amendment—requiring only two marks, the same number required at the election of last week.

This will not be done in Frederick and Garrett counties, which have hold over Republican senators, but the plan will be used in the other Wilson bill counties. Successors are to be chosen for Senators Gray, of Charles; Wilson, of Prince George; Greenwell, of St. Mary,s; Dixon, of Talbott, and Moore, of Worcestor.

In each of these counties the method to be used by the Republicans will be to name only a candidate for the state Senate, and teach the illiterate to place marks after his name. Three of the retiring senators are Democrats and two Republicans, but by this method the Republicans hope to return five of their party to the upper house of the Legislature. Four of the holdover senators are Republicans, and with the five from the Wilson bill counties the leaders hope to have nine "sure" members of the body.

VOLUME 28. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1904. NUMBER 40

GOVERNOR WILL NOT PUBLISH AMENDMENTS.

Correspondence Between Mr. Vandiver and Gov. Warfield On the Subject.

LATTER FIRM IN DETERMINATION

Not to Proclaim the Acts—He Claims They are Not Operative—Attorney General Bryan Will Appear for the Executive in Court.

The long-looked for letter which Governor Warfield and the public have been expecting from Chairman Vandiver, of the Democratic State Central Committee, inquiring the Governor's intentions as to whether he will publish the two Constitutional Amendments passed by the last Legislature, was handed the Governor last Tuesday afternoon.

GENERAL VANDIVER'S LETTER.

"Havre de Grace, Md., Nov. 22, 1904.

"His Excellency, Edwin Warfield, Governor of Maryland, Annapolis, Md.

"Dear Sir—Your Excellency is well aware of the fact that by a vote of three-fifths of all the members elected to the Senate and House of Delegates, the General Assembly at its last session proposed to the people two amendments to our Constitution, viz: One to Section 1 of Article 1, relating to the elective franchise, and the other to Section 34 of Article 3, relating to State appropriations to public roads.

"Under the belief that proposals to amend the Constitution must emanate from the General Assembly alone and that the approval of the Governor is not necessary to entitle them, when duly passed by the prescribed vote in each House, to be submitted to the people for adoption or rejection, and that his veto can not lawfully prevent them from being thus submitted, these two proposed amendments were not sent to your Excellency for your consideration.

"Your Excellency, however, in an official communication to the General Assembly, took occasion to express the opinion that a bill proposing a constitutional amendment was precisely like any other bill and could not be operative unless approved by the Governor, or passed over his veto by the prescribed three-fifths vote of each house.

"And thus the matter stood at the end of the session.

"As a registered voter and on behalf of many other registered voters interested in the question, I respectfully request that you will inform me whether this opinion of yours will lead you to refuse to cause these two proposed constitutional amendments to be published as prescribed by Article 14 of the Constitution, so that the people may have an opportunity to vote upon them at the general election next November.

"In making this request I venture to express the hope that further reflection and a careful examination of the adjudicated cases upon the subject have led you to the conclusion that a bill proposing to the people an amendment to the Constitution, and which until adopted by them is a palpably different measure from an ordinary Legislative bill in Maryland, which the Governor must pass upon before it becomes operative, that the General Assembly alone without the concurrence of the Governor has the exclusive constitutional right to propose to the people amendments to the Constitution, and that consequently upon this reconsideration of the subject your Excellency will order the prescribed publication to be made.

"No harm can result from this course, for the reason that if the people shall adopt the proposed amendments all irregularity in the mode of proposing them, supposing that such irregularity may well be claimed to exist, will thereby be effectually cured; while, on the other hand, their rejection by the people will be equally conclusive.

"Should you, however, feel that your duty requires you to withhold from the people all opportunity to vote upon these two measures by declining to publish them at least three months before the election next November, I respectfully beg what your purpose is, so that immediate steps may be taken to bring the question to a final judicial decision without delay.

"Trusting that you will favor me with an early reply, I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"MURRAY VANDIVER

THE GOVERNOR'S REPLY.

after reading the letter the Governor made the following reply:

"Executive Office,

"Annapolis, Md., Nov. 22, 1904.

"Hon. Murray Vandiver, Harve de Grace, Marvland:

"My Dear Sir—In reply to your communication of 22d instant, I respectfully state that, acting upon the advice of the Attorney-General of Maryland, the legal adviser of the Governor selected by the people, I will not cause to be published the proposed constitutional amendments referred to by you, because they have not been submitted to me for my approval as Governor, and hence, are not operative.

Very respectfully,

EDWIN WARFIELD,
Governor of Maryland."

WHAT ATTORNEY GENERAL SAYS.

Attorney-General Bryan said on Tuesday night that if a suit for mandamus is brought either in Baltimore or in Annapolis he would enter a general appearance for the Governor. The Governor, he said, has a right to insist upon being sued in Annapolis, his place of legal residence. If, however, it is more convenient to Mr. Vandiver's attorneys to bring suit in Baltimore the Governor would waive his right to be sued in Annapolis and would appear to the suit in Baltimore.

Trustees' Sale of Real Estate.

Messrs. Frederick A. Thayer and Taylor Morrison, trustees of the estate of the late Hiram Duckworth, will offer for sale upon the premises, in District No. 11, and located about ten miles west of Lonaconing, Allegany county, eight tracts of land belonging to said estate, on Thursday, December 15th, 1904, at the hour of twelve o'clock noon. Oakland, Md., Nov. 19th, 1904.

DR. J. A. THORN:

When I first consulted you, five weeks ago, I was unable to see the chair you offered me, so bad was my eyesight, and was so rapidly growing worse that I am convinced that in thirty days I should have been totally blind. I was unable to sit in a room with a light without great distress, nor could I sleep my eyes troubled me so much.

Now I can see almost as well as ever; could read if you would permit it; sleep like a top, and lamp light distresses me no more.

These facts will be substantiated by personal interview.

AT THE MERCY OF REGISTRARS

No Appeal From Decisions Should the Constitutional Amendment Be Adopted

PREJUDICE WOULD HOLD SWAY

Voters Must Explain Constitution of the State to Registrar's Satisfaction—If this Cannot Be Done He Does Not Vote.

Here are some of the puzzling parts of the Constitution of Maryland which applicants for registration will be called upon to explain if the disfranchising amendment to the Constitution should be adopted. Can any lawyer, can any average citizen, let alone an illiterate, explain any of these sections of the Constitution:

No conviction shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture of estate.

That no law to attain particular persons of treason or felony ought to be made in any case, or at any time hereafter.

That sanguinary laws ought to be avoided as far as it is consistent with the safety of the state.

That no man ought to be taken or imprisoned or disseized of his freehold liberties or privileges, or outlawed or exiled, or in any manner destroyed or deprived of his life, liberty or property, but by the judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.

No ex post facto law ought to be made or retrospective oath or restriction be imposed or required.

The General Assembly shall pass no laws suspending the writ of habeas corpus.

Be it remembered that under the provision of the proposed amendment it will be within the power of the registers of voters to ask these and other equally difficult questions over which the Court of Appeals of this state has differed.

Be it also remembered that the registers of voters, while bipartisan, are appointed by a partisan governor, to whom alone they are responsible.

And be it further remembered that there is no appeal from the decisions of these registers of voters.

The Poe disfranchising amendment can be divided into three provisions, as follows, under which applicants for registration can vote:

First—A person able to read any section of the Constitution of this state submitted to him by the officers of registration and to give a reasonable explanation of the same; or if unable to read such section, is able to understand and give a reasonable explanation thereof when read to him by the registration officers; or

Second—A person who, on the 1st day of January, 1869, or prior thereto, was entitled to vote under the laws of this state or of any other state of the United States wherein he then resided; or

Third—Any made lineal descendant of such last mentioned person who may be 21 years of age or over in the year 1906. No person not thus qualified by coming under some one of the above descriptions shall be entitled to be registered as a qualified voter, nor be entitled to vote.

In other words, if an illiterate did not have the right to vote prior to 1869, or if his father or grandfather did not have the right to vote prior to that time, in order to vote in the future, if the amendment is adopted, he must "understand and give a reasonable explanation" of every section of the Constitution that is read to him by the registration officers.

The Democrats say they started out with the intention of excluding from the suffrage the ignorant colored men of the state, but when the amendment came from the hands of Mr. John P. Poe it also excluded foreign-born voters. In order to include the foreign-born voter, Mr. Glenn H. Worthington, former State's attorney of Frederick county, framed an amendment which met the approval of Governor Warfield, but which was opposed by the Democratic leaders and Democratic majorities in the State and House.

Former State Senator Lewis Putzel Saturday, explained the main differences between the proposed Poe and Worthington amendment.

"The constitntional amendment advocated by Governor Warfield, known as the Worthington amendment," said Mr. Putzel "differs in two important respects from the amendment that is being forced by the Democratic organization, and known as the Poe amendment. Governor Warfield compromised with the Democratic leaders upon the election bills, and even attached a reluctant signature to the offensive Wilson bill, that destroyed a uniform state law and exposed the counties to the partisan ingenuity of Democratic supervisors of election acting under the advice of learned and shrewd legal advisers. The Governor refused, however, to append his signature to the bill embodying the Poe constitutional amendment, and the Democratic leaders, with a ready legal opinion to meet any emergency, determined that the Governor's signiture was unnecessary, and declined to submitted it to him for approval or veto.

"The two material feature in which the Poe amendment differ from the Worthington amendment are:

"1. The Poe amendment applies to all citizens naturalized after the year 1869. This embraces the greater part of our naturalized citizens, as the great influx of immigrants to this country did not commence until after the close of the Civil War. The Worthington amendment exempted all naturalized citizens and their descendants from the operation of the amendment.

"2. The Poe amendment leaves it to the judgment of the registration officers to determine whether the citizen can give a reasonable explanation of any section of the Constitution read to him. He must explain the section read by the registers, and he must explain it to the satisfaction of the registers. In other words, the registers pick out at random any section of the state Constitution and then sit as judges upon the reasonableness of the explanation of it given by the citizen. Each set of registration officers will be an examining board in constitutional law. It is no reflection upon our registers to say that not five in a hundred of them have ever read the state Constitution, and that they themselves could not explain many of its provisions. It matters not whether the naturalized citizen or his children can read the Constitution, they must also explain its provisions to the satisfaction of the registers. Registers of voters are active partisans, and are selected on that account. This provision of the Poe amendment creates an awful temptation to disfranchise voters of the opposite party. The naturalized citizen and his descendants is placed at the mercy of the registers. In politics it is a safe principle that every partisan advantage will be taken and no temptation or opportunity overlooked. The decision of the registers upon the knowledge of the Constitution possessed by the citizen is final. It has the effect of a decision, and there is no appeal from it. There is no doubt upon this point that the judgment of the registers is final. If it were not so we would have the ludicrous situation of the time of four courts being taken up by examinations of citizens in constitutional law.

"The constitutional amendment is only an incident. The material fact is the well-known intention of the leaders of the Democratic party to manipulate elections. The conduct of the Democratic leaders during more than 20 years is a sufficient warning to the people of the state. They aim to control the election machinery. They strive to win elections by the control of the election machinery.

"The ultimate end is to return to the old system of two to one, in which two of their representatives shall have the power to out vote the one in opposition. The present Governor has placed himself in their path to a considerable extent. Unless a man who is opposed to the Democratic organization is elected governor of the state, the party's success at the polls will mean the destruction of popular suffrage in Maryland."—Baltimore American.

BITTINGER.

Snow began falling here on Saturday evening last and continued throughout the night and following day, and this Monday traveling is made possible by sled and sleigh, but the skies have cleared and there is promise of fair weather.

The special services held in the Lutheran church on last Sunday morning were well attended, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather. The rendition of the program was excellent. The pastor, Rev. J. B. Shoup, having had the service in charge.

Mr. G. W. Engle of this place, who has been employed in the Custom House at Baltimore for a year or more, is arranging to take his family down to that city for the winter. Miss Ruth Shoup, daughter of Rev. Shoup, will have Mr. Engles store in charge during Mrs. Engles absence.

After a suspension of some months work has been resumed on the Lutheran parsonage and that building will soon be ready for occupancy.

Mr. Patterson Engle lost a cow last week, and to add to the calamities of the week Mr. Jonas Bittinger lost his pious dog. That gentleman comforts himself by asserting that "Old Jack went good".

Mr. Rickets spent part of last week in this section bird shooting.

The public school organized a literary society at this place on last Friday and will meet at the school house on Friday of each week during the school year.

Messrs. F. M. Bittinger, Albert Brenneman and Harry Durst made a hurried trip to Oakland last Friday.

Estray Notice.

There come to my place recently a spotted heifer calf and a red yearling heifer, the former with no mark of identification; the latter partly white face. Owner will please come forward, pay costs and damages and take same away. C. R. Savedge, Deer Park, Md.

CROWNING EVENT OF SOCIAL SEASON

Offutt-Humbird Nuptials at Washington Street Presbyterian Church.

FOLLOWED BY A RECEPTION

Bride's Home Scene of Much Brilliancy.—The Out of Town Guests, Among Them Being Many From Oakland.

Miss Mary Eleanor Humbird, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Wilson Humbird, of this city, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. William Renix Offutt, of Oakland, Md., last night at 7.30 o'clock at the Washington-st Presbyterian church, the pastor, Rev. James E. Moffatt officiating. The wedding, so complete in every detail, was the climax of the local social season and was one of the prettiest nuptial events int he history of Cumberland. The wedding was followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents at No. 57 Washington-st., where four hundred guests showered their congratuiations on the fair bride and handsome groom.

The ceremony was performed at the church in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives of the contracting parties. Miss Humbird entered the church on the arm of her father and was followed by her maid of honor, Miss Anna Spear and the bridesmaids, Miss Nell Offutt, sister of the groom, Miss Anna Humbird, of Pittsburg; Miss Bessie Shearer, Miss Gretchen Wellington, Miss Bessie Roberts and Miss Marion Gordon. They were met at the altar by the groom, and his groomsman, Mr. D. E. Offutt, Jr. There Rev. Moffatt said the simple ceremony, which pronounced them man and wife. The ushers were Mr. C. Elwood Offutt and Dr. W. H. H. Bixler, of Oakland; Mr. William DeVries, Mr. Elder Humbird, Mr. Crede Wilson and Mr. Charles Offutt.

The color scheme of the wedding, pink and white, was carried out tastily in the decorations at the church, which was beautifully garbed in palms, smilax and pink chrysanthemums, the artistic work of Mr. F. X. Millman, Jr. Miss Mayme Adams presided at the organ during the ceremony.

From 8 to 11 o'clock the Humbird home was the scene of a brilliant reception. In the receiving line were Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Humbird, Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Offutt, the newly married couple and Miss Anna Spear, the maid of honor. The residence was decorated with wild smilax, chrysanthemums and a myriad of miniature electric lights. Daisy's orchestra provided the music for reception. The caterer for the occasion was Harris of Baltimore.

The gowns of the bride, the maid of honor and bridesmaids were beautiful creations of the dressmaker's art. Miss Humbird was becomingly clad in white faille over chiffon silk trimmed in duchess lace. Sprigs of orange blossoms decorated her person and she carried a shower boquet of lillies of the valley. The maid of honor, Miss Spear, wore white lace over white taffeta and carried white chrysanthemums. The maids' costumes were of white taffeta silk, trimmed in lace and ribbons. They carried pink chrysanthemums. Mrs. J. W. Humbird, mother of the bride, was gowned in white lace over white taffeta, trimmed in green.

After the reception, Mr. and Mrs. Offutt left on the Duquesne Limited for a trip in the East. On their return they will reside in Oakland, where Mr. Offutt is a rising young member of the Garrett county bar.

Mrs. Offutt was one of the favorites in local society, due to her beauty and charming manners. Mr. Offutt is well known here. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Offutt of Oakland.

VOLUME 28. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1904. NUMBER 40

GOVERNOR WILL NOT PUBLISH AMENDMENTS.

Correspondence Between Mr. Vandiver and Gov. Warfield On the Subject.

LATTER FIRM IN DETERMINATION

Not to Proclaim the Acts—He Claims They are Not Operative—Attorney General Bryan Will Appear for the Executive in Court.

The long-looked for letter which Governor Warfield and the public have been expecting from Chairman Vandiver, of the Democratic State Central Committee, inquiring the Governor's intentions as to whether he will publish the two Constitutional Amendments passed by the last Legislature, was handed the Governor last Tuesday afternoon.

GENERAL VANDIVER'S LETTER.

"Havre de Grace, Md., Nov. 22,1904.

"His Excellency, Edwin Warfield, Governor of Maryland, Annapolis, Md.

"Dear Sir—Your Excellency is well aware of the fact that by a vote of three-fifths of all the members elected to the Senate and House of Delegates, the General Assembly at its last session proposed to the people two amendments to our Constitution, viz: One to Section 1 of Article 1, relating to the elective franchise, and the other to Section 34 of Article 3, relating to State appropriations to public roads.

"Under the belief that proposals to amend the Constitution must emanate from the General Assembly alone and that the approval of the Governor is not necessary to entitle them, when duly passed by the prescribed vote in each House, to be submitted to the people for adoption or rejection, and that his veto can not lawfully prevent them from being thus submitted, these two proposed amendments were not sent to your Excellency for your consideration.

"Your Excellency, however, in an official communication to the General Assembly, took occasion to express the opinion that a bill proposing a constitutional amendment was precisely like any other bill and could not be operative unless approved by the Governor, or passed over his veto by the prescribed three-fifths vote of each house.

"And thus the matter stood at the end of the session.

"As a registered voter and on behalf of many other registered voters interested in the question, I respectfully request that you will inform me whether this opinion of yours will lead you to refuse to cause these two proposed constitutional amendments to be published as prescribed by Article 14 of the Constitution, so that the people may have an opportunity to vote upon them at the general election next November.

"In making this request I venture to express the hope that further reflection and a careful examination of the adjudicated cases upon the subject have led you to the conclusion that a bill proposing to the people an amendment to the Constitution, and which until adopted by them is a palpably different measure from an ordinary Legislative bill in Maryland, which the Governor must pass upon before it becomes operative, that the General Assembly alone without the concurrence of the Governor has the exclusive constitutional right to propose to the people amendments to the Constitution, and that consequently upon this reconsideration of the subject your Excellency will order the prescribed publication to be made.

"No harm can result from this course, for the reason that if the people shall adopt the proposed amendments all irregularity in the mode of proposing them, supposing that such irregularity may well be claimed to exist, will thereby be effectually cured; while, on the other hand, their rejection by the people will be equally conclusive.

"Should you, however, feel that your duty requires you to withhold from the people all opportunity to vote upon these two measures by declining to publish them at least three months before the election next November, I respectfully beg what your purpose is, so that immediate steps may be taken to bring the question to a final judicial decision without delay.

"Trusting that you will favor me with an early reply, I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"MURRAY VANDIVER

THE GOVERNOR'S REPLY.

after reading the letter the Governor made the following reply:

"Executive Office,

"Annapolis, Md., Nov. 22, 1904.

"Hon. Murray Vandiver, Harve de Grace, Marvland:

"My Dear Sir—In reply to your communication of 22d instant, I respectfully state that, acting upon the advice of the Attorney-General of Maryland, the legal adviser of the Governor selected by the people, I will not cause to be published the proposed constitutional amendments referred to by you, because they have not been submitted to me for my approval as Governor, and hence, are not operative.

Very respectfully,

EDWIN WARFIELD,
Governor of Maryland."

WHAT ATTORNEY GENERAL SAYS.

Attorney-General Bryan said on Tuesday night that if a suit for mandamus is brought either in Baltimore or in Annapolis he would enter a general appearance for the Governor. The Governor, he said, has a right to insist upon being sued in Annapolis, his place of legal residence. If, however, it is more convenient to Mr. Vandiver's attorneys to bring suit in Baltimore the Governor would waive his right to be sued in Annapolis and would appear to the suit in Baltimore.

Oakland, Md., Nov. 19th, 1904.

DR. J. A. THORN:

When I first consulted you, five weeks ago, I was unable to see the chair you offered me, so bad was my eyesight, and was so rapidly growing worse that I am convinced that in thirty days I should have been totally blind. I was unable to sit in a room with a light without great distress, nor could I sleep my eyes troubled me so much.

Now I can see almost as well as ever; could read if you would permit it; sleep like a top, and lamp light distresses me no more.

These facts will be substantiated by personal interview.

AT THE MERCY OF REGISTRARS

No Appeal From Decisions Should the Constitutional Amendment Be Adopted

PREJUDICE WOULD HOLD SWAY

Voters Must Explain Constitution of the State to Registrar's Satisfaction—If this Cannot Be Done He Does Not Vote.

Here are some of the puzzling parts of the Constitution of Maryland which applicants for registration will be called upon to explain if the disfranchising amendment to the Constitution should be adopted. Can any lawyer, can any average citizen, let alone an illiterate, explain any of these sections of the Constitution:

No conviction shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture of estate.

That no law to attain particular persons of treason or felony ought to be made in any case, or at any time hereafter.

That sanguinary laws ought to be avoided as far as it is consistent with the safety of the state.

That no man ought to be taken or imprisoned or disseized of his freehold liberties or privileges, or outlawed or exiled, or in any manner destroyed or deprived of his life, liberty or property, but by the judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.

No ex post facto law ought to be made or retrospective oath or restriction be imposed or required.

The General Assembly shall pass no laws suspending the writ of habeas corpus.

Be it remembered that under the provision of the proposed amendment it will be within the power of the registers of voters to ask these and other equally difficult questions over which the Court of Appeals of this state has differed.

Be it also remembered that the registers of voters, while bipartisan, are appointed by a partisan governor, to whom alone they are responsible.

And be it further remembered that there is no appeal from the decisions of these registers of voters.

The Poe disfranchising amendment can be divided into three provisions, as follows, under which applicants for registration can vote:

First—A person able to read any section of the Constitution of this state submitted to him by the officers of registration and to give a reasonable explanation of the same; or if unable to read such section, is able to understand and give a reasonable explanation thereof when read to him by the registration officers; or

Second—A person who, on the 1st day of January, 1869, or prior thereto, was entitled to vote under the laws of this state or of any other state of the United States wherein he then resided; or

Third—Any made lineal descendant of such last mentioned person who may be 21 years of age or over in the year 1906. No person not thus qualified by coming under some one of the above descriptions shall be entitled to be registered as a qualified voter, nor be entitled to vote.

In other words, if an illiterate did not have the right to vote prior to 1869, or if his father or grandfather did not have the right to vote prior to that time, in order to vote in the future, if the amendment is adopted, he must "understand and give a reasonable explanation" of every section of the Constitution that is read to him by the registration officers.

The Democrats say they started out with the intention of excluding from the suffrage the ignorant colored men of the state, but when the amendment came from the hands of Mr. John P. Poe it also excluded foreign-born voters. In order to include the foreign-born voter, Mr. Glenn H. Worthington, former State's attorney of Frederick county, framed an amendment which met the approval of Governor Warfield, but which was opposed by the Democratic leaders and Democratic majorities in the State and House.

Former State Senator Lewis Putzel Saturday, explained the main differences between the proposed Poe and Worthington amendment.

"The constitutional amendment advocated by Governor Warfield, known as the Worthington amendment," said Mr. Putzel "differs in two important respects from the amendment that is being forced by the Democratic organization, and known as the Poe amendment. Governor Warfield compromised with the Democratic leaders upon the election bills, and even attached a reluctant signature to the offensive Wilson bill, that destroyed a uniform state law and exposed the counties to the partisan ingenuity of Democratic supervisors of election acting under the advice of learned and shrewd legal advisers. The Governor refused, however, to append his signature to the bill embodying the Poe constitutional amendment, and the Democratic leaders, with a ready legal opinion to meet any emergency, determined that the Governor's signature was unnecessary, and declined to submitted it to him for approval or veto.

"The two material feature in which the Poe amendment differ from the Worthington amendment are:

"1. The Poe amendment applies to all citizens naturalized after the year 1869. This embraces the greater part of our naturalized citizens, as the great influx of immigrants to this country did not commence until after the close of the Civil War. The Worthington amendment exempted all naturalized citizens and their descendants from the operation of the amendment.

"2. The Poe amendment leaves it to the judgment of the registration officers to determine whether the citizen can give a reasonable explanation of any section of the Constitution read to him. He must explain the section read by the registers, and he must explain it to the satisfaction of the registers. In other words, the registers pick out at random any section of the state Constitution and then sit as judges upon the reasonableness of the explanation of it given by the citizen. Each set of registration officers will be an examining board in constitutional law. It is no reflection upon our registers to say that not five in a hundred of them have ever read the state Constitution, and that they themselves could not explain many of its provisions. It matters not whether the naturalized citizen or his children can read the Constitution, they must also explain its provisions to the satisfaction of the registers. Registers of voters are active partisans, and are selected on that account. This provision of the Poe amendment creates an awful temptation to disfranchise voters of the opposite party. The naturalized citizen and his descendants is placed at the mercy of the registers. In politics it is a safe principle that every partisan advantage will be taken and no temptation or opportunity overlooked. The decision of the registers upon the knowledge of the Constitution possessed by the citizen is final. It has the effect of a decision, and there is no appeal from it. There is no doubt upon this point that the judgment of the registers is final. If it were not so we would have the ludicrous situation of the time of four courts being taken up by examinations of citizens in constitutional law.

"The constitutional amendment is only an incident. The material fact is the well-known intention of the leaders of the Democratic party to manipulate elections. The conduct of the Democratic leaders during more than 20 years is a sufficient warning to the people of the state. They aim to control the election machinery. They strive to win elections by the control of the election machinery.

"The ultimate end is to return to the old system of two to one, in which two of their representatives shall have the power to out vote the one in opposition. The present Governor has placed himself in their path to a considerable extent. Unless a man who is opposed to the Democratic organization is elected governor of the state, the party's success at the polls will mean the destruction of popular suffrage in Marvland."—Baltimore American.

BITTINGER.

Snow began falling here on Saturday evening last and continued throughout the night and following day, and this Monday traveling is made possible by sled and sleigh, but the skies have cleared and there is promise of fair weather.

The special services held in the Lutheran church on last Sunday morning were well attended, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather. The rendition of the program was excellent. The pastor, Rev. J. B. Shoup, having had the service in charge.

Mr. G. W. Engle of this place, who has been employed in the Custom House at Baltimore for a year or more, is arranging to take his family down to that city for the winter. Miss Ruth Shoup, daughter of Rev. Shoup, will have Mr. Engles store in charge during Mrs. Engles absence.

After a suspension of some months work has been resumed on the Lutheran parsonage and that building will soon be ready for occupancy.

Mr. Patterson Engle lost a cow last week, and to add to the calamities of the week Mr. Jonas Bittinger lost his pious dog. That gentleman comforts himself by asserting that "Old Jack went good".

Mr. Rickets spent part of last week in this section bird shooting.

The public school organized a literary society at this place on last Friday and will meet at the school house on Friday of each week during the school year.

Messrs. F. M. Bittinger, Albert Brenneman and Harry Durst made a hurried trip to Oakland last Friday.

Estray Notice.

There come to my place recently a spotted heifer calf and a red yearling heifer, the former with no mark of identification; the latter partly white face. Owner will please come forward, pay costs and damages and take same away. C. R. Savedge, Deer Park, Md.

FOLLOWED BY A RECEPTION

Bride's Home Scene of Much Brilliancy.—The Out of Town Guests, Among Them Being Many From Oakland.

Miss Mary Eleanor Humbird, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. They were met at the altar by the groom, and his groomsman, Mr. D. E. Offutt, Jr. There Rev. Moffatt said the simple ceremony, which pronounced them man and wife. The ushers were Mr. C. Elwood Offutt and Dr. W. H. H. Bixler, of Oakland; Mr. William DeVries, Mr. Elder Humbird, Mr. Crede Wilson and Mr. Charles Offutt.

Sprigs of orange blossoms decorated her person and she carried a shower boquet of lillies of the valley. The maid of honor, Miss Spear, wore white lace over white taffeta and carried white chrysanthemums. The maids' costumes were of white taffeta silk, trimmed in lace and ribbons. PLEASANT FIELDS OF HOLY WRIT

Hezekiah Reopens the Temple.

After a monotonous succession of incompetence and viciousness in the dynasty of Judah, Hezekiah comes to the throne. It is like finding a lily on a dunghill. He stands between his Moloch-worshiping father and his evil-doing son, unsullied by either. He cultivated the arts of peace and enriched himself and his people. He undertook extensive fortification and engineering works, especially the strengthening of the city walls and perfecting the water supply. He compiled a hymn-book for the Hebrew Church from the Psalms of David and Asaph, and made noble contributions to it himself if his sole-surviving hymn (Isa. xxxviii, 10-20) may be taken as an example. But these are minor matters as compared with his wide-visioned statesmanship which undertook unification of the dismembered nation under the original sacred charter.

The times were very evil and irreligious. The Chronicler tells of Israel's neglect of the temple in graphic phrase. They showed their backs to it instead of their faces. They shut the doors, put out the lamps, and ceased from incense and offerings. The sacred ritual was entirely discontinued. Neglect of a public edifice is a species of vandalism, slower, but ultimately as effective as the hammer of the iconoclast. When sweeper and artisan left off their daily work, filth accumulated, and the holy and magnificent house was on the verge of dissolution.

No reasons of State or policy deterred the young king from at once mending this evil. He did not wait until he had tested the allegiance of his subjects or debated the matter with his counsel of princes. He immediatetv addressed himself to the task of restoring religion and strenuously squared himself to the difficulties involved.

The account of this house-cleaning extraordinary is given with interesting detail. The immense debris which filled the courts may be judged from the fact that it was necessary to clear it away first before access to the interior could be had, and that it required eight days of incessant toil to achieve it. Eight days more were spent in the temple proper before the last load of filth was dumped into the Kidron. The restoration of the furniture followed—the brazen altar, the lavers, and the golden shew-bread table and the vessels of various kinds. Some of these Ahaz had sacrilgilously cut to pieces, or had polluted by using them at idol altars. This great and temple, itself a sermon in stone, each area of which, with its accompanying furniture, had its particular significance, was now ready for solemn reopening.

With irrepressible solicitude the king hastened the service. The ritual of Moses and the orchestra and chorus of David were revived. There was first the expiatory service for the kingdom; i. e., the royal family; for the sanctuary itself, which had been polluted; for the priests who had been negligent and unholy, and for Judah, the whole mass of the people. Then the people praised with gladness and worshiped

Hezekiah naturally wished to crown this revival by observing the long-omitted festival of the Passover, and to make it the occasion of a national reunion of the long-dismembered empire. This he could do without having sinister motives ascribed to him, for the northern kingdom was already extinct. The king's carefully worded appeal was carried by flying postmen from Dan to Beersheba. It was treated just as the urgent gospel message of to-day is, some mocked; some humbled themselves. The latter were numerous enough to make a great assembly. The simple, beautiful, significant rite of the Passover was observed again under happy auspices. A crusade against the false rites naturally followed the revival of the true. Altars and idols went down into that natural receptacle of the offscouring, the chasm of Kidron.

The Teacher's Lantern.

The Jews' periodic neglect of their temple should not surprise us overmuch or seem incredible. Something not unlike it has occurred in Christian times. Miliman tells us how, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, laded mules were led through the aisles of St. Paul, bargains struck, burglaries planned, and servants hired there.

The state of a religious edifice in a given place is usually faithful index to the state of religion itself in that place. A well-kept church as a rule indicates religion dominant and vice versa.

Hezekiah, with David and Josiah, are reckoned the preeminently pious. He stood for worship.

It was a courageous thing for Hezekiah to abruptly and completely reverse his father's policy both at home and abroad in matters of State and religion. It shows the strength and depth of his conviction.

No more appropriate text for a reopening sermon could be found than the Levite's report to the king, "We have cleansed all the house of Jehovah," and and no finer example of an orderly, dignified, and inspiring religious service can be found. It was a national act of worship, unanimous, humble, and joyous.

Child Study And Sunday-School Methods.

The ideal primary scholar of the past generation was as motionless and silent as a little carved image. Instead of being canonized, however, he ought to have been the subject of a pathological inquest. For, to insist that little children shall sit demurely like old people is physiologically wrong. The fact is that the normal child is mostly a little animal. Development of the body is his chief business. Instinct keeps him in perpetual motion. One moment it is his vocal organs. He laughs, talks, cries; the latter, though disagreeable, is thought to be most beneficial, especially to the lungs. The next moment he throws out his arms and legs or he reaches and pulls, then follows a bending and contorting of the trunk. All the while nature, his invisible monitor, unconsciously to himself, is taking him through a course in physical culture. The primary teacher who does not take this physiological view of the case, but sees in it all only disorder and disobedience, is to be sincerely pitied. There are expedients furnished by the advanced methods of to-day by which a reasonable degree of order and quiet can be secured without mention of the words, and certainly without upbraiding of the scholars. A gesture-song, an object-lesson, simple calisthenics, a walk about the room or through the hall, keeping step to a marching song. If weather permits, a complete change of atmosphere, by going into the open and a bit of nature study under shelter of some tree is a good device. Singing is also a grateful relief. The child delights in anything rhythmic in sound or motion.

THE GOVERNOR AND THE REACTIONARIES.

"As a registered voter and on behalf of many others registered voters" is the form of words employed by Chairman Vandiver in applying to Governor Warfield for a statement as to whether the Governor intends to refuse to cause "the two proposed Constitntional amendments" to be published so that the people may vote upon them next November. It is the right form of words, and Mr. Vandiver's letter is in all ways entirely correct. But what is it that Mr. Vandiver really represents, and that the Constitutional amendment opposed by Governor Warfield really stands for? What is the spirit of the Democratic leadership of which Mr. Vandiver, by virtue of his position, is naturally the spokesman? Whither has it led the party in the past, and what is it proposing to do with the Constitution of the State of Maryland at the present time?

These questions are highly pertinent at this moment, when the issue between Governer Warfield and Attorney General Bryan on the one hand and the old-time Democratic management on the other has just been formally drawn, through the Governer's reply to Mr. Vandiver's inquiry. On the face of it, this correspondence results in sending to the courts the legal question of the Governor's Constitutional power in the premises; and it remains to be seen whether the final decision of the courts will sustain Attorney General Bryan and Governor Warfield or not. But on the supposition that the Governor is not sustained, what will be the situation? The people of Maryland will be called upon to determine whether an election contrivance gotten up by the old-time Democratic ring managers shall be made part of their fundamental and organic law, of their State Constitution. They will know that the contrivance was severely condemned by the Democratic Governor of the State, fresh from election by a decisive majority, and was emphatically denounced as vicious and dangerous by the Democratic Attorney General, chosen at the same election. They will not forget that the men behind the amendment are men who had for years and years carried on politics with the ruling idea that the first business of the political manager was to manipulate election laws, election arrangements and election officials in such a way as to make the handling of the votes take the place of the persuasion of the voters. Neither experience of success under a straight election law nor experience of failure under a crooked one teaches such men anything. They hanker after crooked election business as a toper hankers after his drink. They want to have a chance to monkey with the registration lists, and to devise new tricks in the ballots, and to manipulate the count of them. And it is in the spirit of this sort of thing that they got up their Constitutional amendment.

But can it be believed that the people of Maryland wish to imbed that sort of thing in the solid rock of their State Constitution? Whatever doubt there may have been on this question some time ago it can hardly be that there is any room for doubt now. The whole thing seems to have gone stale, to have lost what little flavor of sense, or timeliness, or attractiveness of any kind that it ever had. It was in large part the outcome of the disfranchising movement of the States of the far South, States in which the great magnitude of the negro population called for a resort to extreme measures. No such condition exists in Maryland, and even in the States to the south of us enlightened citizens look forward with satisfaction to the prospect of a more and more impartial application of suffrage qualification laws to both races. As to the proposition of the Poe amendment, it not only looks away from any such object as regards the races, but puts it in the power of election officials to disfranchise white men as well as black upon their mere caprice. The idea that Maryland wants to go backward in her election laws when almost every State in the Union is going forward can hardly be supposed to have any basis in fact.

If the Democratic managers were wise they would pray that the Court of Appeals may find it possible to sustain the contention of the Governor and the Attorney General, and thus let them out of their ugly position. They got into that position by their inveterate love on crooked election methods—methods which constituted, indeed, the whole creed of that Democratic leadership which so long had its sway unbroken in this State. Surely it must be possible to say now with confidence that this is a creed outworn. The people of Maryland certainly do not relish the dreary business of trick ballots and discarded votes that has figured so prominently in recent elections. Neither do they desire, we feel sure, to strike a jarring note as regards the franchise question, at a time when it is the hope of the best people of the South and of the North alike that matters may be allowed to develop quietly during the next few years, without the raising of sectional or racial animosities. The people of the States to the south of us have had a hard problem on their hands, and have reached a sort of resting place in their dealing with it. Here in Maryland we have no such problem, but we have a busy little clique of discredited and outgrown politicians who, under cover of the race question are trying to get in their fine work, regardless of its effect either upon the State of Maryland or upon the feeling between North and South. They are at business which is thoroughly out of time and out of tune, and they ought to welcome with delight any chance they may yet retire from it as gracefully as possible.—Baltimore News.

Different Kind of Bugs From What He Thought

JONES had shyly, but admiringly, watched the two young women as they rustled into the car and took the seat in front of him. They were so sweet, so charmingly sweet and dainty that he unconsciously sighed and then consciously sighed again, because they had not the pleasure of his acquaintance. But suddenly a shock thrilled through him, a torturing, agonizing shock, as when one's dentist drills into a nerve.

"I haven't a single bug this year," the girl next the window was saying proudly. "I've looked and looked, and I can't find a single one."

"Oh, I have millions!" said the other girl despondently. "I don't believe I ever had half as many before in all my life."

Jones grew red clear to the tips of his ears.

"Haven't you done anything for them?" asked the one next the window.

"Yes, I've washed and powdered and powdered and washed and done everything, but they just seem to thrive on it," replied the other despairingly. "I don't believe I'll ever get rid of the horrid things."

Jones grew redder and fidgeted frantically as a terrific itch developed suddenly in the small of his back.

"Have you used tobacco?" asked the one next the window suggestively.

"Pounds and bushels of it," replied the other hopelessly.

"And I thought it was that old reprobate over there who made this car so rank," murmured Jones, with an apologetic look at the old laborer across the aisle.

"Well, you'll have to do something for them," declared the one next the window, signaling for the car to stop, "or you'll be eaten up alive by them."

"I know it," replied the other, as they rose, "and I've a notion to burn up every rosebush in the yard and start all over again."

"Whew!" muttered Jones, mopping the sweat from his brow. "I seem to be a bigger fool every day."—Pittsburg Post.

Sold Again.

The horse, a very handsome animal, had just changed hands.

"I do not see any fault in him," boasted the proud buyer.

"No, and I can assure you that he will never see any in you," remarked the foxy salesman, pocketing the fat roll.

It was not until the horse had walked into a post on his way out of the ring that the buyer realized the truth of this remark.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

All peoples, places, pole to pole,
Yet in one kiss includes the whole!

CONSTIPATION

Pettikins

By VIRGINIA WOODWARD CLOUD

Copyright, 1904, by Virginia Woodward Cloud

"I SUPPOSE that it is right to leave Pettikins home with Mary Doolin," said Marabel, pinning her hat on before the glass. "There is not room for her, of course. But to leave children with servants is not, as a rule, judicious."

"What's judishes?" cried Pettikins, drawing her curly head in the window. "Why isn't there room this evenin' for me to drive too? Why can't I go?"

"Gracious, I forgot she was there!" said Marabel.

"There are occasions when absence of mind is precious," remarked Miss Reed.

Pettikins eyed her sister's friend speculatively. She adored Miss Reed because it appeared to Pettikins that the young lady talked as people do in books.

"Now, listen to me," broke in Marabel. "We are going to the station to meet Uncle George. You must stay right here with Mary Doolin. Only be sure to put your best white dress on."

Marabel ran downstairs, and Pettikins, following, heard Miss Reed say:

"You might as well, Marabel, or she'll find it out herself after one of her fits of silence. I never came across so inquiring a mind. She's an embryo Columbus."

"Embrolumbus," repeated Pettikins as the door closed. "Embrolumbus," she said soberly on the way to the kitchen to find Mary Doolin. But Mary Doolin was sitting on a bench outside paring peaches.

"Mary, what's a embrolumbus?" said Pettikins.

"Don't come askin' me no more av thim haythen names!" said Mary Doolin.

"I'm wishin' somethin' might happen," said Pettikins soberly, "a bear or soldiers maybe with red coats and brass horns and muffs on their heads, and all fightin' right here in the yard. Then before they shot at us, Mary Doolin, I'd run out and holler, 'Don't shoot!' and they'd stop."

"Did ye iver!" said Mary admiringly as Pettikins' thin little figure and tiny hands struck an attitude. "Oh, the military is just grand! An' wouldn't ye be afeared av the firin', Pettikins?"

Pettikins shook her head, standing absorbed in thought.

"Things don't happen 'cept to grown young ladies, do they, Mary?"

The shade of wistfulness did not escape the shrewd Irish eyes upon her.

"Niver mind. Ye'll soon be a beautiful lady drivin' off to mate yer swate-"

"Uncle George," corrected Pettikins.

"Av coorse, yer Uncle George. An' ye naden't be wantin' things to happen the like av the 'currence I could tell ye this minit."

"What's a 'currence, Mary Doolin? Please tell me what's a 'currence."

"Niver a bit will I, thin! 'Twas all in the mornin' paper about a woman down to the Branch. Mis' McCree she was, pore sowl! All through her tinder heart she loses her last rid cint."

"Go on, go on, Mary Doolin! Please tell me how she lost her cent through her heart."

"Not I, indade! She, thinkin' him a book agint, an' he, wid his little black bag all innocentlike an' knowin' she was alone by herself"—

"An' what was he, Mary Doolin—what was he?" demanded Pettikins, jumping up and down in her excitement.

"A burglar man, sure—a burglar man as burgled ivery cint av her hard airn-in's, an' Mis' McCree that scared she didn't kape the head av a fish worm on her, but lay there kickin' an' squallin' while he fills his little black bag wid her vallybles an' bows as polite as ye plaze!"

"WHAT'S A EMBROLUMBUS?"

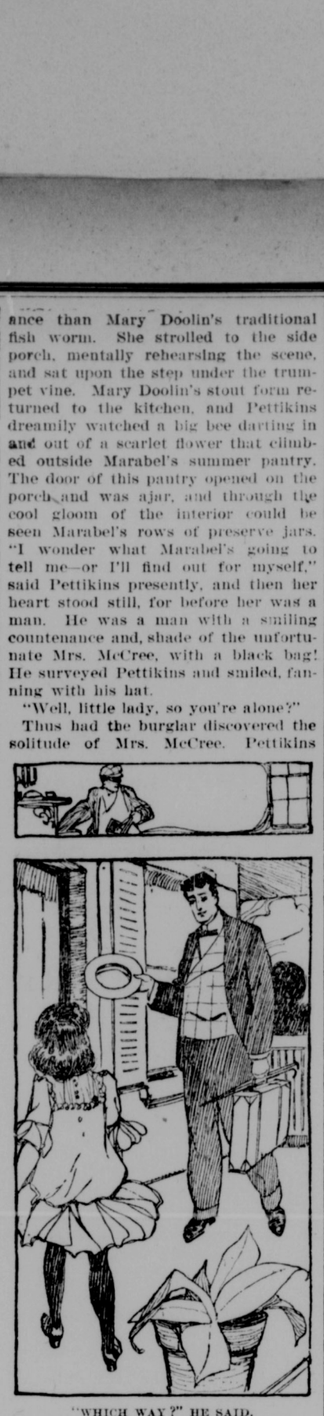
Pettikins stood absorbed in the details of Mis' McCree's tragic occurrence. This, indeed, was having something happen with a vengeance. But Pettikins was certain that she would have possessed more power of resistance than Mary Doolin's traditional fish worm. She strolled to the side porch, mentally rehearsing the scene, and sat upon the step under the trumpet vine. Mary Doolin's stout form returned to the kitchen, and Pettikins dreamily watched a big bee darting in and out of a scarlet flower that climbed outside Marabel's summer pantry. The door of this pantry opened on the porch and was ajar, and through the cool gloom of the interior could be seen Marabel's rows of preserve jars. "I wonder what Marabel's going to tell me—or I'll find out for myself," said Pettikins presently, and then her heart stood still, for before her was a man. He was a man with a smiling countenance and, shade of the unfortunate Mrs. McCree, with a black bag! He surveyed Pettikins and smiled, fanning with his hat.

"Well, little lady, so you're alone?"

Thus had the burglar discovered the solitude of Mrs. McCree. Pettikins



"WHICH WAY?" HE SAID.

opened her lips to scream, but they were dry. Her quick, logical mind and vivid imagination jumped to the uttermost conclusion. This, then, was a burglar—nay, no doubt the very burglar man who had reduced the heroine of Mary Doolin's story to the semblance of a fish worm. Here was the innocent aspect, the polite subservience, actually the black bag containing the tools of his nefarious craft!

And Mary Doolin, singing in the kitchen, was a hundred miles away.

"I fancy that your sister has driven to the station," said the burglar and waited, but Pettikins did not speak. "And suppose you ask me in," he continued, "or, as I am tired and warm, I shall have to go in without an invitation."

He smiled and actually stepped upon the porch. Pettikins sprang to her feet. "Which way," he said—"this?"

"Yes," breathed Pettikins, with a swift illumination of thought as the burglar stepped within the darkness of the summer pantry. In a second she had slammed and locked the door upon him, drawing from its lock the great key which stayed outside. And then her feet flew to the kitchen.

"Mary Doolin," cried Pettikins, seizing Mary's skirt, "I've got a burglar man! Yes, I have, Mary! He's the one that burgled Mis' McCree of her red cent, for he's got his black bag along and his knives and things in it!"

"Is it off yer head ye are, Pettikins?" cried Mary Doolin.

But Pettikins' eyes were great and impressive. "Mary Doolin, I've locked him in the pantry before he could burgle us like he did Mis' McCree, and here's the key, and he's-makin' a awful noise!"

"Mother av Moses!" exclaimed Mary Doolin, seizing the key. "If it's the truth ye're tellin' me, what'll become av the pair av us, wid niver a man to hand 'cept one, an' him a thafe an' a robber? Come along, Pettikins, till I listen to him. Sure, I'd rather be out av the house than in it this minit before he crapes out the pantry chimbly! It's the brave child ye are, Pettikins, to arrist a thafe, but the saints come down an' help us if he gets out av there!"

Mary Doolin cautiously approached the summer pantry armed with a shovel. Strange sounds were issuing therefrom. Calls, expostulations and raps followed in quick succession, while Mary crouched upon the grass, muttering to the saints, and Pettikins stood by, thrilled with the solemn enjoyment of such excitement.

When the yellow cart rolled in the gate, with Marabel driving and Miss Reed chatting to Uncle George, their consternation may be imagined. A volley of explanations met them, accentuated by the shovel, which Mary Doolin waved alternately from Pettikins to the pantry. Pettikins meanwhile stood by drinking in the elaborated details with grave delight.

"An' the dirty thafe, wid his pistols in his bag, ready to burgle us out av the house, a-bowin' an' scrapin' an' thinkin' to take her in! Not she, indade! Seein' I'd tould her about pore Mis' McCree, she says, 'Walk in, sir,' swate as honey, says she, an' in he walks to Miss Marrybel's pantry, an' she up an' shlams the door on him, an' there he is now a-burglin' Miss Marrybel's preserves, the owdacious thafe!"

"And my head wasn't like a fish worm's, was it, Mary Doolin?" said Pettikins softly, with her eyes on Mary's face.

Marabel and Miss Reed looked at each other in bewilderment, and Uncle George said: "I'm afraid she's crazy. She's talking about fish worms."

"Hear him, thin, for yerself!" cried Mary Doolin dramatically as there was a sudden outburst from the pantry, accompanied by violent raps.

"Say, let me out of here, can't you? Mr. Bumstead, Miss Marabel! Unlock the door!"

"Hear to his imperdence!" cried Mary Doolin, while Pettikins stood first on one foot and then on the other in her silent and ecstatic enjoyment of the excitement.

But Marabel sprang forward and shook Pettikins by the shoulder.

"Elinor Lee Bumstead, you dreadful child! Give me that key, quick!"

Mary Doolin tremblingly produced it, saying, "Sure, Miss Marrybel, ye wouldn't be turnin' him loose on us now!"

"Burglar, indeed!" exclaimed Marabel, with a very red face. She threw the pantry door wide, and the burglar stepped forth, fanning himself with his hat.

"How d'ye do?" he said. "It's warm in there."

"Chenoweth!" exclaimed Uncle George, with a shout of laughter.

"How perfectly shameful!" cried Marabel. "But it was Pettikins. You know, I warned you!"

"Mother av Moses!" exclaimed Mary Doolin, rushing to the kitchen, with her apron over her face.

"I thought you weren't coming," murmured Marabel to the burglar.

"I took the wrong train and had to walk from the junction," said the burglar to Marabel. And then they all looked for Pettikins, but she had disappeared.

"The child is so sensitive that I am afraid she will cry herself sick over the mistake," said Miss Reed. So Uncle George went in search, prepared to dry Pettikins' floods of mortified tears. He found her sitting behind a haystack, gazing speculatively into space.

"Never mind, girlie," began Uncle George. "Accidents will happen in the best regulated"—

"Uncle George," said Pettikins, turning upon him an absorbed gaze, "what would he have done if he'd been a really burglar man? Please tell me, Uncle George."

"Young lady," said her uncle, "are you aware that the gentleman whom you locked up for an hour in that pantry is your sister's fiance?"

"What's fiance?" said Pettikins.

"The man your sister's going to marry."

"Oh!" There was silence for a second, then, "Uncle George"—she twisted a button of his coat around abstractedly—"do you know what he's got in his black bag?"

"Clothes most likely. Why?"

Pettikins gave a sigh of genuine disappointment. "The one who burgled Mis' McCree had a black bag with knives in it," she said wistfully. Uncle George leaned backward on the hay and laughed long and loud, while Pettikins watched him uncomprehendingly. Then he arose and took Pettikins to be presented to her future brother-in-law in spite of the fact that Marabel looked disapprovingly at the calico dress and straw decorated hair.

"GIVE ME THAT KEY, QUICK!"

"This is Miss Elinor Lee Bumstead," announced Uncle George, while Pettikins shook hands with the burglar.

"I have heard that Pettikins is a unique character, and I can vouch for her prompt action in emergency," said the burglar. In a moment Pettikins' small feet had flown to the kitchen, where Mary Doolin was taking a pan of biscuits from the oven.

"Mary Doolin, Mary Doolin! What's a neck carracker? Tell me, please, Mary!"

But Mary Doolin exclaimed wrathfully: "Go 'long way wid ye for a bad child, Pettikins, wid yer stories about thaves an' robbers an' lockin' up a foine gintleman in the pantry, an' him yer sister's beau! I'm that ashamed I could walk a mile wid peas in me shoes!"

So Pettikins slipped around the side of the house and sat upon the porch steps in the early twilight, and presently Miss Reed's voice could be heard saying, "The child is so imaginative that she really performed a heroic action."

And then a little figure crept out to where Uncle George sat smoking upon the grass, and two intense dark eyes looked through the dusk.

"Uncle George," she whispered, "just tell me one thing. What's a 'roic action?"

Animals I Have Been.

I PURCHASED her a hat because
Her thanks I loved to hear.
She flattered me so tenderly,
So archly and so slenderly,
And said I was a deer.

Then she asked me would I buy for her
A gown she wished to wear.
And when I tried refusing her
She thought I was abusing her
And said I was a bear.

A friend I lent some money to,
He slapped my back with force,
Rehearsed my virtues tearfully—
But kept my money cheerfully—
And called me "Good old horse!"

But when I asked my money back
A wonder came to pass.
He looked at me regretfully
And started rather fretfully
To calling me an ass.

For when a lion I would be,
The prodigal must laugh.
He seems to think the treat's on me,
Accepts my drinks and eats on me
As on the fatted calf.

These are examples of the change
That often happens—viz.
The man who's rolling high today,
The biggest whale in all the bay,
Tomorrow's lobster is!

"An' what's he goin' to do now?"

"Lord knows! Ef he don't run for high sheriff I reckon he'll have to go to teachin' school."—Atlanta Constitution.

Diplomacy.

"Why did you not call upon me for a song?" demanded Miss Woodby. "I told you I could sing."

THE M'KINLEY MONUMENT.

Americans without regard to party, will be glad of the completion of the fund of $600,000 for the erection of a national monument to William McKinley. Of this fund New York contributed $150,000, Ohio, McKinley's native state, $100,000, and Illinois $50,000, the remainder coming from all parts of the Union. Not the least gratifying feature in regard to the contributions is that in the main they were in small amounts, coming from the people all over the country, who have thus shown their love and respect for, perhaps, the most popular of American Presidents since "the era of good feeling" in Monroe's time.

While the doctrines promulgated at the Chicago convention in 1896 and at Kansas City in 1900 were, of course, chiefly responsible for McKinley's two great triumphs at the polls, no small part of the second battle, tnat of 1900, was won by the personal popularity of a President who bore himself so graciously and wisely and with such commanding ability in statecraft as to win the esteem and admiration of his political opponents and the love of his own party. Circumstances aided in making his administration conspicuously successful, but history has justly given to President McKinley the greater part of the credit due for carrying the nation safely and wisely through the stress of unsafe political agitation and through a war which has changed the map of the world and given new hope and promise of future triumph to Republican principles. Moreover, it was almost wholly due to the political sagacity of William McKinley and his loyable personality that Democrats of the older school, forced to leave their party in 1896 by its departure from the ancient landmarks, remained with the Republican party in 1900, proud of their leader and of the results they had helped to accomplish. As shown by therecent and unprecedented triumph of President Roosevelt at the polls, these same Democrats are still true to their new allegiance,and, in addition, have been joined by battalions more who have been equally repelled by the vagaries of recent Democracy and attracted by the strong,resolute personality of the President who has so faithfully and admirably carried out the policies of the beloved predecessor and in addition has added achievments of his own which will link his fame still closer with that of William McKinley.

At a time when the completion of the McKinley monument is assured, and it is foreseen that hereafter Canton will have to all patriotic Americans an interest similar to that of Springfield, Ill.,'where the remains of the Great Emancipator now repose underthe restored Lincoln monument, it is well to recall the fact that no one has more justly and fittingly commemorated McKinley's great services to the American Republic than the man who was associated with him in the executive office and who is now his worthy successor. President Roosevelt, in his speech two years ago at the McKinley memorial banquet given in Canton, paid this high tribute to the memory of a President the American people delight to honor: "It was given to President McKinley to take the foremost place in our political life at a time when our country was brought face to face with problems more momentous than any whose solution we have ever attempted, save only in the Revolution and in the Civil War, and it was under his leadership that the nation solved these mighty problems aright. Therefore he shall stand in the eyes of history not merely as the first man of his generation, but as among the greatest figures in our national life, coming second only to the men of the two great crises in which the Union was founded and preserved."

THE GOOD-ROADS MOVEMENT.

The spread of the good-roads movement has been one of the remarkable features of life in this country in the past decade. Previous to the last ten or twelve years the farmer and the resident of the country town, except in a few notably progressiye sections, were content with the old-style country road that was at one time inches deep in dust and a few days later feet deep in mud. They had known nothing but such roads, and if they had ever thought about the question of good roads they believed that the cost was prohibitive, and therefore made no ganeral demand for improvement. The coming of the bicycle marked the beginning of the new era, and the spread of the bicycle craze resulted in the spread of the good-roads campaign. Better roads were built here and there at a cost so small as to astonish the country people, who soon found that the extra expense was more than offset by the saving on wagons and stock. The demand for good roads in all sections of the country became greater and greater day by day, and State and local commissions were created to deal with the question. Then the United States Government took a hand, the War Department lending its engineers to solve the problems of road-building and the Department of Agriculture lending its experts to investigate road-building materials, etc. Next came the automobile, which could penetrate even farther into the rural districts than the bicycle, and the good-roads crusade was carried still farther back into the counties, until to-day the question of good roads is discussed and thoroughly dissected in every section of the United States.

The good-roads campaign in Maryland has increased in warmth year by year, and the fact that the good road now has thousands of earnest supporters in this State was demonstrated at Annapolis last winter, when the Legislature passed a bill proposing a Constitutional amendment which gives the State authorities power to make appropriations to the several counties for good-roads work. If the amendment is adopted, the impetus to road building in Maryland will be immediate and very great. In the meantime, however, the counties of the State have not idly awaited State aid. In all sections many first-class roadways have been built within the last few years out of county funds. The Eastern Shore has many such roads, and Southern Maryland and Western Maryland also. Baltimore county took a really advanced step a few years back when it selected a competent engineer to take charge of the road work, and under his supervision several miles of the very finest kind of roads have been built. Baltimore county is also taking the lead again under the special law passed by the last Legislature allowing certain State moneys to be diverted for road-building purposes, and has requested that the State Geological Survey Commission furnish the surveys for forty-seven and three-quarter miles of roads to be improved. Caroline county is the latest heard from in the spread of this movement. In the opinion of those who understand the situation, there can be no question which is of more vital importance to the people of the State at large, and especially to the people of the State at large, and especially to the people who live in the various counties, than this question of good roads, and the fact that a good start has been made on the improvement of Maryland's roads is one on which the State and the counties should be congratulated, even while they are being urged to spend more money on the public arteries of travel.

REORGANIZERS AND OTHERS.

The reorganizers in the Democratic party are still reorganizing it appears. Judge Parker and his friend Sheehan and some others had a dinner in New York on Monday for the purpose of talking over ways and means of keeping the party out of the hands of William J. Bryan.

Whether they succeeded in agreeing upon the way to do this or not the reports of the interesting feast do not state. To accomplish such a thing calls for more than ordinary effort. If Judge Parker had been elected everything else would have been easy, but as the kind of campaign begun with the nomination at St. Louis has resulted in even greater disaster than either of the Bryan attempts it is impossible to claim that the Democratic party is ready for the future to be marshaled under the banners of the New York managers. They have made a failure too pronounced.

Mr. Bryan and his socialism and radicalism are not all that they have to reckon with. They have not kept their promise to the South. The Democrats of that section were led into support of Judge Parker for the nomination on the assurance of his immediate sponsors that he could carry New York and other Northern states where it was known Bryanism could not hope to win. Not only was no hope fulfilled, but the Democracy of the South has seen the New York lenders emerge from a campaign of blunders thoroughly discredited.

While the South is now in an attitude of suspicion and disgust the movement is made to keep the control of the party in the hands of these Eastern Democrats. It will be four years' struggle. Whether Bryan again becomes the controlling influence in the party or not will depend more upon the South than upon anything else. That section will have the deciding voice in a matter of that kind. It is not too well inclined toward Bryan, and just at this time it is little inclined to continue following the leadership of the New York politicians.

In the interval before thenext presidential election the various elements of the Democratic party promise to be too busy with each other to become anything of a menace to the country.

DEER PARK JOTTINGS.

Thanksgiving is over and the thing that impresses us most is the marriage of our friend and neighbor, Mr. Edward G. Miller. The following account clipped from the Baltimore Sun, from the versatile pen of the gifted correspondent of the Sun, speaks of this happy event as follows: "A combination of rain, hail and snow formed the weather conditions in Garrett county on Thanksgiving Day. It was a day for indoor festivities and was spent before open fires of huge dimensions, which is a feature of many Garrett county dwellings.

"In the afternoon a numerous gathering assembled in the Union church and listened to a patriotic discourse by the young Baptist clergyman of Deer Park, Rev. Wm. H. Faust. Mr. Faust was attired in full evening dress, which was explained by subsequent events, the congregation being treated to a complete and pleasant surprise at the close of the close of the discourse by the announcement that a marriage would be celebrated. The minister and the interested parties were the only ones in the building who were in the secret.

"Mrs. Synthia Brown, of Mountain Lake Park, and Mr. Edward G. Miller, of Deer Park, advanced to the front of the altar and were united in marriage. An impromptu reception was held in the church, and in the evening at the residence of the groom the many friends of the happy pair were present for an evening of enjoyment. The Deer Park Cornet band entertained the occasion with popular music, the selections of "Julia" from the "Maid and the Mummy," and the popular and catchy song of the "Maid from Zanzibar" being especially enjoyable."

And we, Mr. Editor, take this occasion to extend greetings to this estimable couple. Mr. E. G. Miller is one of Garrett county's most upright citizens, a man of the highest integrity, and a truly honorable and honest gentleman. Mrs. Miller was at one time a citizen of this town, being then the loving wife of the late J. Van Brown, a Virginian by birth, a soldier of the "Lost Cause" and one of Gen. Lee's most heroic soldiers. The writer knew this gallant ex-Confederate in other days and as his earthly remains rest in our cemetery, we never forget on Decoration Day to place flowers on his grave. We congratulate Mr. Miller in securing as a life companion this cultured lady, and we bespeak for both a happy and prosperous voyage over the matrimonial sea.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Engle gave a Thanksgiving six o'clock dinner to Rev. Wm. H. Faust, as guest of honor and Mr. L. Thrasher and wife, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Droege and other relatives, and a pleasant evening was spent until the church bell rang for the series of meetings that is being held by this reverent gentleman.

We are sorry to note the serious illness of Mrs. C. H. Shreve, of near this place. Mrs. Shreve is the mother of Mr. Scott Shreve, one of the efficient clerks of D. E. Offutt & Sons, of your city. A message this evening (Nov. 18th) states her condition slightly better. We hope for her speedy recovery for she is a loving wife and a devoted mother and a sincere friend, and among the best women we have ever known.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Chadderton gave a dinner to a number of friends on Sunday last. All were greeted by this genial host and hostess with courtesy and kindness, and the sumptuous feast was enjoyed by the many invited friends and with a relish.

Miss Annie Clary, daughter of the Rev. W. H. Clary, of this place, has been quite sick the past two weeks, but was able to be at the closing of the interesting meetings in the Union church on Sunday night and friends feel that she is out of danger.

Rev. C. J. Price, of the M. E. church at Swanton, and of the Baltimore Conference, preached an able and much appreciated sermon in the M. E. church of this place at 2:30 Sunday last and will fill this appointment as a supply during this Conference year, although he has seven other charges on his work in the Swanton district. The gentleman made a favorable impression. He is a fluent speaker, as are all the ministers of this conference. We are glad our Methodist friends have one that will fill their pulpit and hope his work may be crowned with success for the Master whom he serves.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Cormany of this place, will leave on No. 46 Friday next for their winter home in Washington. We will miss these kind neighbors and friends, but hope to see them back to their mountain home when the roses bloom.

A message calls us to the home of our old friends, Messrs. Thos. R., John F., and Ralph T. Browning, of near Thayerville, this Tuesday to attend to some official business. We fully realize that we will have a pleasent time visiting these friends whose home we have not had the pleasure of entering since the death of their late father, Mr. John L. Browning, a friend of my boyhood days.

The series of meetings held in the Union church of this place closed Sunday night, and the closing sermon by the gifted Baptist ministes was a fitting finale to all the soul stiring sesmons for the past three weeks by this young divine. His subject was "Open Windows," taking for his text Daniel 6:10: "Now his windows were open in his chamber towards Jerusalem." Incement as the weather was the church was packed and this closing appeal to sinners to imitate a Daniel, dwelling on the efficacy of prayer so stirred this large audience that many eyes were bathed in tear. The most unsectarian and true Christian act was to ask the twenty two converts, who had been happily converted during the meeting to select the church of their choice and unite with some branch of the Christian church and to so state by writing their names and the church they wish to unite with and he would present their names to the pastors of the different denominations. Seven joined the Baptist, three the Methodist, two the Lutheran and one the United Brethern; nine are waiting to make a final selection.

A closing solo was rendered by Miss Nannie Rodeheaver, one of Deer Park's most charming young ladies, entitled, "Will There be any Stars in My Crown." Miss Rodehaver is a soprano vocalist of no mean order and is quite an acquisition to the Deer Park choir.

Mrs. S. P. Specht, who is a regular attendant at all religious services of the various churches, sang many solos quite effectively during the progress of the meetings, among them being "Looking This Way," which has been used with such wonderful effect by Commander Booth Tucker's daughter.

Miss Nellie Thrasher, the efficient organist, was untiring in her efforts to produce the best possible music and in this she was ably assisted by Miss Grace Walter, who presided during the afternoon services, and all the choir of this church deserve much praise for their delightful music.

MORE ANON.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Merchant P. T. Garthright is preparing to share a large portion of the prosperity which will follow the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt. Those who traded at the "Hustling Store" on their return to the Park will not be able to recognize the place. By that time it will be a great big department store, not excelled anywhere in Garrett county. The sales department has been greatly enlarged, a new ware room built, a private business office added. Carpenters and painters have made the interior of the building cheerful and attractive. A room is to be added on the south side of the grain ware house and an engine will be put in to run a chopping mill. The general wareroom is now two-stories high. On the second floor are four nice living rooms, reached by a stairway in the fromt hall. The second floor of the north half of the grain ware house will be used for furniture, house furnishings, etc. Mr. G. has sold several cars of mining props, and reports business very hopeful. He is now prepared to handle large quantities of country produce and has worked up a market for it.

About the 10th of December the new store building being erected by Mr. H. N. Cuppett will be opened to the public by Cuppett, Leighton & Co., with a stock of new goods. The firm is composed of Messrs. H. N. Cuppett, H. V. Leighton and C. V. Harvey, all "hustlers" from "Hustlerville." They have a very inviting building, two stories high and a ware room. Our merchants are certainly getting a move on themselves.

Miss Libbie Grubb has gone to Findlay, Ohio, to spend the winter. She will be greatly missed in this neighborhood. She is abounding in good works.

Mr. Charles Martin and family have moved into the living rooms in the Hustling store building.

Dr. J. W. Laughlin has been elected superintendent of the M. E. Sunday school at this place.

Mr. Ike Thompson and family, of Kearney, moved to Elkins, W. Va., on the 25th. He expects to locate in that growing city.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Barnes, of Pennsylvania, are visiting their daughter, Mrs. Henry May at this place.

The festival held at Loch Lynn on Thanksgiving night was a success. About $20 was cleared to be applied on the U. B. church indebtednes

The B. & O. new schedule gives us a Sunday train service—something not needed, and through the week a most unsatisfactory train service. If we want to go to Deer Park to transact business, one has to go one day and return on the next day, there being only one accommodation train each day.

SOME REASONS WHY PEOPLE ARE SETTLING IN MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA.

Because it is the best country known to the man of moderate means.
Because you will find a country of rich soil awaiting the settler.
Because there are uplands, prarieland, and alluvial river bottoms.
Because you can be certain of profitable returns from whatever you put into the soil.
Because the winter does not consume what the summer produces.
Because there are more and better opportunities for deversified farming than elsewhere.
Because the seasons are regular and no fear of crop failure.
Because the country is never scourged by cyclones and devastating storms and blizzards.
Because everything grown elsewhere can be produced here more abundantly.
Because truck farming is a success; products being early on the market obtain high prices.
Because no better fruit country is known, oranges, plums, peaches, pears, apples, grapes, strawberries, figs, pecans and other fully maturing.
Because there are more chances for profitable investment of capital than elsewhere in this country.
Because for healthfulness this section is unequalled on the face of the globe.
Because you have no long winter months to encounter, with no excessive dry heat in summer.
Because the climate is more uniform than elsewhere, no extremes of heat or cold.
Because you will find the as orderly communities as anywhere on this continent.
Because you will find the most open-hearted people on the globe.
Because education is paramount; public schools and churches of every denomination are to be found in all communities.
Because the railroad facilities of this section are unexcelled, a double tracked railroad traversing the entire length of both states.
Because really good lands are yet cheap.
Because the geographical location of these states gives them the best markets in the United States.

We secure land for home-seekers or for colonies. Write to-day for full particulars and letters from Northern farmers already located in the South.

CHEZ SAVED WOMAN

Well Known In This Section From Certain Death.

It has just leaked out, says the Morgantown Post, that Director A. W. Chez, of Morgantown, who spent the summer at Mountain Lake Park where he lived in a tent and had charge of the athletic field, restrained Mrs. Joseph H. Hawthorne from rushing into the burning Missouri building to the Exposition the night of Nov. 19. Judge and Mrs. Hawthorne were attending the dinner to the football boys at the West Virginia building when the fire started. Mrs. Hawthorne immediately rushed from the dining room, ran across the intervening distance between the two buildings and would have entered the burning structure had not Mr. Chez, reassured and calmed her. Mrs. Hawthorne thought her son was in the Missouri building. He had gotten out safely, however, and was soon found by Mr. Chez.

Judge and Mrs. Hawthorne lost practically all their household possessions in the fire. They had lived in the Missouri building since the Exposition opened and had moved their furnishings there from their home in Kansas City. Judge Hawthorne is a native Monongahelian, having been born and raised near Randall. He is one of the most gentlemanly and brilliant graduates of the University, and makes scores of friends wherever he goes. Mrs. Hawthorne was Miss Godwin of Kingwood, and a sister of Mrs. Neil J. Fortney.

SENOR JIM DANDY

By MARION WOODWARD

Copyright, 1904, by M. Wood

When the American Silver company opened its mine at La Paz on concessions granted by the Peruvian government it was tacitly understood that the corporation would be "assessed" now and then for the benefit of a new revolutionary leader, but there was to be no further extortion. There was none, and the profits began to pile up.

Then there came a call from Senor Casolani. The senor was not the president of Peru nor yet the general of its army nor the admiral of its navy. He was simply Casolani, outlaw and guerrilla. When Peru was at war he was a guerrilla and aimed to kill more enemies than friends. When he was at peace he was an outlaw and robber and showed no favor. He had his headquarters in the mountains and a band of fifty cutthroats to do his bidding, and he was both feared and respected. Many attempts had been made to capture or kill him, but he always came out on top, and when bribes were offered he took the money and shot the bearers.

It was a merry life that Senor Casolani led. There was robbery in the morning, killing at noon and the sacking of a church or convent to while away the hours of evening. He lived on the fat of the land, felt that he owned all of South America, and there were times when he used to actually ache for some one to defy him. After the American mine began shipping ore that was 90 per cent pure and the stockholders had received a first dividend of 60 per cent the senor made a call at La Paz. He left his bodyguard of ten ruffians outside, entered the offices and stated his case in a soft and gentle voice. He wanted a loan of $5,000 in cash, and he didn't want to spend more than half an hour haggling about it.

"WILL YOU WALK OUT OR BE KICKED OUT?"

Old Huabasco, native assistant superintendent at the mine, had known of the senor for many years. In fact, the senor had cut off his brother's ears and his brother-in-law's head on a festive occasion, and had only missed him by a hair's breadth. With old Huabasco to plead his case, assisted by threats to call in his bodyguard and turn them loose, the senor departed a richer and happier man. Three months later he tried the same thing and won. He tried it a third time and was as courteously received.

Then the officials in New York rebelled and sent Jimmy Clayton down to La Paz to replace the other superintendent and stop the leak. The most that any of them knew about Jimmy was that he had come from a good family, had been left half a million dollars at the age of twenty-four and three years later was without a shilling to his name. He would not know a mine when he saw one, and his executive abilities had never been tested, but certain stockholders got the idea that Jimmy would be a match for Senor Casolani, and he was furnished with an outfit and shipped off to the Peruvian coast. He had been at La Paz for two weeks when old Huabasco said in confidence to the small office force, all natives:

"My children, I don't exactly understand the Senor Americano. He is soft and gentle and silent, but now and then I catch a look that reminds me of sleeping danger. I must wait until I see him in the presence of Casolani. He, too, is soft and gentle and silent, but what a devil! The Senor Americano will either prove a milksop or what they call in his country a jim dandy. Wait for a few days and we shall see."

Another fortnight passed away, and then the famous guerrilla called. This was the fourth call, and he had grown so used to the road and the humility of his receptions that he came alone. He had heard of the new superintendent and had a curiosity to see him. In his heart he respected a brave man, and as he entered the offices, carelessly switching his leg with a branch cut from a tree, he found himself hoping that Senor Clayton would show a bit of gameness. The American sat reading a newspaper with his feet on the window sill, and Senor Casolani bowed low before him, purely in sarcasm, however, and politely said:

"Permit me to introduce myself as Senor Casolani, and to hope that Senor Clayton is well."

"Thanks, awfully," replied Jimmy as he looked up from his paper and back again

"You may have heard of me?" continued the guerrilla, secretly admiring the other's coolness, though it stung him at the same time.

"Y-e-s. You are the infernal murderer and outlaw who has been prancing through this part of the country for the last seven or eight years. Yes, I have heard of you. In fact, I was sent down here to make your better acquaintance, and I am glad you have called."

"The usual semiannual payment is due, I believe," suggested the man as his eyes began to burn in a way to make old Huabasco's flesh creep.

"And likewise something else," grimly replied Clayton.

"I do not understand the senor."

"No? Well, if I should tell you to get out of here, would you understand that?"

It was evident to Casolani that he had a man of mettle to deal with, and there was a smile on his face as he thought of how he would make the Americano beg for his life and lick the dust off the floor before he was through with him.

"Does the senor wish to insult me?" asked the guerrilla gently.

"I couldn't if I wanted to. Look here, Casolini, this thing is played out!"

"You mean—you mean"—

"I mean that if you don't take yourself off and keep away from La Paz I'll kill you like a dog. That's pat, and you don't want to miss it. You've killed scores and robbed hundreds, and think yourself a devil of a fellow, but I'm not afraid of you. There's the door you came in at, and if you are not gone in two minutes I'll kick you out!"

"And now let me have my say," replied the guerrilla in a voice hoarse with passion and with eyes blazing like a mad tiger. "I do not shoot you where you sit because"—

"Because you are a coward at heart," interrupted Clayton.

"Because I admire a brave man. You are game, senor, and I respect you. Let me say, however, that tomorrow I will return and sweep everything here off the face of the earth and carry away your ears in my pocket. Today the mine may work; tomorrow it shall be closed down forever. Today there are 200 living men here; tomorrow all shall be dead or scattered. That is the word of Casolani, senor."

"And I am much obliged to him. Will you walk out or be kicked out?"

The guerrilla walked out and was soon lost to sight in the forest, and old Huabasco whispered to his subordinates:

"Not yet, my children—not yet. The Senor Americano is cool and calm, and there is a sting to his words, but he may be what his countrymen call a bluffer. We must wait another day."

There was but one approach to the mine, and Senor Casolani and his band would come by that road. Men were brought up from the depths of the mine to dig and trench, the electrician laid his wires and the civil engineer planted his dynamite, and for two hours before the guerrillas appeared next day Senor Clayton sat on the same chair with a lever within his reach. Nobody had run away, nor had work been suspended. Everything was going on as usual when fifty or sixty cutthroats came, charging down the wide road, yells on their lips and knives in their hands. Senor Clayton looked up and watched, and after a bit his hand reached out and touched the lever. There was an explosion which made the mountain tremble in its bowels. Then he picked up his paper and began reading again.

"My children," said old Huabasco after the excited people had counted up the dead and identified Don Casolani among the number, "I told you first we must wait until Senor Casolani had called; then I told you we must wait for today. Now I tell you we need wait no longer. Let us go back to the office and give what the Americanos call three cheers for what the same people also call a jim dandy of a man!"

His I's.

General Ogle, when submitting a letter for approval by the Pennsylvania legislature, which he had addressed on their behalf to the newly elected president, General Andrew Jackson, was interrupted by a dapper little fellow from Philadelphia thus:

"Pardon me, general. I do not wish to assume to make a suggestion to so distinguished a gentleman as yourself, but I cannot refrain from saying that it is customary in the east, and I may say in almost all the civilized countries of Europe, to write with a capital 'I' instead of the small 'i' in using this personal pronoun in epistolary correspondence."

General Ogle drew down his heavy brows, piercing the dandy's marrow with the fierce shaft of scorn that shot from his eye.

"Sir," said he, beginning with a hiss and ending with a roar, "when I write to such a great man as General Andrew Jackson, Democratic president of the United States, I abase myself—I abase myself, sir! I use as small an 'i' as I can put on paper. But, sir, if I should ever get to such a low pitch as to have to write to such a little snipe as you are I'd use an 'I,' sir, that would fill two pages of foolscap!"

The Art of Raising Children

By JOHN B. McKEAN, Judge of Children's Court of New York City

TO sum up within a nutshell the art of raising a child, I should say to parents, "Set the child a good example."

Children are naturally imitative, and if they have before them patterns of honesty, of truthfulness and of virtue generally THEY, TOO, WILL STRIVE TO BE HONEST, TRUTHFUL AND VIRTUOUS. And still more readily will they emulate vicious examples set before them.

BE FIRM, BUT DO NOT PUNISH EXCEPT IN EXTREME CASES.

The fault with most parents is that they are too lazy to be firm in dealing with their children. Rather than exercise a little patience in explaining to their child the reason why it should act thus and not otherwise, MOST PARENTS WILL SURRENDER to its whims and caprices and by constant indulgences render the little one self willed and headstrong almost beyond control.

Be sure you are right in opposing the child's wishes, but then insist on having your own way TO THE DROP OF THE FLAG.

I do not approve of punishment for children. To do good, as a rule, punishment should be administered only in such a way that the child should UNDERSTAND THE REASON for it. And to possess this degree of understanding the child must have reached an age when punishment cannot be otherwise than degrading.

To degrade a child in its own eyes necessarily deteriorates it. To whip a girl of fourteen INEVITABLY tends to degrade and debase her.

Some of the best parents have bad children, upon whom no amount of moral suasion and no extent of good examples can have any beneficial influence. In these rare cases the fault, of course, lies with the children, and the parents have no other recourse except to punish. But in punishing there should be much good judgment exercised.

THE ROD SHOULD BE ONLY FOR THE EXTREMELY VICIOUS—ONLY FOR THOSE WHO DISPLAY A MALIGNANT SPIRIT, SUCH AS TORMENTERS OF OTHER CHILDREN OR OF ANIMALS.

In fact, in all cases I think it wisest to "make the punishment fit the crime." If, for instance, a boy throws a stone at a cat or a dog the best and quickest way to correct this tendency is by whipping him. Take a rod and give him a sound thrashing, but yet so as not to injure nor disfigure him. By making him feel pain you make him REALIZE the monstrous wrong of WANTONLY INFLICTING PAIN upon others.

But if, to take a different example, a girl, in disobedience to her parents, goes to picnics, or stays out late, or associates with unfit companions, it would be manifestly improper to whip her. The way to make the punishment fit the crime in her case is to LOCK HER UP. By so doing you deprive her of the motive for doing wrong, while in the case of the malicious boy the whipping acted as A COUNTER MOTIVE to overcome the motive supplied by the pleasure of tormenting the cat or dog.

But, as I have said, administer CORPORAL punishment only sparingly, for at best any form of punishment is drastic and ought to be resorted to only WHEN EVERY OTHER ARGUMENT FAILS.

If a child takes pleasure in unfair dealing or lying, let the father ask himself whether HE HIMSELF was not guilty of inculcating that disposition by his own example. How often will not a father come home and at the table, with his children around him, tell about his "smartness" in overreaching a fellow man!

IF A CHILD HEARS HIS FATHER EXALT LYING, DECEITFULNESS, UNFAIRNESS AND DOUBLE DEALING, HOW CAN WE EXPECT THE CHILD TO GROW UP TO BE HONEST, TRUTHFUL AND HONORABLE?

The Social Influence of Religion

By Rabbi EMIL G. HIRSCH of Chicago

WHEN God added man to his other creations he made ONLY ONE, so that men of future generations might not say, one to another, "My ancestors were better than yours." Even if the Darwinian theory is correct, and we are all descended FROM THE SAME MONKEY, why should one ape hang his tail higher than another?

My religion does not say that in the beginning God made one Jew. Christianity does not say that in the beginning God created one member of our faith and belief.

NO RELIGION RECOGNIZES ANY OF THE DISTINCTIONS AND CASTES THAT HAVE BEEN DEVELOPED BY PROFANE HISTORY.

When this world was in darkness and no law obtained but that of brute force the human race believed that ONLY THE STRONG should survive. The son clubbed his aged father to death when he no longer could keep up with the chase. Today the theory of economics recognizes only two classes, the consumer and the producer. UNLESS TOUCHED BY THE REFINED AND CHARITABLE INFLUENCES OF RELIGION, economics is not much removed from the old idea of the survival of the fittest.

Religion teaches that if you are strong you have the responsibilities of the strong, and that if your talents are limited you still have your duties and your privileges. IT IS A QUESTION OF STEWARDSHIP. The rich man has intrusted to his control a greater portion of God's wealth, but it is designed that he shall put forth a PROPORTIONATELY GREATER effort to help others.

Among the institutions established by religion I shall mention only two, the Sabbath and marriage. Whenever any nation ceases to recognize and observe the Sabbath that nation has passed the period of its usefulness AND IS ON THE DECLINE.

MARRIAGE ALSO IS A HOLY INSTITUTION, AND WHEN WE COME TO REGARD IT WITH THE DILIGENCE THAT ITS SACRED CHARACTER DEMANDS WE SHALL BE A GREATER NATION, OUR HOMES SHALL BE MORE SECURE, OUR GOVERNMENT PURER.

Brother Gardner

He Delivers a Lecture on a Growing Evil to the Limekiln Club Members.

"MY frens of dis Limekiln club," began Brother Gardner, as he slowly rose up and took a calm survey of Paradise hall, "I want to address yo' dis eavenin' in sadness. Dar am a knowledge in my heart dat many things am wrong wid de cull'd man, an' dat it will take mo' influence dan I hev got to work de reform I sigh fur.

"Furstly, dis yere American nation has grown rich an' powerful an' extravagant. As de white man has grown rich an' extravagant, he has set a copy fur de cull'd man to foller. Up to fifteen y'ars ago yo' was content to live as yo' fathers befo' yo'. Sich things as fried oysters, ice cream an' frosted cake war hardly known to yo' by name. Yo' slept on straw beds an' believed in hoecake an' bacon. Yo' went to bed soon arter sundown, an' yo' got up soon arter sunrise. If yo' had but one suit of clothes a year yo' made 'em do, an' if yo' had a rag carpet on de floah yo' felt rich. Dat was old times an' yo' knew just whar de cull'd man stood.

"It's like a man wakin' up from a long sleep to look around him today. De cull'd man of fifteen y'ars ago has passed away an' a new race has sprung up. De humble cabins hev given way to flats an' houses of seben an' eight rooms. De rag carpets hev bin replaced by brussels. De wooden chairs good 'nuff fur our parents am seen no mo' in our homes. We used to tell the time by a chalk mark on de doah step. Now we has two or three clocks in der house. In de olden days if we had a picture of Dan'l in de lions' den hangin' on de parlor wall we felt rich. Now we kiver de wall paper wid ile paintin's an' want a lookin' glass in ebery room. A few y'ars ago if I happened along to de cabin of Giveadam Jones 'bout supper time he would hev axed me to come in to snack, an' I should hev had hoecake, bacon an' co'n coffee. Only two or three days ago, as I called on him at his flat, his wife said to me:

"RECOLLECTION HASTINGS COME IN."

"'Brudder Gardner, we shall feel highly honored if yo' will consent to remain an' take tea wid us.'

"I hadn't got ober my surprise when I sot down to a table on which dey was soup, roast beef, taters, celery, salad, canned co'n an' two kinds of cake, an' when we got frew eatin' we had coffee in chiny cups. I don't say I didn't enjoy dat meal, but I went away from dat house wid sadness tuggin' at my heart.

"Waydown Beebee is a porter in a store at $6 a week, an' yet de luxury in his house would make yo' gasp fur breath. He's got one stuft rockin' cheer that cost mo' money dan all de furniture his father eber owned. On de parlor floah in de house of Samuel Shin, who makes 'bout $7 a week, am a rug wid sich richness in it dat yo' stand and shibber as yo' look. Pickles Smith drives a hoss around to an express wagon, an' yit he's got a marble topped stand an' a cuckoo clock. Absolute Johnson cum ober to my house de odder day to borry a dollar, an' yet he slept on a ha'r mattress an' has a gold filled tooth.

"Look around dis hall dis eavenin'. Dar am no less dan nineteen members of dis Limekiln club wearin' dimun pins, dar am ober thirty wid gold watches, dar am fifty wid standup linen collars an' fifty cent neckties, an' de Lawd only knows how many feet am crowded into patent leather shoes. I ain't quite sartin whether it's a meetin' of de old Limekiln club or a session of de United States senate. I kin name twenty pussons among yo' who rent postoffice boxes. I kin name as many mo' who go to the theater an' to hoss races an' parade up an' down de streets on Sunday wid yo'r hands under yer coat tails. It wasn't ober an hour ago dat Moses White was talkin' 'bout buyin' an automobile, an' Elder Penstock was sayin' dat he should spend de summer in Europe.

"An' dar's another matter I wish to briefly refer to. In de days gone by de cull'd man was satisfied wid plain words, de plainer de better. He called a dawg a dawg an' a spade a spade. It seems dat de old way of talkin' wasn't good 'nuff. De cull'd man wanted sunthin' wid scollops on to go wid his dimun pin an' cuckoo clock. As a sample of it I was in a grocery de odder day when Recollection Hastings come in an' obsarved dat owin' to de precarious condition of de permanent consanguity he felt compelled to abdicate de percolation an' buy a pound of codfish. I stood dar wid chills goin' up an' down my back, an' I didn't get ober de shock fur an hour. Last week I ober-hard Cartwheel Taylor tellin' Downright White dat de influential consequential proceedings of de immaterial infliction of de consanguinity might determinate de fallacious perspicacity befo' de summer was over. What he meant I dunno, an' I don't believe dat Downright did either. It's got to sich a pass dat two cull'd men can't meet an' talk 'bout de new moon widout usin' sich words as indefatigable, octogenarian, ramifications an' cabalistic. I am gittin' skeert to go home fur fear dat de ole woman will meet me at de doah an' ax me if de pomposity of de contagion has extinguished de generosity of de perambulations.

"As I told yo' in de beginnin', my heart am full of sadness, an' I realizes dat I can't do nuffin'. De white man am risin' up in his riches an' huntin' out his big words in de dictionary, an' as a race we am just idiots 'nuff to foller. We am libin' fur today. We ain't carin' fur tomorrow or de poo'houses ahead of us. De hoecake am a thing of de past, an' eben de old songs we used to sing hev bin worked ober an' chawed up till all de music has gone out of 'em. I ain't gwine to ax yo' to hold up, bekase it would do no good. All I's gwine to say is dat if any contentious identity comes to me an' wants to affirm the rotundity he will feel de concentration rise up an' bump again de provinciality. Jist what I mean by dat I leave yo' to figger out, but yo' kin count on a No. 11 shoe bein' in dar somewhar."

Cause For Congratulation.

Two gaunt specters, bronchitis and pneumonia, met in one of the thoroughfares of the city.

"What's the matter, old fellow?" asked the bronchitis specter. "You are looking blue."

"Matter enough," replied the pneumonia specter. "I've just been looking over the opinions of the weather prophets, and they predict a mild winter."

"Cheer up!" cried pneumonia hilariously. "I, on the other hand, have just been glancing over the winter's fashions. The women's fur coats, I am delighted to say, are made with V necks and no collars, and the Eton jackets ending at the waist will be as popular as ever."—Puck.

Schooling Enough.

A school board official called at the home of a pupil whose absence had extended over a week and inquired of the lad's mother the cause.

"Why," she said, "he's past his thirteenth year, and me and his father think he's after having schooling enough."

"Schooling enough! Why, I did not finish my education until I was twenty-three."

"Be that so," said the mother, "but that lad of ours has got brains."—Birmingham (England) Post.

An Unfair Blow.

"Have you a taste for music?" asked Miss Chillbeen of Boston.

"I don't know," replied the millionaire mine owner's daughter from Leadville Gulch. "I never tasted any, but I like to hear it played."

That ended it, for Miss Chillbeen was down and out for twenty minutes, though she afterward claimed that she lost on a foul.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Real Caustic.

"Is she pretty?"

"Why, man alive, her father's worth $40,000! Of course she's pretty!"—Boston Globe.

Cheaper All Round.

"I suppose," said the inquisitive man, "a good many of your tenants find it cheaper to move than pay rent."

"Perhaps," replied the real estate agent, "and we often find it cheaper to keep them moving rather than make the repairs they ask for."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Her Little Feat.

He often wondered how she stood upon thy things at all.
He marveled more whene'er she danced
—they were so very small.
And every morning he would gaze as she tripped down the street
With wonder at the way she walked upon her little feet.

She blushed beneath his searching eyes and bowed with glance demure.
"Oh, dear, if he could know," she sighed,
"the pain that I endure!"
And then she scrunched her toes up tight within that boot petite.
For she wore twos instead of fives! That was her little feat!

Sillabil

By ROBERT C. V. MEYERS

Copyright, 1904, by Robert C. V. Meyers

THE good lame man told him how it would be.

In the ward Sillabil heard the good lame man called a "regular." Not that he knew what the term signified, but from the ease of deportment of this bearer of it he took it to be synonymous with "boss," which he knew to mean somebody who was not to be displeased, for his mother had worked for a "boss."

"Hi!" says the good lame man. "When you're asleep tonight they're coming to the ward to get the Captain. Around his neck they'll put a string with a stone on it, and then they'll chuck him in the water—drown him, you know, drown him. I'm your only friend, I am, and I tell you if you want to save your dog you'd better get away. You'd better go now. And when you go out just take this silver piece which ceuldn't be yours, though it may be like the one you lost, and go round the corner to the store where there are bottles and flies in the window and tell 'em one legged Tom sent you for his medicine. Then you tie the bottle to this string which I throw over the wall, and I'll haul in the medicine that cures my cough. Listen to my cough!" And a series of sepulchral agonized sounds startled the air. "I'll give you a boost over the wall and the Captain too. Remember, they'll drown the Captain tonight!"

Drown the Captain! Sillabil felt queer. He was not alarmed, for to be alarmed you ought to have a thought, and Sillabil hardly ever thought, his latest thought having been a week ago when he had seen his mother in a long box which the women of the house told him was for her to sleep in and that if he cried he might wake her. Of course he wouldn't wake her, he said, for she must be tired or she wouldn't have fallen asleep over her sewing machine, though the thought of a week ago took the form of a question: "Why did his mother go to sleep in the long box?" Then the women of the house sent him out for a romp with the Captain. When he got back his mother was no longer there, and a man brought him to his present place of abode.

It was the good lame man who liked to kick him in order to see him jump who told him that his mother was sleeping under the daisies.

Sillabil would not ask where the daisies were, for that would be like saying that his mother had neglected to tell him, and his mother had never neglected him.

"You've got a nice name, too, Sillabil," said the good lame man. "It's only a part of a big word, and you're only a part of yourself. Something up here, eh?" And he tapped himself on the forehead. Sillabil was used to people tapping their foreheads when they spoke about him, and it looked so wise that he had got into the habit of doing it himself when he spoke of other people.

"You understand," persisted the good lame man, "they're going to drown the Captain. He can hardly see, can he?"

"Yes, he can," Sillabil cried, "only his eyes got hurt that time the house was afire and he wouldn't leave me till I was awake, and so he got burnt."

"Hurry, Sillabil," urged the good lame man, "for it's nearly dark, and they'll soon drown the Captain."

It was the work of a moment—up a tree, on to a wall, a drop outside, the captain scrambling after him, limping a little where he had fallen.

In a vast haste Sillabil found the shop around the corner.

"Medicine for one legged Tom," he said, placing on the counter the silver coin that looked so much like the one he had lost. And then, remembering his wise act, he tapped his forehead and nodded.

Of course they understood him, and he took a small bottle and tied it to the dangling string hanging over the wall across which he and the captain had come. The bottle disappeared.

"Here comes the man after the Captain!" a voice said, and Sillabil and the Captain struck out. How they did run! There was a new freedom about it; no one to frown at you, as had been the case for a week, no one to push and jostle you. But where to go, where to find the daisies? The good lame man had said that daisies grew in country ways. Sillabil had never seen country ways, a room high up in a house constituting his world. With the Captain it was different. While the Captain never said anything about it, yet he had once looked after sheep.

It was quite dark now, and the houses were not so close together. Then the Captain suddenly let it be known that supper would not be undersirable. Sillabil looked about him. Here was a brightly lighted house. People were going in and coming out. Sillabil went in too. There was a table spread with all sorts of good things. A pleasant being stood beside it smiling till the gold filling in one of his teeth reminded Sillabil of the star outside.

"Help yourselves, gentlemen," said the pleasant being.

Of course Sillabil helped himself, and his host was so polite as to feed the Captain with delicate morsels.

"A delegate, of course?" he whispered to Sillabil. "You seem to be cooler headed than most of the others. I hope your ward is going all right."

Sillabil had had sufficient experience with his wise manner to see that it usually succeeded, so he now tapped himself on the forehead. At that his host laughed and slipped a roll of bills in his hand.

"For your ward or yourself," he said.

Sillabil wondered, and it made him suspicious, so he moved toward the door. Here a gentleman accosted him.

"What did he give you for the ward?" this gentleman asked. Of course Sillabil knew what a ward was, for the good lame man had told him that they were coming to the ward to get the Captain and drown him. So he showed the gentleman the roll of bills and tapped himself on the forehead.

"Of course he is," the gentleman said, "for he'll never get in."

Sillabil edged his way out into the night. And there was the star. He followed the glinting light. All at once it disappeared. He stood there lost. He was in the dark, no houses near, only trees. He had never before been alone in the dark. His mother had taken care of that.

"Captain!"

The Captain rubbed up against him. Sillabil peered about him. Then he saw the star and made for it. The Captain growled. This had ever been a note of warning, so Sillabil went more carefully. Then he discovered that what he had taken for a star was only a small light down upon the ground.

"Who is there?" a sharp voice cried. It was a woman's voice.

The light was a feeble fire made of a few sticks. A woman was warming her hands over it.

"I am looking for my mother," Sillabil said. "She is where the daisies are."

The woman looked at him. Then she laughed shrilly.

"Poor fool!" she said. "There is only one mother in the black world. Don't you know it is raining and cold? Come nearer and warm yourself. Here is your mother"—and she tapped the ground—"Mother Earth."

"No!" laughed Sillabil.

"Then here," said the woman and indicated some tall walls, part of which were tumbling down. "This is Mother Church. Unfortunately she is crumbling away. She was not fine enough for her children, so they deserted her for a new palace. Come in. No one will drive us out of the church now. This is a place where people used to pray for what never came to pass. Did you ever pray?"

For answer Sillabil got down on his knees.

"Lord," he said, as his mother had taught him, "protect us poor, clouded wanderers in the night and lead us to thee at last, where the rough places shall be made smooth!"

The woman rubbed her hands together over the flaming wood.

"You are tired," she said. "You are worn out."

She took off her shawl and spread it upon the ground.

"I don't need it," she said. "Try to sleep."

The light of the fire showed Sillabil a figure carved in the wall. It was the figure of a man on a cross. On the cross, on the man's outstretched arms, on his thorn crowned head, a multitude of sparrows were huddled.

"He was the friend of the sparrows," the woman said. "He was despised and rejected. He wrote with his finger in the dust. 'Let him that is without sin cast the first stone,' he said. He was poor and homeless, as poor and homeless as you and I."

"Poor!" cried Sillabil. "I am not poor." He opened his hand and disclosed the roll of notes that had been given him in the house of feasting.

With an exclamation the woman grasped the money from him.

Sillabil laughed and tapped himself on the head. Then, to show the woman that he always remembered what was said to him, he repeated: "He was despised and rejected. He wrote with his finger in the dust. 'Let him that is without sin cast the first stone,' he said." The woman threw the money from her. "And under his deserted cross I have found the only refuge offered me this night," she said. "No, no, doggie," for the Captain was showing his teeth, "we three poor people should not quarrel. You two rest. I will watch, I and the sparrows. And—my mother!"

She took Sillabil's hand in hers just as his mother used to do when he was restless, and he fell asleep.

When he awoke the sun was shining, the woman was gone, the fire was out, the sparrows were elsewhere.

But the woman had left him the shawl in which he had slept, and on the corner of it was pinned the money that had been given him for his ward.

He rose and stretched himself, and the Captain tugged at him to be gone.

Such a bright morning! He looked up to the rosy sky. "Captain!"

But the Captain had darted off to an open plain where a number of silly sheep were eluding their caretaker and escaping by several ways. The Captain rounded on them. Closer and closer he got the trembling creatures to one another, his old instinct waking in him, and they were massed together.

The keeper of the flock hailed Sillabil.

"That's a fine sheep dog, brother," he said. "What will you take for him?"

"Something for him to eat. He is hungry," answered Sillabil.

The man looked at him, then, opening a bundle slung on his arm, fed the Captain from its contents.

"I never saw such a flock," went on the man. "But now, thanks to your dog, they're among the daisies, and clover's in sight."

"Among the daisies!" Sillabil looked and saw a white field of flowers whose hearts were of gold. And the good lame man had said his mother slept among the daisies! The fallacy of it appealed to him.

Then something snapped in his head. A sudden terror possessed him. He had often seen such long boxes as that in which his mother had lain, and they had been borne along the streets in black wagons. He had sometimes followed after them and had seen them enter a place where there were trees and flowers and white upright marbles. His mother had once explained to him that this was the place where tired folks rested who had seldom rested before, though people who did not know called them dead.

"My mother is dead!"

Away, away he ran across fields, along roads, flying from what he knew not. All at once he found himself obstructed by a wall, and a plaintive wail smote his ear. The Captain had come with him. The Captain was almost exhausted. Sillabil stopped and held the shaggy head up to him.

"Mother is dead, Captain!"

He got down in the dust and held the dog to his heart.

"Mother is dead, Captain!"

The dog licked his face and looked into his eyes.

He got to his feet, something clearing away that had seemed to hide a good deal.

Work! His mother had worked! He was strong; he could work. He must work! The city was the place where everybody worked. He could find work there. He went past all the places he had seen yesterday—the ruined church, the house of feasting, the church where there had been a wedding—and he was in the city again, nearer and nearer coming to him a clearing up of something that had been a dim puzzle ever since he had had the fever.

Hour after hour they walked the streets, knowing that they must wait for morning. The city became hushed and quiet. Few wayfarers passed them.

"Where shall we go?"

The Captain gave a bark full of friendly advice.

Then Sillabil remembered the place where they had taken him after his mother had died. He came upon it at midnight. He might find work there. He no longer feared that the Captain would be taken from him. A new feeling of assurance and responsibility had come to him. He stood and looked up at the huge building where he might yet find work and earn money enough to support himself and the Captain. Money! There was that money lying far away pinned to the shawl in the dismantled church where the woman had made a fire.

"Fire!"

Did he hear the word? Look! There was a bright red coming from a tall window in the building.

"Fire, fire!" He heard it now. So did the Captain, for his back bristled.

"Captain, that is our ward!"

The good lame man was in there, the man who had stolen from him, who had deceived him, and the man was there who had wanted to drown the Captain!

There was a crowd around the building waiting for the engines.

"One legged Tom did it; he was smoking his pipe, against the rules."

Sillabil and the Captain darted into the hall, black with smoke that bit their eyes, bright with tongues of flame that cruelly licked their flesh.

Sillabil knew his old ward. He made for it. But the fire had not been discovered till the stairs were almost destroyed and only a narrow ledge remained. Up this ledge sped Sillabil.

"Captain!"

The Captain was at his heels, and so into the smoke and flame of the ward. The good lame man was at the window, four stories above the ground, ready to jump out. How it was done will never be told, but Sillabil and the Captain forced the lame man through the red roar and the blackness out to the narrow ledge of stairs and down into the outer air, where the engines were now sending out huge streams of water and ladders were going up to rescue the inmates prisoned in their rooms.

Sillabil found himself prone upon the ground, the Captain with a ruefully scorched coat lying across him, his black muzzle close to his master's cheek.

"Why," said a voice, "it is William Sill!"

"Sillabil!" said a second voice, that of lame Tom, the good lame man. "He saved me. Poor chap!"

Poor! No, indeed. Lying there Sillabil was rich. Past the darkness, the pain,

INTO THE SMOKE AND FLAME.

he saw far up in the blue of the sky a field of waving daisies which might have been the many stars swimming in his tired eyes. And in that field was a man with crowds of sparrows fluttering round him, which might have been the cinders from the burning building. And the woman who had spread her shawl on the ground in the ruined church knelt at the man's feet. And, more than all, there was Sillabil's mother smiling as she leaned forward beckoning him to her.

"And the Captain, too," said Sillabil—"the Captain too!"

The man who cared for the sparrows held out a welcoming hand, and the Captain, maybe understanding—who can say?—laid his head down on Sillabil's breast in comfort and security.

"Wake!" said a voice that sounded a good way off to Sillabil, a voice like the good lame man's. "Wake!"

But nearer voices told him that the old numbness left by the fever was gone forever.

Sillabil remembered his old wise manner and managed to get his hand to his forehead, for was he not already awake?

"The Captain too! The Captain! Cap"—They covered him and the Captain with a sheet.

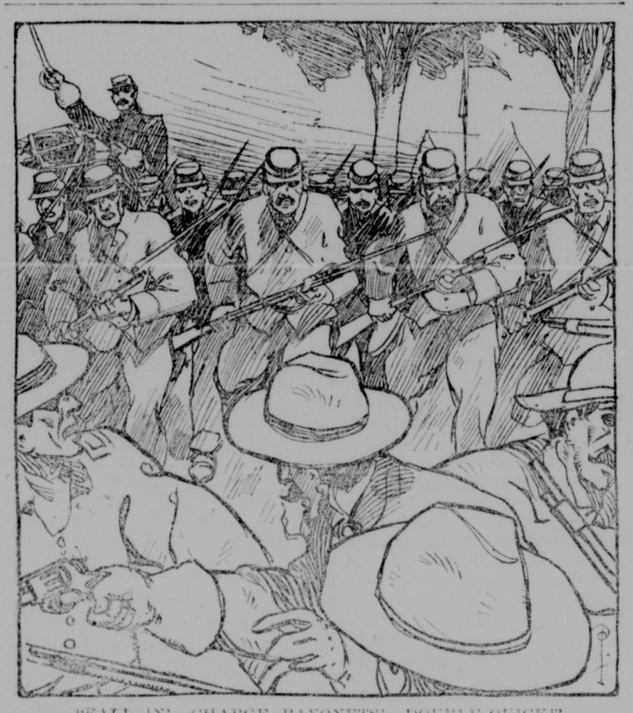
The Hot Fight at Franklin

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

November 30, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

TWO features of the battle fought at Franklin, Tenn., Nov. 30, 1864, placed it among the brilliant and bloody contests of the time—namely, the fiery charge of General Patrick Cleburne's Confederate division and the fierce countercharge of General Emerson Opdycke's Federal brigade—and there was something unusual on foot acting as spurs to martial valor. The Confederate General J. B. Hood had entered upon the march from Columbia toward Nashville in hopes of surprising the defenders of middle Tennessee, and General J. M. Schofield, with an inferior force of Federals placed across the Confederate front, had impeded the march. Only the day before Hood had almost surrounded Schofield at Spring Hill, but owing, as he asserted, to the slowness of his subordinate generals in attacking the enemy had slipped out of the trap in the night and by a forced march reached Franklin, on the south bank of the Harpeth river.



"FALL IN! CHARGE BAYONETS! DOUBLE QUICK!"

At Franklin Schofield halted his columns on the southern border of the town, where a line of slight intrenchments was hastily constructed, and the weary soldiers lay down on their arms to enjoy a brief rest while the long army trains were crossing to a safer position north of the stream. The troops of Schofield's Twenty-third corps, commanded by General J. D. Cox, occupied the main line of works, which extended across the Columbia and Nashville pike, along which Hood was marching in active pursuit.

The extremities of the works rested on the river bank above and below the town, and the only break in the line was at the point where the pike ran through. There a gap had been left in order to accommodate the trains and artillery as well as the brigades bringing up the rear. These latter, three in number, belonged to General D. M. Stanley's Twenty-fourth corps and constituted Wagner's division. Stanley crossed to the north bank of the Harpeth with Wood's division of his corps, leaving Wagner to handle the rear guard. Of the three brigades in Wagner's division two, Conrad's and Lane's, were halted by General Cox's order on a knoll half a mile in front of the general line and covering the gap in the works at the pike. Wagner's Third brigade, led by General Emerson Opdycke, filed through the gap into the works at Franklin, and the men rested in reserve behind Cox's own division, close to the pike.

When the Confederate lines were forming for the attack Cleburne's division held the right and rested on the pike confronted by the Federal works and troops already described. Hood stated to his subordinates that he desired that the enemy be driven into the Harpeth river at all hazards, and, anticipating hot work, Cleburne asked permission to form his division into three lines of one brigade each. Hood granted the request, although General Stewart's corps of his army had not come up and his line was shorter than he desired.

Cleburne's division advanced along the Columbia pike, which bisected the Union line near the center, the most hazardous point to attack, the works being the heaviest and the best manned with troops and cannon. There were thirty-eight Union guns in the works and in reserve in or near the pike in the center. The first opposition to Cleburne's assault was made by the brigades of Lane and Conrad of Wagner's division. These troops had strengthened their position on the knoll by constructing slight breastworks. The only signal to warn them of the attack was the sudden bursting into view of a long line of Confederates moving rapidly in perfect order, with banners waving and bayonets glistening in the bright rays of the setting sun.

With a yell, Cleburne's men rushed into the works, and when the defenders, after a brave but useless resistance, broke for the rear they followed at their heels, shooting down and capturing hundreds and crying out to one another, "Go into the works and take them!" More like wild men than soldiers, Cleburne's excited followers dashed over the half mile that lay between the captured outer line and the stronghold on the pike. The astonished defenders of the second line dared not fire upon the assailants for fear of hitting comrades who were either leading Cleburne's men or mingling with them in their mad race. Once at the rear works the onset of Cleburne's men was so impetuous that the soldiers on the parapet were literally run over, and in a few minutes, or before the reserves in the third line comprehended the crisis, Cleburne's banners waved over them, his men occupied a breach the width of a regiment and, intoxicated with triumph, were dashing ahead along the pike to pounce upon the reserves.

Meanwhile Opdycke's soldiers, unmindful of the affairs at the extreme front, had been taking the breathing spell richly earned by serving as rear guard on the march that day.

Opdycke had no orders except to rest his troops. The soldiers were getting ready their suppers or munching raw rations when the breastworks they had just marched past were carried by a lightning rush of the Confederates, who then were at their heels. The men instinctively threw down their handfuls of bread and pork and took up their weapons.

The moment the men in gray were seen swarming and shooting on the line where they had no business to be Opdycke's commands rang out as calmly and clear cut as though he had rehearsed them, though surely no such combination of orders had ever been called for theretofore. "First brigade, fall in! Charge bayonets! Double quick!" were the words. Then for an hour in that narrow space raged the hottest open field and breastworks struggle of the war.

The Confederates on the right and left of Cleburne's column, catching up the advantage gained by his thundering blows, joined in the assault to drive the wedge home. Stewart's belated corps, having come up after Cleburne formed his line, found the space too narrow between the pike and river to accommodate its brigades, and these surged to the left, following in Cleburne's footsteps and fighting over the same ground. Federal officers in the works along the pike counted thirteen separate and distinct Confederate assaults on their front. Five Confederate generals, including Cleburne, were killed and eight severely wounded in close contact with the Union works.

But not generals alone bore off the honors for valor on the field of Franklin. Soldiers vied with their leaders in reckless exposure of their lives. Often rival flags floated side by side on the same parapet, and their bearers or defenders fought around them with clubbed rifles and with bayonets used as rapiers. The Seventy-second Illinois regiment of Wagner's division was nearly wiped out, every field officer, its color guard, consisting of a sergeant and eight corporals, and 150 men being shot down. The Forty-fourth Missouri (Federal), lying next to the gap where the first break occurred, changed front under fire and maintained its ground, with a loss of thirty-four killed and thirty-seven wounded. The carnage on the Confederate side was still more terrible. Schofield held his ground and at night crossed the river unmolested by Hood's shattered army. GEORGE L. KILMER.

TALK OF EXTRA SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE

Governor is Willing To Hear Suggestions.

TWO EXTRA SESSIONS IN 4 YEARS.

Politicians Dubious As To Effect Of Between-Time Legislatures On Party's Chances — Amendment Suit Ready For Trial.

Gossip concerning the suggested extra session of the Legislature to substitute a more acceptable form of Constitutional amendment to limit the voting franchise and perhaps to remedy the defects in the primary election law and to enact a uniform general election law spread to a much larger circle today. It was noticeable that some who might have been expected to throw cold water on the plan showed no such disposition.

Governor Warfield said he had not been directly approached on the subject, although he had heard something of the plan. He stated however, that he had received a letter from a prominent Eastern Shore voter strongly recommending such a course. The Governor seemed more inclined to elicit information than to express opinions, but it was evident that he is entirely willing to listen to suggestions looking to the fulfillment in a frank and fair way of the promises made in the platform on which he was elected and on the lines advocated by him during the campaign of last year.

There is reason to believe that the wing of the party controlled by Senator Gorman, and which dominated the Legislature in the passage of the Poe amendment, will not take the stubborn stand that it did last winter and contend for the Poe plan and that only. The opposition to the amendment which was passed by the House of Delegates and the Senate has become so pronounced and the danger to the Democratic party from its being pushed so grave that the most earnest of its advocates are staggered, and prophecies that they would simply "stand pat" may not be realized.

Among the suggestions made by more timid Democrats is the question if the Democratic party can afford to stand the record of three extra sessions within four years, and two of these for political purposes. The answer made by the more sanguine is that if the suggested extra session were called to remedy the grievances complained of by the opposition, that opposition could not consistently complain. As to expenses, it is said that all the necessary bills could be prepared and agreed upon between Governor Warfield, Attorney General Bryan and the Gorman leaders beforehand, and that the session could be limited to one week.

The small army of employees incident to a regular session would, it is said, be dispensed with, and Governor Warfield might be depended upon to prevent grafting. It is also suggested that the legal proceedings about to be instituted to determine the validity of the Poe amendment might be permitted to fall into innocuous desuetude or allowed to go against the amendment by default.

Attorney General Bryan has completed his answer to Mr. Murray Vandiver's bill for a mandamus to compel Governor Warfield to proclaim the Poe amendment and has submitted it to Mr. Edgar H. Gans, who will be associated with him in the case. The bill and answer will not be filed until tomorrow, and may not be filed for several days. The actual filing of the papers will be a matter of small moment, as the date for a hearing will be settled by agreement, and will not be affected by the filing.

Mr. Bryan's answer is in the nature of a demurrer, as it admits all the facts stated in Mr. Vandiver's petition, but denies the legal proposition that the bill proposing the amendment is valid without the Governor's signature and the great seal of the State. A copy of Governor Warfield's message to the Senate giving his views on the legality of the amendment will be filed with the answer as an exhibit.

Mrs. M. E. Flowers, formerly proprietress of the Allegheny House at Mountain Lake Park, and who with her family recently moved to this city where she has been occupying a residence on West Main street, has rented the boarding house formerly operated by Mrs. Coulehan on East Main street, and today is engaged n furnishing the same for the purpose of conducting a like business. She will be ready for the reception of guests on December first. The fact that Mrs. Flowers so successfully conducted a summer home at Mountain Lake Park for the past two seasons is evidence that she will run a first class boarding house in this city, and that she will meet with success we doubt not.—Grafton Sentinel.

THE OLD NATIONAL HIGHWAY'S PAST.

Some History of the Famous Thoroughfare.

ITS GLORY HAS DEPARTED

Talk of Repairing the Highway—Great Men Traveled Over It — Building of Railroads Almost Entirely Vacated It

While the state of Maryland is once again being stirred up over the question of selling its holdings in the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, which runs from Cumberland to Washington, D. C., a distance of 184 miles, the people of Pennsylvania are considering the question of modern scientifically constructed highways and the efficacy of state aid for rebuilding the old national road, which was the predecessor of the Baltimore & Ohio steam route which was completed to Wheeling in 1852. The old road played an important part in the early development of Baltimore, as that city, by connection with the Frederick pike to a great extent, was its eastern terminus, until the Baltimore & Ohio railroad was completed to Cumberland in the fall of 1842. The old road was one of the most important steps in the evolution of modern trade and travel. At a time when the great tide of emigration was pouring into the Mississippi valley it was more than any other institution the means of hastening the development of the great west. The grand old highway was instrumental in turning the course of emigration from the south to the west. Over it were carried almost endless population and millions of actual wealth and the middle west was by its clasp linked to the new and boundless acres of the North.

It was the first and only highway that was built by funds from the national treasury. The question of internal land and water communication was in the midst of our fathers even before the revolution. George Washington was one of those most interested in the matter, and as early as 1770 he visited the west, examining the lay of the land and the friend of the streams. There through the southern Ohio section over which he was guided by an old Indian, Nemacolin, and still later he cut a road, through the same forest. This was called the Braddock road, and was displayed at length by the national highway which threaded its way over the same route.

The national turnpike, commonly called the Cumberland road, was one hundred and seventeen miles in length, of which thirtyt passed through Maryland. From the time it was thrown open to the public, in the year 1818 until the coming of railroads west of the Allegheny mountains in 1852 the national road was the one great highway over which passed the bulk of trade and travel and the mails between the east and the west. Its numerous and stately stone bridges with handsomely turner arches, its iron gates, attest the skill of the workmen engaged on its construction and to this day remain enduring monuments of its grandeur and solidity, all save the imposing iron gates, which have disappeared by process of conversion prompted by some utilitarian idea savoring in no little measure of sacrilege. Many of the most illustrous statesmen and heroes of the early period of our natural existence, passed over the national road from their homes to the capital and back at the opening and closing of the sessions of congress. Jackson, Harrison, Clay, Sam Houston, Polk, Taylor, Crittenden, Shelby, Allen, Scott, Butler, the eccentric David Crocket and many of their contemporaries in public service were familiar figures in the eyes of the dwellers by the roadside.

As many as twenty-four horse coaches have been counted in line at one time leaving Cumberland on their way to Wheeling. Large, broad-wheeled wagons covered with white canvass, stretched over bows, laden with merchandise and drawn by six Conestago horses.

The national road proper was built from Cumberland, Md., to Wheeling, Va., by the United States government the intention being to establish it as far as St Louis. Its projector and chief supporter was Henry Clay, whose services in its behalf are commemorated by a monument near Wheeling. Henry Nesson, a former congressman, was also an advocate of it, and on one occasion the advocate of it.—Kingwood Journal.

Petty Quarrels Cause Many Divorces

By Mrs. FRANK LESLIE

IT is a mistake to suppose that the GENERALITY of divorces are attributable to the most serious cause. An eminent sociologist who has investigated this point in our own country quotes letters from lawyers and a number of other professional men especially qualified to give opinions on the subject. They agree in saying that, while "counsel often SUSPECT impurity as the cause of divorce where it is not alleged," a great many divorces occur in which they are convinced beyond possibility of a reasonable doubt that infidelity cannot have anything to do with the case. One says that any estimate of the proportion of divorces where disloyalty does not exist would be untrustworthy, BUT IT IS LARGE. Others say that infidelity probably does not exist in a majority of cases. Their opinion, in the exact words of one of them, is that "the cause of divorce in the very large majority of cases is the PETTY QUARRELS between the parties." And whoever has paid any attention to the matter knows that there is a great deal in this latter cause. Byron's significant remark to Moore apropos of his own celebrated case was that the REAL cause of his separation from Lady Byron was "too trivial ever to be found out."

If men generally set up for the women they marry a far higher standard than they ever think of applying to themselves, it is also true that the common error of these wives is to EXPECT TOO MUCH of marriage. Too often they seem to think that as soon as this Rubicon is crossed everything will go magically right and they will "live happily ever after." Why, DISILLUSIONMENT is one of the first conditions of conjugal contentment! If deals were grasped at the outset they would furnish no incentive to that aspiring struggle and self sacrifice which are the INSPIRATION of every true life, married or single. The ideal must ever be BEYOND AND ABOVE us, while we push on and do the best we can with the REAL that surrounds us.

Examples of proud reticence and forbearance on the part of men and women of noble or high social rank are apparent on every hand today. Take, for instance, the White House at Washington. NO SCANDAL HAS EVER CAST ITS SHADOW THERE in more than a hundred years. Yet every one acquainted with the inner history of Washington life knows that on at least one occasion within the last century such a calamity has been averted only by the heroic resolution of individuals TO SUFFER IN SILENCE rather than risk a national disgrace.

THIS IS THE SPIRIT IN WHICH TRUE MEN AND WOMEN OUGHT TO REGARD THE DUTIES AND OBLIGATIONS OF MARRIED LIFE TOWARD ONE ANOTHER AND THE WORLD AT LARGE.

How World Unity Will Be Accomplished

By JAMES L. COWLES, Secretary of the Postal Progress League

THE day is coming when the postman shall eliminate the war man; the postal car, the field cannon; the postal transport, the man-of-war; the day when, through THE EVOLUTION OF THE POSTOFFICE, we shall arrive at the culmination of the poet's dream:

When the war drums throb no longer and the battleflags are furl'd
In the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

And this is no longer a mere dream. It became A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION when the American Postmaster General Blair, in 1862, amid the throes of our civil war, threw out to the nations the thought of a world postal union. It became a triumphant reality in 1874, when Dr. Stephan, postmaster general of Germany, called the statesmen of the world around him and established the universal postal union, with its capital in the beautiful city of Berne, in the heart of central Europe.

Commencing in July, 1875, with the transport of half ounce letters, in 1880 Dr. Stephan inauguarted an international parcels post union, handling seven pound merchandise parcels. In 1885 the common international parcels limit was extended to eleven pounds. Today the French postoffice handles twenty-two pound parcels; Germany, Austria, Hungary, Servia, 110 pound parcels; Switzerland, parcels of any weight. Germany and Switzerland even go so far as to transport both passengers and their baggage by post.

THE EXTENSION OF A WORLD POSTAL SERVICE MEANS A GRADUAL ELIMINATION OF INTERNATIONAL WAR. IT MEANS A "UNITED STATES OF THE WORLD." IT MEANS THE TUNNELING OF THE MOUNTAINS, THE BRIDGING OF SEAS, THE BREAKING DOWN OF THE WALLS OF IGNORANCE AND OF PREJUDICE, THE ELIMINATION OF TIME AND OF SPACE, TO THE END THAT THE WEAKEST HAND, THE MOST TIMID VOICE, MAY REACH TO THE ENDS OF THE EARTH AND COMMAND ITS RICHEST TREASURES.

The development of our domestic postal service implies its extension over the whole field of transportation and transmission. It will solve our vexed public transport problem and with justice to all. It will put an end to rivalry between town and country, city and city, man and man, for it will secure EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY to all places and to all persons. It will end industrial war. Postmen never strike. Their votes give them their due share of power over their hours of labor and their remuneration for their labor.

THE reading of "penny dreadfuls" has practically ceased since the establishment of school libraries, and the children who read are quicker, more intelligent, easier to teach AND BRIGHTER IN DISPOSITION. They develop a better sense of humor, can see a point and laugh more readily, than children who do not read or read only MORBID TRASH.

Buford W. Woods vs. Lydia Woods.
No. 1396 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree, divorcing the plaintiff, a vinculo matrimonii, from the defendant.

The bill states, that the plaintiff and defendant were married by the Rev. W. E. George at Deer Park, in the year 1894, and that they resided together at Garrett county aforesaid until about the month of April 1895; that the conduct of the plaintiff towards the defendant has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, and without any just cause or reason, the defendant abandoned and deserted the plaintiff, and has declared her intention to live with him no longer, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for more than three years, to-wit since the month of April, 1895, and is deliberate and final and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation; that one child, George W. Woods has been born to the plaintiff and defendant from said marriage, and resides with his mother the defendant, that the said Lydia Woods is a non resident of the State of Maryland.

The bill then prays for a decree divorcing the plaintiff and defendent a vinculo watrimonii and for general relief and an order of publication against the absent defendant.

It is thereupon this 25th day of November, 1904, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, ordered that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 30th day of December, 1904, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning her to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 17th day of January next, to show cause, if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

TWELVE MEDALS TO MARYLAND.

General Bauuhman Tells of St. Louis Fair Awards.

STATE EXHIBIT BIG SUCCESS

Was Generally Admired And Attracted Througs—Commissioners Gratified Over Results.

Gen. L. Victor Baughman, chairman of the Maryland Commission to the Louisana Purchase Exposition, returned to his home in Frederick yesterday after a week's visit to St. Louis, where he was in attendance at the closing ceremonies of the great fair and where he finished up all matters pertaining to the State Building and the State exhibit. Mr. Samuel K. Dennis, the secretary to the commission, accompanied General Baughman.

Upon their return the announcement was made that more than 12 gold and silver medals were won by the Maryland exhibits in competition with those of other States, a showing made by Maryland during the fair which, it was pointed out, should be a source of congratulation to all citizens of the State. In speaking of Maryland's part in the great Exposition, General Baughman said yesterday:

"All during the Fair Maryland has taken a conspicuous position. Her beautiful building has been visited by every prominent official, besides the crowds of former Marylanders who have each day come to enquire of friends or to ask about their former homes in the old State. Over 28,000 persons have registered on the State register, and as many more have visited the building who did not register.

"I gave strict orders about the distribution of State literature. Twenty thousand pamphlets of the resources of Maryland, with as many views of the Beacons Lights of Baltimore, gotten out through the indorsement of the Merchant and Manufactnrers' Association, as well as other pamphlets of Maryland, were sent to all the foreign representatives, as also to the commissioners of other States who were represented on the Exposition grounds. The agricultural exhibit, showing the resources of the State in wheat, corn and tobacco, was visited by thousands of Western farmers, and over 100 prizes were awarded to the Marylann exhibit.

"The same satisfactory results occurred in the mines and mineral displays, in charge of Professor Clark, of Johns Hopkins University. Over 12 gold and silver medals were won on competition with other States and our exhibition was pronounced by hundreds as being by far the most interesting exhibit at the Fair. For these exhibits the Maryland Commissioners appropriated $17,500. Five hundred dollars was given the State Immigration Bureau for the publication of pamphlets on the resources of the State. Five hundred dollars was also given for a display of the Johns Hopkins Nurses School, besides other appropriations.

"One of the great features of the Fair was the part taken by the State Commissioners in their respective State buildings. Each building had one or several ladies presiding as hostess. Here these State people and dignitaries were entertained and all inquiries regarding State matters were fully given by those in charge. Mr. Albert Jones was in charge of the Maryland Building. No. building was more popular on the grounds than the Maryland Building. Mrs. Parks Fisher acted as hostess throughout the Fair and was made chairman of the Association of National Hostesses. The number of visitors attest the popularity of our State and the wisdom of our legislation in making even the scanty appropriation out of which so much has been accomplished by the Maryland Commissioners.

The Maryland Building was wisely disposed of to the contractors in the exact price. This relieved the commissioners of the responsibility of removal or the trouble of finding a purchaser. The beautiful Kentucky Building was sold for $500, others for a much less price. The furniture has also been disposed of in a lot. The Messrs. Steiff were kind enough to furnish two beautiful pianos for the building at their own expense.

"I as well as the rest of the commissioners, hope that there can be made a permanent display of the mineral resources of the State by having our exhibit sent to Annapolis, where a suitable room could be secured for this exhibit as a start for a permanent exhibit. I have discussed this matter with Professor Clark, who seems to be in accord with the idea. The agricultural exhibit, or such as could be made permanent, could likewise be used by the Marvland Agricultural College."

All the portraits loaned the commission as well as valuable records from the Historical Society and from other sources, were placed in the hands of the express company before the departure of General Baughman and Secretary Dennis.

AFTER 18 YEARS OF SERVICE

Mr. Beverly S. Randolph Retires as Superintendent of Consolidation Coal Co.

Mr. Beverly S. Randolph has retired as superintendent of the Consolidation Coal Company, after a service of eighteen years. He will be succeeded by John C. Brydon, who has been superintendent of the Somerset Coal Company. A new office, that of General Manager of the Consolidation Coal Company, has been created and will be filled by L. L. Malone, of Fairmont, W. Va. It is understood that the position of superintendent pays very handsomely. Mr. Randolph will leave shortly for his farm near Great Cacapon, W. Va., where he also has large stone quarries. He has an extensivedairy. Mr. Randolph wasborn in Virginia, at Berkeley Springs, and comes from the eminent Randolph family. He is an expert civil engineer and geologist and his lectures on the geology of the George's Creek region have attracted much attention.

Mr. Randolph is without doubt the leading authority regarding the coal beds of the George's Creek region, and has done much to make the Consolidation Coal Company what it is today. For many years Mr. Randolph made his home in Martinsburg. He studied civil engineering and geology and spent much of his early life with surveying corps.

Mr. Brydon, the new superintendent, is a comparatively young mining engineer, who has been very successful. He was superintendent of the Thomas mines of the Davis Coal and Coke Company before becoming superintendent of the Somerset Coal Company. He is a son of Mr. Wm. A. Brydon, of Bloomington, Md., who is well known in the coal region, and was at one time in charge of the affairs of the Baltimore and Hampshire Coal Company, in its day one of the largest shippers from the Cumberland region. Mr. Brydon took charge of his new responsibilities yesterday. Mr. Malone, the general manager of the Fairmont, Consolidation and Somerset mines, was also in Frostburg yesterday.—Cumberland News. (Saturday.)

RYANS GLADE

Mr. Editor, it is a long time since we have seen any items from this section, so here we are this winter day jotting down a few of the happenings in and around here, which we hope will find space in your valuable paper and interest at least a few of your many readers.

Water is getting to be a scarce article in this section. Some farmers have trouble in procuring sufficient water for their stock. W. H. Mumaw is unable to operate his saw mill on account of the scarcity of this necessity.

Our school is progressing nicely under the skillful management of Miss Lillie Weimer, thirty-four scholars on roll with an average attendance of twenty-five. Mrs. Rachel Harvey, the aged mother of N. B. Harvey, has been ill for some time and her condition is unimproved.

Rev. E. J. Westfall, our pastor, who has been ill since before conference is able to be among us again and will preach for us next Sunday at two 30 p. m.

Our Sunday school will close for the winter on Chrismas day.

Miss Alice Harvey is suffering with an attack of lagrippe.

Mr. John A. Martin is contemplating a trip to Oaklahoma soon.

There are three coal mines now in operation in this section within a radius of two miles, each striving for the trade. The mines are operated by J. E. Lish, E. L. Davis and J. C. Riley. S. G. Stever also recently opened a fine vein of coal on his farm.

Mr. Elmer Harvey recently purchased a fine sleigh and bells. We predict some merry sleigh rides for some of the fair see, and then Elmer is such a favorite.

Mr. John Savage, of Sunnyside, was visiting at M. S. Harvey's Sunday.

Mrs. J. B. Shockey is visiting her parents at Stoyer for a few days.

Now we will close, and if this escapes the waste basket we will come again soon. Success to THE REPUBLICAN.

DEER PARK JOTTINGS.

The first thing among the many items of the past week which will follow, is the announcement of the passing away to the Great Bevond of our friend and neighbor Mr. Cyrus, H. Shreve, a veteran of the Civil war, who died at his late home near this place on Monday, 5th inst., at 2.10 o'clock a. m. after an illness of less than one week, leaving a devoted sick wife, one son, Mr. Walter Scott Shreve, and one daughter, the wife of George P. Marley, of this place. Mr. Shreve was a devoted husband, a kind father and true friend to all those whom he considered worthy. His funeral will take place at his late home, conducted by Rev. Wm. H. Faust and interment in the Deer Park Cemetary. An obituary will follow later.

The entertainment at the town hall on Saturday last for the benefit of the Deer Park concert Band, proved quite a success, both socially and financially. An orderly assemblage of all our best citizens patronized this pleasant and worthy occasion, although the weather was inclement over seventy-five persons were present and were agreeably entertained during the rendition of the following program:

Address by Rev. W. H. Faust whose theme was "Music."

Comic prelude, by Sargt. John Landis.

A selection by band.

Recitation, by Miss Bessie Deal.

Tableau. Confidence that Causes Trouble.

Selection by band.

Dialogue, Bessie Deal and Jessie McRobie.

Music by graphaphone, "Cary me Back to Old Virginia."

Solo, S. P. Specht, "You Know How it is Yourself."

Selection by band "Maryland My Maryland."

Dialogue, Misses Grace Marley, Jessie Taylor, Grace Walter and Ersel Taylor.

Music by graphaphone.

Address, "Come," by Clarence Lashorn.

Music by the band.

Closing address by Rev. Faust, and the sale of boxes of confections by Sargt. Landis. Boxes tied with ribbon to match eight young ladies, who were to partake of the lunch within the boxes and the favorite ribbons were conspicuous by the spirited biding by some of the young men especially was it noticed in the case of our young friends "Gay" and "Clarence" and our Rev. young brother was bidding lively when he noticed the color of the ribbon on the box, and then glancing to same color on one of Deer Park's fair daughters.

The fortune telling booth., presided over by Miss Grace Marley, was an enjoyable feature of the evening but not patronized by the young gentlemen bidding on the boxes, as they seemed to think their fortunes were on the eve of being realized and thus the fortune telling booth was a failure financially, but the tables with every luxury were well patronized and with the guessing "bean bottle," with the persistent and courtly Jess McRobie soliciting guesses at 5 cents a guess, a handsome sum was realized. Door receipts, $8; boxes, $11; and other sources, a grand total of over $30 was placed in the hands of the Treas. S. P. Specht for the benefit of our band which we all take a just and merited pride in. Thus closed an entertainment that was a credit to the town and a pleasure to all that attended, as no disorderly person was allowed to come to mar the pleasant intercourse of the joyous and fraternal feeling of of neighbours and friends, and with the closing selection by our gallant boys of the band, of that most appropriate piece, "God be with you Till we Meet again," all returned to their homes with glad hearts feeling that the money had been well spent and for a noble cause, for who is it that does not love music, which was so touchingly and feelingly expressed by our worthy young Divine in his ad dresse of welcome on this occasion, and with "Music" his theme.

With the pleasant things and happenings we are called to relate the sad. The infant daughter of our friends and neighbours, Mr. and Mrs. James W. Walters, died on Friday, Dec. 2nd, after a lingering illness of several weeks, aged 5 months and 12 days, and was buried on the 3rd from the home, Rev. Faust preaching a feeling and appropriate sermon from the text, "Suffer Little Children to Come Unto Me, etc." The writer who has known the bereaved friends for years, could say more about this angelchild, but an obituary will follow later, and fully realizing that their little darling is gone to a Mansion far beyond the stars we can only offer them our sympathy and say your loss is Alta Florence's gain, and believing she will be the star that will shine as a beacon light to guide you to the Abode, where she is, "to a City whose maker and builder is God.

Rev. Mr. Faust is conducting a series of meetings at the Baptist church at Thayersville, commencing on Sunday last. A gentleman from Texas is assisting him.

Rev. W. H. Clary has been absent from home for the past ten days visiting old friends in the southern part of the county to whom he ministered to over twenty years ago and reports an enjoyable and profitable sojourn. Mrs. Clary is on a visit to her daughter, who lives at Antioch, Mineral county, W. Va.

Miss Ella Hoye is spending the past ten days in your city with her niece and name sake, sister of Mrs. John Felty, Jr. A message informs us she is enjoying the first storm of winter pleasantly with these kind relatives.

Mr. Wm. B. Miller returned from Baltimore on Monday and will spend the holidays before he returns to the Monumental city. His fatherinlaw Mr. W. L. Shaffer, is much better than when we last wrote of his sickness, but still suffers with a swollen face, caused by neuralgia.

A case of destitution was discovered last week and was immediately responded to by some whole-souled citizens in the persons of Mr. George Marley, Mr. Enoch Clark, Wm. W. Thrasher, Wilfred Chadderton, Clarence Lashorn, S. Hinebaugh and Rev. Wm. H. Faust, who with their own hands built a chimney and with donations from Mrs. Haulenbeck, Mrs. L. D. Thrasher, W. C. Jones, David Brashers, S. P. Specht, Wm. H. Hennen and others whose names we withhold, these poor unfortunates were made comfortable, having a fire to keep them warm by day and good warm blankets and comforts at night; with shoes and wearing apparel and plenty of the necessaries and even luxuries to sustain the inner man. The party who is responsible for this destitution will be attended to in the near future.

With kind regards to the editor and his efficient staff, I am,

SCARCITY OF WATER

The Protracted Drought Has Greatly Inconvenienced the Farmers of Garrett County.

Reports from all parts of the country are to the effect that water is the scarcest article among the country people and should the drought be further protracted there will surely be much suffering of live stock. In many communities wells and springs that have always afforded an abundance of water have long since become entirely exhausted, and in many cases the farmers are compelled to haul water for various purposes from neighboring streams. The majority of the farmers in this county have well-watered farms, and have not been so greatly troubled for that necessary article, in the past, but the present drought has almost eclipsed all others so far that the inconvenience experienced for some time past is without a parallel. And the water that wells and springs now afford appears to be so unhealthy that an epidemic of typhoid fever is greatly dreaded, and for that reason, if none other, vigorous precautions are being exercised to guard against such an unfortunate happening. Some old citizens express themselves that within their recollection the present drought is about the worst ever known. The country people are hoping that they will soon receive a generous shower, because, as many farmers say, "if a hard freeze should come, it is hard to tell what stock would do for water."

To Defraud Farmers.

The grand jury at Hagerstown, finished its work Monday evening, after being in session 12 days, and finding 86 indictments. Three hundred and twenty eight witnesses were examined. The almshouse, in which there are 100 inmates, was found well kept. The jurors commended the remodeled jail.

They reported that they found certain cattle dealers who convinced farmers that their cattle are diseased with tuberculosis and later purchasing from the frightened farmers the same cattle alleged to be infected at very small prices and shipping them out of the county to other markets, thereby defrauding. Sufficient evidence, however, was found to convict. The report says "We believe there is a conspiracy existing between certain stock dealers and veterinary surgeons to defraud farmers out of their cattle."

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

President Roosevelt's message has been delivered to congress. Its main features are as follows:

The enlargement of scope of the functions of the national government required by our development as a nation involves, of course, increase of expense, and the period of prosperity through which the country is passing justifies expenditures for permanent improvements far greater than would be wise in hard times, but abundant revenues and a large surplus always invite extravagance, and constant care should be taken to guard against unnecessary increase of the ordinary expenses of government.

Capital and Labor.

The relations of capital and labor, and especially of organized capital and organized labor, to each other and to the public at large come second in importance only to the intimate questions of family life. Our peculiar form of government, with its sharp division of authority between the nation and the several states, has been on the whole far more advantageous to our development than a more strongly centralized government. But it is undoubtedly responsible for much of the difficulty of meeting with adequate legislation the new problems presented by the total change in industrial conditions on this continent during the last half century. In actual practice it has proved exceedingly difficult, and in many cases impossible, to get unanimity of wise action among the various states on these subjects. From the very nature of the case this is especially true of the laws affecting the employment of capital in huge masses.

With regard to labor, the problem is no less important, but it is simpler. As long as the states retain the primary control of the police power the circumstances must be altogether extreme which require interference by the federal authorities, whether in the way of safeguarding the rights of labor or in the way of seeing that wrong is not done by unruly persons who shield themselves behind the name of labor. If there is resistance to the federal courts, interference with the mails or interstate commerce or molestation of federal property, or if the state authorities in some crisis which they are unable to face call for help, then the federal government may interfere; but, though such interference may be caused by a condition of things arising out of trouble connected with some question of labor, the interference itself simply takes the form of restoring order without regard to the questions which have caused the breach of order. In the District of Columbia and in the territories the federal law covers the entire field of government. But the labor question is only acute in populous centers of commerce, manufactures or mining. Nevertheless both in the enactment and in the enforcement of law the federal government within its restricted sphere should set an example to the state governments, especially in a matter so vital as this affecting labor.

Labor Unions.

I believe that under modern industrial conditions it is often necessary and even where not necessary it is yet often wise that there should be organization of labor in order better to secure the rights of the individual wageworker. All encouragement should be given to any such organization so long as it is conducted with a due and decent regard for the rights of others. There are in this country some labor unions which have habitually and other labor unions which have often been among the most effective agents in working for good citizenship and for uplifting the condition of those whose welfare should be closest to our hearts. But when any labor union seeks improper ends or seeks to achieve proper ends by improper means all good citizens, and more especially all honorable public servants, must oppose the wrongdoing as resolutely as they would oppose the wrongdoing of any great corporation. Violence, brutality or corruption should not for one moment be tolerated.

Entire Right to Organize.

Wageworkers have an entire right to organize and by all peaceful and honorable means to endeavor to persuade their fellows to join with them in organizations. They have a legal right, which, according to circumstances, may or may not be a moral right, to refuse to work in company with men who decline to join their organizations. They have under no circumstances the right to commit violence upon those, whether capitalists or wageworkers, who refuse to support their organizations or who side with those with whom they are at odds, for mob rule is intolerable in any form.

The wageworkers are peculiarly entitled to the protection and the encouragement of the law. Wherever the national government has power there should be a stringent employer's liability law, which should apply to the government itself where the government is an employer of labor.

Prevention of Railroad Accidents.

The ever increasing casualty list upon our railroads is a matter of grave public concern and urgently calls for action by the congress. The passage of a law requiring the adoption of a block signal system has been proposed to the congress. I earnestly concur in that recommendation and would also point out to the congress the urgent need of legislation in the interest of the public safety limiting the hours of labor for railroad employees in train service upon railroads engaged in interstate commerce and providing that only trained and experienced persons be employed in positions of responsibility connected with the operation of trains.

The safety appliance law, as amended by the act of March 2, 1903, has proved beneficial to railway employees, and in order that its provisions may be properly carried out the force of inspectors provided for by appropriation should be largely increased. This service has passed the experimental stage and should receive generous recognition by the congress.

Unionism In Government Offices.

There is no objection to employees of the government forming or belonging to unions, but the government can neither discriminate for nor discriminate against nonunion men who are in its employment or who seek to be employed underit. Moreover, it is a very grave impropriety for government employees to band themselves together for the purpose of extorting improperly high salaries from the government. Especially is this true of those within the classified service. The letter carriers, both municipal and rural, are as a whole an excellent body of public servants. They should be amply paid. But their payment must be obtained by arguing their claims fairly and honorably before the congress and not by banding together for the defeat of those congressmen who refuse to give promises which they cannot in conscience give. The administration has taken steps to prevent and punish abuses of this nature, but it will be wise for the congress to supplement this action by legislation.

Bureau of Labor.

Much can be done by the government in labor matters merely by giving publicity to certain conditions. The bureau of labor has done excellent work of this kind in many different directions. I shall shortly lay before you in a special message the full report of the investigation of the bureau of labor into the Colorado mining strike, as this is a strike in which certain very evil forces, which are more or less at work everywhere under the conditions of modern industrialism, became startlingly prominent. It is greatly to be wished that the department of commerce and labor, through the labor bureau, should compile and arrange for the congress a list of the labor laws of the various states and should be given the means to investigate and report to the congress upon the labor conditions in the manufacturing and mining regions throughout the country, both as to wages, as to hours of labor, as to the labor of women and children and as to the effect in the various labor centers of immigration from abroad. In this investigation especial attention should be paid to the conditions of child labor and child labor legislation in the several states.

Corporations.

When we come to deal with great corporations the need for the government to act directly is far greater than in the case of labor, because great corporations can become such only by engaging in interstate commerce, and interstate commerce is peculiarly the field of the general government. It is an absurdity to expect to eliminate the abuses in great corporations by state action. It is difficult to be patient with an argument that such matters should be left to the states, because more than one state pursues the policy of creating on easy terms corporations which are never operated within that state at all, but in other states whose laws they ignore. The national government alone can deal adequately with these great corporations. To try to deal with them in an intemperate, destructive or demagogic spirit would in all probability mean that nothing whatever would be accomplished, and with absolute certainty that if anything were accomplished it would be of a harmful nature. The American people need to continue to show the very qualities that they have shown—that is, moderation, good sense, the earnest desire to avoid doing any damage and yet the quiet determination to proceed, step by step, without halt and without hurry, in eliminating or at least in minimizing whatever of mischief or of evil there is to interstate commerce in the conduct of great corporations. They are acting in no spirit of hostility to wealth, either individual or corporate. They are not against the rich man any more than against the poor man. On the contrary, they are friendly alike toward rich man and toward poor man, provided only that each acts in a spirit of justice and decency toward his fellows. Great corporations are necessary, and only men of great and singular mental power can manage such corporations successfully, and such men must have great rewards. But these corporations should be managed with due regard to the interest of the public as a whole. Where this can be done under the present laws it must be done. Where these laws come short others should be enacted to supplement them.

Bureau of Corporations.

The bureau of corporations has made careful preliminary investigation of many important corporations. It will make a special report on the beef industry.

The policy of the bureau is to accomplish the purposes of its creation by co-operation, not antagonism; by making constructive legislation, not destructive prosecution, the immediate object of its inquiries; by conservative investigation of law and fact and by refusal to issue incomplete and hence necessarily inaccurate reports. Its policy being thus one of open inquiry into and not attack upon business, the bureau has been able to gain not only the confidence, but, better still, the co-operation, of men engaged in legitimate business.

The bureau offers to the congress the means of getting at the cost of production of our various great staples of commerce.

Of necessity the careful investigation of special corporations will afford the commissioner knowledge of certain business facts, the publication of which might be an improper infringement of private rights. The method of making public the results of these investigations affords, under the law, a means for the protection of private rights. The congress will have all facts except such as would give to another corporation information which would injure the legitimate business of a competitor and destroy the incentive for individual superiority and thrift.

The bureau has also made exhaustive examinations into the legal condition under which corporate business is carried on in the various states, into all judicial decisions on the subject and into the various systems of corporate taxation in use. I call special attention to the report of the chief of the bureau, and I earnestly ask that the congress carefully consider the report and recommendations of the commissioner on this subject.

The business of insurance vitally affects the great mass of the people of the United States and is national and not local in its application. It involves a multitude of transactions among the people of the different states and between American companies and foreign governments. I urge that the congress carefully consider whether the power of the bureau of corporations cannot constitutionally be extended to cover interstate transactions in insurance.

Rebates.

Above all else we must strive to keep the highways of commerce open to all on equal terms, and to do this it is necessary to put a complete stop to all rebates. Whether the shipper or the railroad is to blame makes no difference. The rebate must be stopped, the abuses of the private car and private terminal track and side track systems must be stopped, and the legislation of the Fifty-eighth congress which declares it to be unlawful for any person or corporation to offer, grant, give, solicit, accept or receive any rebate, concession or discrimination in respect of the transportation of any property in interstate or foreign commerce whereby such property shall by any device whatever be transported at a less rate than that named in the tariffs published by the carrier must be enforced. While I am of the opinion that at present it would be undesirable if it were not impracticable finally to clothe the interstate commerce commission with general authority to fix railroad rates, I do believe that as a fair security to shippers the commission should be vested with the power where a given rate has been challenged and after full hearing found to be unreasonable to decide, subject to judicial review, what shall be a reasonable rate to take its place, the ruling of the commission to take effect immediately and to obtain unless and until it is reversed by the court of review.

Steamship companies engaged in interstate commerce and protected in our coastwise trade should be held to a strict observance of the interstate commerce act.

[The president here discusses the city of Washington, making numerous recommendations looking to its better government. He asks that laws be passed preventing overcrowding in the tenement districts, for the abolition of blind alleys and the proper housing of the poor. He also recommends changes in the criminal code, and would have wife beaters corporally punished.]

Irrigation.

During the two and a half years that have elapsed since the passage of the reclamation act rapid progress has been made in the surveys and examinations of the opportunities for reclamation in the thirteen states and three territories of the arid west. Construction has already been begun on the largest and most important of the irrigation works, and plans are being completed for works which will utilize the funds now available.

The forest policy of the government is just now a subject of vivid public interest throughout the west and to the people of the United States in general. The forest reserves themselves are of extreme value to the present as well as to the future welfare of all the western public land states. They powerfully affect the use and disposal of the public lands. They are of special importance because they preserve the water supply and the supply of timber for domestic purposes and to promote settlement under the reclamation act. Indeed they are essential to the welfare of every one of the great interests of the west.

I have repeatedly called attention to the confusion which exists in government forest matters because the work is scattered among three independent organizations. As I have recommended, all the forest work of the government should be concentrated in the department of agriculture, where the larger part of that work is already done. The Canyon of the Colorado should be made a national park, and the national park system should include the Yosemite and as many as possible of the groves of giant trees in California.

Pensions.

The veterans of the civil war have a claim upon the nation such as no other body of our citizens possess. The pension bureau has never in its history been managed in a more satisfactory manner than is now the case.

Consular Service.

Our consular system needs improvement. Salaries should be substituted for fees, and the proper classification, grading and transfer of consular officers should be provided. I am not prepared to say that a competitive system of examinations for appointment would work well, but by law it should be provided that consuls should be familiar, according to places for which they apply, with the French, German or Spanish language and should possess acquaintance with the resources of the United States.

It is desirable to enact a proper national quarantine law.

I call your attention to the great extravagance in printing and binding government publications and especially to the fact that altogether too many of these publications are printed.

Currency.

The attention of the congress should be especially given to the currency question and that the standing committees on the matter in the two houses charged with the duty take up the matter of our currency and see whether it is not possible to secure an agreement in the business world for bettering the system. The committees should consider the question of the retirement of the greenbacks and the problem of securing in our currency such elasticity as is consistent with safety. Every silver dollar should be made by law redeemable in gold at the option of the holder.

Merchant Marine.

I especially commend to your immediate attention the encouragement of our merchant marine by appropriate legislation.

The growing importance of the orient as a field for American exports drew from my predecessor, President McKinley, an urgent request for its special consideration by the congress.

The importance of securing proper information and data with a view to the enlargement of our trade with Asia is undiminished. Our consular representatives in China have strongly urged a place for permanent display of American products in some prominent trade center of that empire, under government control and management, as an effective means of advancing our export trade therein. I call the attention of the congress to the desirability of carrying out these suggestions.

Immigration and Naturalization.

In dealing with the questions of immigration and naturalization it is indispensable to keep certain facts ever before the minds of those who share in enacting the laws. First and foremost, let us remember that the question of being a good American has nothing whatever to do with a man's birthplace any more than it has to do with his creed. In every generation from the time this government was founded men of foreign birth have stood in the very foremost rank of good citizenship, and that not merely in one but in every field of American activity.

There is no danger of having too many immigrants of the right kind, but the citizenship of this country should not be debased. It is vital that we should keep high the standard of well being among our wageworkers, and therefore we should not admit masses of men whose standards of living and whose personal customs and habits are such that they tend to lower the level of the American wageworker, and above all we should not admit any man of an unworthy type. Similarly we should take the greatest care about naturalization. Fraudulent naturalization, the naturalization of improper persons, is a curse to our government, and it is the affair of every honest voter, wherever born, to see that no fraud in connection with naturalization is permitted.

Revision of Naturalization Laws.

There should be a comprehensive revision of the naturalization laws. The courts having power to naturalize should be definitely named by national authority, the testimony upon which naturalization may be conferred should be definitely prescribed, publication of impending naturalization applications should be required in advance of their hearing in court, the form and wording of all certificates issued should be uniform throughout the country, and the courts should be required to make returns to the secretary of state at stated periods of all naturalizations conferred.

Not only are the laws relating to naturalization now defective, but those relating to citizenship of the United States ought also to be made the subject of scientific inquiry with a view to probable further legislation. The power of the government to protect the integrity of the elections of its own officials is inherent and has been recognized and affirmed by repeated declarations of the supreme court. There is no enemy of free government more dangerous and none so insidious as the corruption of the electorate. I recommend the enactment of a law directed against bribery and corruption in federal elections.

Delays In Criminal Prosecutions.

No subject is better worthy the attention of the congress than that portion of the report of the attorney general dealing with the long delays and the great obstruction to justice experienced in the cases of Beavers, Green and Gaynor and Benson. Were these isolated and special cases I should not call your attention to them, but the difficulties encountered as regards these men who have been indicted for criminal practices are not exceptional. They are precisely similar in kind to what occurs again and again in the case of criminals who have sufficient means to enable them to take advantage of a system of procedure which has grown up in the federal courts and which amounts in effect to making the law easy of enforcement against the man who has no money and difficult of enforcement, even to the point of sometimes securing immunity, as regards the man who has money. At present the interests of the innocent man are amply safeguarded, but the interests of the government—that is, the interests of honest administration; that is, the interests of the people—are not recognized as they should be.

[The president discusses the progress of the territories of Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico, with recommendations for changes in the present system of government of the first named. He desires to see a delegate from Alaska in congress.]

Foreign Policy.

The steady aim of this nation, as of all enlightened nations, should be to strive to bring ever nearer the day when there shall prevail throughout the world the peace of justice, but there are kinds of peace which are highly undesirable, which are in the long run as destructive as any war. The goal to set before us as a nation, the goal which should be set before all mankind, is the attainment of the peace of justice, of the peace which comes when each nation is not merely safeguarded in its own rights, but scrupulously recognizes and performs its duty toward others. Generally peace tells for righteousness, but if there is conflict between the two then our fealty is due first to the cause of righteousness. Unrighteous wars are common and unrighteous peace is rare, but both should be shunned. The right of freedom and the responsibility for the exercise of that right cannot be divorced. One of our great poets has well and finely said that freedom is not a gift that tarries long in the hands of cowards. Neither does it tarry long in the hands of those too slothful, too dishonest or too unintelligent to exercise it. The eternal vigilance which is the price of liberty must be exercised sometimes to guard against outside foes, although, of course, far more often to guard against our own selfish or thoughtless shortcomings.

It is our duty to remember that a nation has no more right to do injustice to another nation, strong or weak, than an individual has to do injustice to another individual; that the same moral law applies in one case as in the other. But we must also remember that it is as much the duty of the nation to guard its own rights and its own interests as it is the duty of the individual so to do. Until some method is devised by which there shall be a degree of international control over offending nations it would be a wicked thing for the most civilized powers, for those with most sense of international obligations and with keenest and most generous appreciation of the difference between right and wrong, to disarm. If the great civilized nations of the present day should completely disarm, the result would mean an immediate recrudescence of barbarism in one form or another. Under any circumstances a sufficient armament would have to be kept up to serve the purposes of international police, and until international cohesion and the sense of international duties and rights are far more advanced than at present a nation desirous both of securing respect for itself and of doing good to others must have a force adequate for the work which it feels is allotted to it as its part of the general world duty. Therefore it follows that a self respecting, just and farseeing nation should on the one hand endeavor by every means to aid in the development of the various movements which tend to provide substitutes for war, which tend to render nations in their actions toward one another and indeed toward their own peoples more responsive to the general sentiment of humane and civilized mankind, and, on the other hand, that it should keep prepared, while scrupulously avoiding wrongdoing itself, to repel any wrong and in exceptional cases to take action which in a more advanced stage of international relations would come under the head of the exercise of the international police.

Arbitration Treaties.

We are in every way endeavoring to help on, with cordial good will, every movement which will tend to bring us into more friendly relations with the rest of mankind. In pursuance of this policy I shall shortly lay before the senate treaties of arbitration with all powers which are willing to enter into these treaties with us. It is not possible at this period of the world's development to agree to arbitrate all matters, but there are many matters of possible difference between us and other nations which can be thus arbitrated. Furthermore, at the request of the interparliamentary union, an eminent body composed of practical statesmen from all countries, I have asked the powers to join with this government in a second Hague conference, at which it is hoped that the work already so happily begun at The Hague may be carried some steps further toward completion. This carries out the desire expressed by the first Hague conference itself.

Policy Toward Other Nations of Western Hemisphere.

It is not true that the United States feels any land hunger or entertains any projects as regards the other nations of the western hemisphere save such as are for their welfare. All that this country desires is to see the neighboring countries stable, orderly and prosperous. Any country whose people conduct themselves well can count upon our hearty friendship. If a nation shows that it knows how to act with reasonable efficiency and decency in social and political matters, if it keeps order and pays its obligations, it need fear no interference from the United States. Chronic wrongdoing or an impotence which results in a general loosening of the ties of civilized society may in America, as elsewhere, ultimately require intervention by some civilized nation, and in the western hemisphere the adherence of the United States to the Monroe doctrine may force the United States, however reluctantly, in flagrant cases of such wrongdoing or impotence, to the exercise of an international police power.

Rights of American Citizens Abroad.

It is necessary for us firmly to insist upon the rights of our own citizens abroad without regard to their creed or race; without regard to whether they were born here or born abroad. It has proved very difficult to secure from Russia the right for our Jewish fellow citizen to receive passports and travel through Russian territory. It is a wrong against which we are entitled to protest to refuse him his passport without regard to his conduct and character, merely on racial and religious grounds.

The Navy.

The strong arm of the government in enforcing respect for its just rights in international matters is the navy of the United States. I most earnestly recommend that there be no halt in the work of upbuilding the American navy. We have undertaken to build the Isthmian canal. We have undertaken to secure for ourselves our just share in the trade of the orient. We have undertaken to protect our citizens from improper treatment in foreign lands. We continue steadily to insist on the application of the Monroe doctrine to the western hemisphere. Unless our attitude in these and all similar matters is to be a mere boastful sham we cannot afford to abandon our naval programme. Our voice is now potent for peace and is so potent because we are not afraid of war. But our protestations upon behalf of peace would neither receive nor deserve the slightest attention if we were impotent to make them good.

The Army.

Within the last three years the United States has set an example in disarmament where disarmament was proper. By law our army is fixed at a maximum of 100,000 and a minimum of 60,000 men. When there was insurrection in the Philippines we kept the army at the maximum. Peace came in the Philippines, and now our army has been reduced to the minimum at which it is possible to keep it with due regard to its efficiency. We should be able, in the event of some sudden emergency, to put into the field one first class army corps, which should be, as a whole, at least the equal of any body of troops of like number belonging to any other nation.

Great progress has been made in protecting our coasts by adequate fortifications with sufficient guns. We should, however, pay much more heed than at present to the development of an extensive system of floating mines for use in all our more important harbors. These mines have been proved to be a most formidable safeguard against hostile fleets.

The Philippines.

In the Philippine Islands there has been during the past year a continuation of the steady progress which has obtained ever since our troops definitely got the upper hand of the insurgents. The Philippine people, or, to speak more accurately, the many tribes and even races sundered from one another more or less sharply who go to make up the people of the Philippine Islands, contain many elements of good, and some elements which we have a right to hope stand for progress. At present they are utterly incapable of existing in independence or all or of building up a civilization of their own. I firmly believe that we can help them to rise higher and higher in the scale of civilization and of capacity for self government, and I most earnestly hope that in the end they will be able to stand, if not entirely alone, yet in some such relation to the United States as Cuba now stands. This end is not yet in sight, and it may be indefinitely postponed if our people are foolish enough to turn the attention of the Filipinos away from the problems of achieving moral and material prosperity, of working for a stable, orderly and just government, and toward foolish and dangerous intrigues for a complete independence for which they are as yet totally unfit.

On the other hand, our people must keep steadily before their minds the fact that the justification for our stay in the Philippines must ultimately rest chiefly upon the good we are able to do in the islands. I do not overlook the fact that in the development of our interests in the Pacific ocean and along its coasts the Philippines have played and will play an important part and that our interests have been served in more than one way by the possession of the islands. But our chief reason for continuing to hold them must be that we ought in good faith to try to do our share of the world's work, and this particular piece of work has been imposed upon us by the results of the war with Spain. We are endeavoring to develop the natives themselves so that they shall take an ever increasing share in their own government, and, as far as is prudent, we are already admitting their representatives to a governmental equality with our own. There are commissioners, judges and governors in the islands who are Filipinos and who have exactly the same share in the government of the islands as have their colleagues who are Americans, while in the lower ranks, of course, the great majority of the public servants are Filipinos. Within two years we shall be trying the experiment of an elective lower house in the Philippine legislature. If the Filipinos act with wisdom and self restraint, if they show that they are capable of electing a legislature which in its turn is capable of taking a sane and efficient part in the actual work of government, they can rest assured that a full and increasing measure of recognition will be given them.

Every measure taken concerning the islands should be taken primarily with a view to their advantage. We should certainly give them lower tariff rates on their exports to the United States. If this is not done it will be a wrong to extend our shipping laws to them. I earnestly hope for the immediate enactment into law of the legislation now pending to encourage American capital to seek investment in the islands in railroads, in factories, in plantations and in lumbering and mining.

Sillabil

By ROBERT C. V. MEYERS

Copyright, 1904, by Robert C. V. Meyers

THE good lame man told him how it would be.

In the ward Sillabil heard the good lame man called a "regular." Not that he knew what the term signified, but from the ease of deportment of this bearer of it he took it to be synonymous with "boss," which he knew to mean somebody who was not to be displeased, for his mother had worked for a "boss."

"Hi!" says the good lame man. "When you're asleep tonight they're coming to the ward to get the Captain. Around his neck they'll put a string with a stone on it, and then they'll chuck him in the water—drown him, you know, drown him. I'm your only friend, I am, and I tell you if you want to save your dog you'd better get away. You'd better go now. And when you go out just take this silver piece which couldn't be yours, though it may be like the one you lost, and go round the corner to the store where there are bottles and flies in the window and tell 'em one legged Tom sent you for his medicine. Then you tie the bottle to this string which I throw over the wall, and I'll haul in the medicine that cures my cough. Listen to my cough!" And a series of sepulchral agonized sounds startled the air. "I'll give you a boost over the wall and the Captain too. Remember, they'll drown the Captain tonight!"

Drown the Captain! Sillabil felt queer. He was not alarmed, for to be alarmed you ought to have a thought, and Sillabil hardly ever thought, his latest thought having been a week ago when he had seen his mother in a long box which the women of the house told him was for her to sleep in and that if he cried he might wake her. Of course he wouldn't wake her, he said, for she must be tired or she wouldn't have fallen asleep over her sewing machine, though the thought of a week ago took the form of a question: "Why did his mother go to sleep in the long box?" Then the women of the house sent him out for a romp with the Captain. When he got back his mother was no longer there, and a man brought him to his present place of abode.

It was the good lame man who liked to kick him in order to see him jump who told him that his mother was sleeping under the daisies.

Sillabil would not ask where the daisies were, for that would be like saying that his mother had neglected to tell him, and his mother had never neglected him.

"You've got a nice name, too, Sillabil," said the good lame man. "It's only a part of a big word, and you're only a part of yourself. Something up here, eh?" And he tapped himself on the forehead. Sillabil was used to people tapping their foreheads when they spoke about him, and it looked so wise that he had got into the habit of doing it himself when he spoke of other people.

"You understand," persisted the good lame man, "they're going to drown the Captain. He can hardly see, can he?"

"Yes, he can," Sillabil cried, "only his eyes got hurt that time the house was afire and he wouldn't leave me till I was awake, and so he got burnt."

"Hurry, Sillabil," urged the good lame man, "for it's nearly dark, and they'll soon drown the Captain."

It was the work of a moment—up a tree, on to a wall, a drop outside, the captain scrambling after him, limping a little where he had fallen.

In a vast haste Sillabil found the shop around the corner.

"Medicine for one legged Tom," he said, placing on the counter the silver coin that looked so much like the one he had lost. And then, remembering a wise act, he tapped his forehead and nodded.

Of course they understood him, and he took a small bottle and tied it to the dangling string hanging over the wall across which he and the captain had come. The bottle disappeared.

"Here comes the man after the Captain!" a voice said, and Sillabil and the Captain struck out. How they did run! There was a new freedom about it; no one to frown at you, as had been the case for a week, no one to push and jostle you. But where to go, where to find the daisies! The good lame man had said that daisies grew in country ways. Sillabil had never seen country ways, a room high up in a house constituting his world. With the Captain it was different. While the Captain never said anything about it, yet he had once looked after sheep.

It was quite dark now, and the houses were not so close together. Then the Captain suddenly let it be known that supper would not be undersirable. Sillabil looked about him. Here was a brightly lighted house. People were going in and coming out. Sillabil went in too. There was a table spread with all sorts of good things. A pleasant being stood beside it smiling till the gold filling in one of his teeth reminded Sillabil of the star outside.

"Help yourselves, gentlemen," said the pleasant being.

Of course Sillabil helped himself, and his host was so polite as to feed the Captain with delicate morsels.

"A delegate, of course?" he whispered to Sillabil. "You seem to be cooler headed than most of the others. I hope your ward is going all right."

Sillabil had had sufficient experience with his wise manner to see that it usually succeeded, so he now tapped himself on the forehead. At that his host laughed and slipped a roll of bills in his hand.

"For your ward or yourself," he said.

Sillabil wondered, and it made him suspicious, so he moved toward the door. Here a gentleman accosted him.

"What did he give you for the ward?" this gentleman asked. Of course Sillabil knew what a ward was, for the good lame man had told him that they were coming to the ward to get the Captain and drown him. So he showed the gentleman the roll of bills and tapped himself on the forehead.

"Of course he is," the gentleman said, "for he'll never get in."

Sillabil edged his way out into the night. And there was the star. He followed the glinting light. All at once it disappeared. He stood there lost. He was in the dark, no houses near, only trees. He had never before been alone in the dark. His mother had taken care of that.

"Captain!"

The Captain rubbed up against him. Sillabil peered about him. Then he saw the star and made for it. The Captain growled. This had ever been a note of warning, so Sillabil went more carefully. Then he discovered that what he had taken for a star was only a small light down upon the ground.

"Who is there?" a sharp voice cried. It was a woman's voice.

The light was a feeble fire made of a few sticks. A woman was warming her hands over it.

"I am looking for my mother," Sillabil said. "She is where the daisies are."

The woman looked at him. Then she laughed shrilly.

"Poor fool!" she said. "There is only one mother in the black world. Don't you know it is raining and cold? Come nearer and warm yourself. Here is your mother"—and she tapped the ground—"Mother Earth."

"No!" laughed Sillabil.

"Then here," said the woman and indicated some tall walls, part of which were tumbling down. "This is Mother Church. Unfortunately she is crumbling away. She was not fine enough for her children, so they deserted her for a new palace. Come in. No one will drive us out of the church now. This is a place where people used to pray for what never came to pass. Did you ever pray?"

For answer Sillabil got down on his knees.

"Lord," he said, as his mother had taught him, "protect us poor, clouded wanderers in the night and lead us to thee at last, where the rough places shall be made smooth!"

The woman rubbed her hands together over the flaming wood.

"You are tired," she said. "You are worn out."

She took off her shawl and spread it upon the ground.

"I don't need it," she said. "Try to sleep."

The light of the fire showed Sillabil a figure carved in the wall. It was the figure of a man on a cross. On the cross, on the man's outstretched arms, on his thorn crowned head, a multitude of sparrows were huddled.

"He was the friend of the sparrows," the woman said. "He was despised and rejected. He wrote with his finger in the dust. 'Let him that is without sin cast the first stone,' he said. He was poor and homeless, as poor and homeless as you and I."

"Poor!" cried Sillabil. "I am not poor." He opened his hand and disclosed the roll of notes that had been given him in the house of feasting.

With an exclamation the woman grasped the money from him.

Sillabil laughed and tapped himself on the head. Then, to show the woman that he always remembered what was said to him, he repeated: "He was despised and rejected. He wrote with his finger in the dust. 'Let him that is without sin cast the first stone,' he said." The woman threw the money from her. "And under his deserted cross I have found the only refuge offered me this night," she said. "No, no, doggie," for the Captain was showing his teeth, "we three poor people should not quarrel. You two rest. I will watch, I and the sparrows. And—my mother!"

She took Sillabil's hand in hers just as his mother used to do when he was restless, and he fell asleep.

When he awoke the sun was shining, the woman was gone, the fire was out, the sparrows were elsewhere.

But the woman had left him the shawl in which he had slept, and on the corner of it was pinned the money that had been given him for his ward.

He rose and stretched himself, and the Captain tugged at him to be gone.

Such a bright morning! He looked up to the rosy sky. "Captain!"

But the Captain had darted off to an open plain where a number of silly sheep were eluding their caretaker and escaping by several ways. The Captain rounded on them. Closer and closer he got the trembling creatures to one another, his old instinct waking in him, and they were massed together.

The keeper of the flock hailed Sillabil.

"That's a fine sheep dog, brother," he said. "What will you take for him?"

"Something for him to eat. He is hungry," answered Sillabil.

The man looked at him, then, opening a bundle slung on his arm, fed the Captain from its contents.

"I never saw such a flock," went on the man. "But now, thanks to your dog, they're among the daisies, and clover's in sight."

"Among the daisies!" Sillabil looked and saw a white field of flowers whose hearts were of gold. And the good lame man had said his mother slept among the daisies! The fallacy of it appealed to him.

Then something snapped in his head. A sudden terror possessed him. He had often seen such long boxes as that in which his mother had lain, and they had been borne along the streets in black wagons. He had sometimes followed after them and had seen them enter a place where there were trees and flowers and white upright marbles. His mother had once explained to him that this was the place where tired folks rested who had seldom rested before, though people who did not know called them dead.

"My mother is dead!"

Away, away he ran across fields, along roads, flying from what he knew not. All at once he found himself obstructed by a wall, and a plaintive wail smote his ear. The Captain had come with him. The Captain was almost exhausted. Sillabil stopped and held the shaggy head up to him.

"Mother is dead, Captain!"

He got down in the dust and held the dog to his heart.

"Mother is dead, Captain!"

The dog licked his face and looked into his eyes.

He got to his feet, something clearing away that had seemed to hide a good deal.

Work! His mother had worked! He was strong; he could work. He must work! The city was the place where everybody worked. He could find work there. He went past all the places he had seen yesterday—the ruined church, the house of feasting, the church where there had been a wedding—and he was in the city again, nearer and nearer coming to him a clearing up of something that had been a dim puzzle ever since he had had the fever.

Hour after hour they walked the streets, knowing that they must wait for morning. The city became hushed and quiet. Few wayfarers passed them.

"Where shall we go?"

The Captain gave a bark full of friendly advice.

Then Sillabil remembered the place where they had taken him after his mother had died. He came upon it at midnight. He might find work there. He no longer feared that the Captain would be taken from him. A new feeling of assurance and responsibility had come to him. He stood and looked up at the huge building where he might yet find work and earn money enough to support himself and the Captain. Money! There was that money lying far away pinned to the shawl in the dismantled church where the woman had made a fire.

"Fire!"

Did he hear the word? Look! There was a bright red coming from a tall window in the building.

"Fire, fire!" He heard it now. So did the Captain, for his back bristled.

"Captain, that is our ward!"

The good lame man was in there, the man who had stolen from him, who had deceived him, and the man was there who had wanted to drown the Captain!

There was a crowd around the building waiting for the engines.

"One legged Tom did it; he was smoking his pipe, against the rules."

Sillabil and the Captain darted into the hall, black with smoke that bit their eyes, bright with tongues of flame that cruelly licked their flesh.

Sillabil knew his old ward. He made for it. But the fire had not been discovered till the stairs were almost destroyed and only a narrow ledge remained. Up this ledge sped Sillabil.

"Captain!"

The Captain was at his heels, and so into the smoke and flame of the ward. The good lame man was at the window, four stories above the ground, ready to jump out. How it was done will never be told, but Sillabil and the Captain forced the lame man through the red roar and the blackness out to the narrow ledge of stairs and down into the outer air, where the engines were now sending out huge streams of water and ladders were going up to rescue the inmates prisoned in their rooms.

Sillabil found himself prone upon the ground, the Captain with a ruefully scorched coat lying across him, his black muzzle close to his master's cheek.

"Why," said a voice, "it is William Sill!"

"Sillabil!" said a second voice, that of lame Tom, the good lame man. "He saved me. Poor chap!"

Poor! No, indeed. Lying there Sillabil was rich. Past the darkness, the pain,

INTO THE SMOKE AND FLAME.

he saw far up in the blue of the sky a field of waving daisies which might have been the many stars swimming in his tired eyes. And in that field was a man with crowds of sparrows fluttering round him, which might have been the cinders from the burning building. And the woman who had spread her shawl on the ground in the ruined church knelt at the man's feet. And, more than all, there was Sillabil's mother smiling as she leaned forward beckoning him to her.

"And the Captain, too," said Sillabil—"the Captain too!"

The man who cared for the sparrows held out a welcoming hand, and the Captain, maybe understanding—who can say?—laid his head down on Sillabil's breast in comfort and security.

"Wake!" said a voice that sounded a good way off to Sillabil, a voice like the good lame man's. "Wake!"

But nearer voices told him that the old numbness left by the fever was gone forever.

Sillabil remembered his old wise manner and managed to get his hand to his forehead, for was he not already awake?

"The Captain too! The Captain! Cap"—They covered him and the Captain with a sheet.

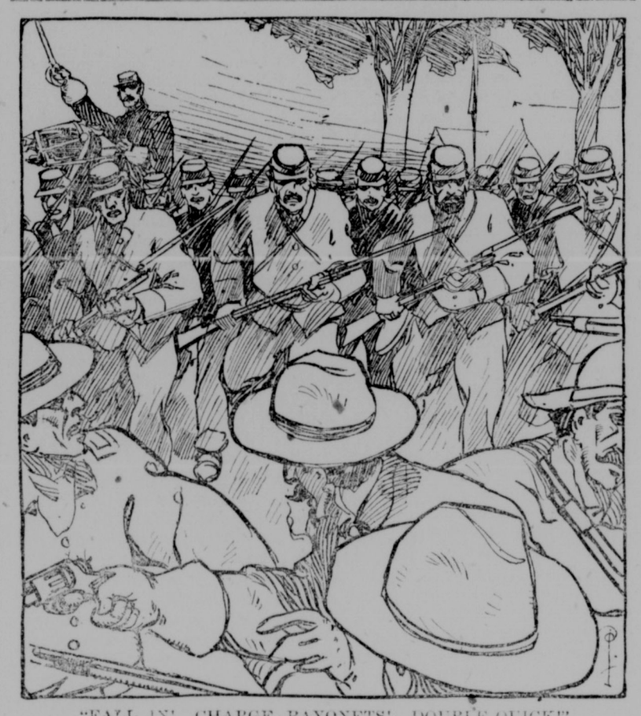
The Hot Fight at Franklin

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

November 30, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

TWO features of the battle fought at Franklin, Tenn., Nov. 30, 1864, placed it among the brilliant and bloody contests of the time—namely, the fiery charge of General Patrick Cleburne's Confederate division and the fierce countercharge of General Emerson Opdycke's Federal brigade—and there was something unusual on foot acting as spurs to martial valor. The Confederate General J. B. Hood had entered upon the march from Columbia toward Nashville in hopes of surprising the defenders of middle Tennessee, and General J. M. Schofield, with an inferior force of Federals placed across the Confederate front, had impeded the march. Only the day before Hood had almost surrounded Schofield at Spring Hill, but owing, as he asserted, to the slowness of his subordinate generals in attacking the enemy had slipped out of the trap in the night and by a forced march reached Franklin, on the south bank of the Harpeth river.



"FALL IN! CHARGE BAYONETS! DOUBLE QUICK!"

At Franklin Schofield halted his columns on the southern border of the town, where a line of slight intrenchments was hastily constructed, and the weary soldiers lay down on their arms to enjoy a brief rest while the long army trains were crossing to a safer position north of the stream. The troops of Schofield's Twenty-third corps, commanded by General J. D. Cox, occupied the main line of works, which extended across the Columbia and Nashville pike, along which Hood was marching in active pursuit.

The extremities of the works rested on the river bank above and below the town, and the only break in the line was at the point where the pike ran through. There a gap had been left in order to accommodate the trains and artillery as well as the brigades bringing up the rear. These latter, three in number, belonged to General D. M. Stanley's Twenty-fourth corps and constituted Wagner's division. Stanley crossed to the north bank of the Harpeth with Wood's division of his corps, leaving Wagner to handle the rear guard. Of the three brigades in Wagner's division two, Conrad's and Lane's, were halted by General Cox's order on a knoll half a mile in front of the general line and covering the gap in the works at the pike. Wagner's Third brigade, led by General Emerson Opdycke, filed through the gap into the works at Franklin, and the men rested in reserve behind Cox's own division, close to the pike.

When the Confederate lines were forming for the attack Cleburne's division held the right and rested on the pike confronted by the Federal works and troops already described. Hood stated to his subordinates that he desired that the enemy be driven into the Harpeth river at all hazards, and, anticipating hot work, Cleburne asked permission to form his division into three lines of one brigade each. Hood granted the request, although General Stewart's corps of his army had not come up and his line was shorter than he desired.

Cleburne's division advanced along the Columbia pike, which bisected the Union line near the center, the most hazardous point to attack, the works being the heaviest and the best manned with troops and cannon. There were thirty-eight Union guns in the works and in reserve in or near the pike in the center. The first opposition to Cleburne's assault was made by the brigades of Lane and Conrad of Wagner's division. These troops had strengthened their position on the knoll by constructing slight breastworks. The only signal to warn them of the attack was the sudden bursting into view of a long line of Confederates moving rapidly in perfect order, with banners waving and bayonets glistening in the bright rays of the setting sun.

With a yell, Cleburne's men rushed into the works, and when the defenders, after a brave but useless resistance, broke for the rear they followed at their heels, shooting down and capturing hundreds and crying out to one another, "Go into the works and take them!" More like wild men than soldiers, Cleburne's excited followers dashed over the half mile that lay between the captured outer line and the stronghold on the pike. The astonished defenders of the second line dared not fire upon the assailants for fear of hitting comrades who were either leading Cleburne's men or mingling with them in their mad race. Once at the rear works the onset of Cleburne's men was so impetuous that the soldiers on the parapet were literally run over, and in a few minutes, or before the reserves in the third line comprehended the crisis, Cleburne's banners waved over them, his men occupied a breach the width of a regiment and, intoxicated with triumph, were dashing ahead along the pike to pounce upon the reserves.

Meanwhile Opdycke's soldiers, unmindful of the affairs at the extreme front, had been taking the breathing spell richly earned by serving as rear guard on the march that day.

Opdycke had no orders except to rest his troops. The soldiers were getting ready their suppers or munching raw rations when the breastworks they had just marched past were carried by a lightning rush of the Confederates, who then were at their heels. The men instinctively threw down their handfuls of bread and pork and took up their weapons.

The moment the men in gray were seen swarming and shooting on the line where they had no business to be Opdycke's commands rang out as calmly and clear cut as though he had rehearsed them, though surely no such combination of orders had ever been called for theretofore. "First brigade, fall in! Charge bayonets! Double quick!" were the words. Then for an hour in that narrow space raged the hottest open field and breastworks struggle of the war.

The Confederates on the right and left of Cleburne's column, catching up the advantage gained by his thundering blows, joined in the assault to drive the wedge home. Stewart's belated corps, having come up after Cleburne formed his line, found the space too narrow between the pike and river to accommodate its brigades, and these surged to the left, following in Cleburne's footsteps and fighting over the same ground. Federal officers in the works along the pike counted thirteen separate and distinct Confederate assaults on their front. Five Confederate generals, including Cleburne, were killed and eight severely wounded in close contact with the Union works.

But not generals alone bore off the honors for valor on the field of Franklin. Soldiers vied with their leaders in reckless exposure of their lives. Often rival flags floated side by side on the same parapet, and their bearers or defenders fought around them with clubbed rifles and with bayonets used as rapiers. The Seventy-second Illinois regiment of Wagner's division was nearly wiped out, every field officer, its color guard, consisting of a sergeant and eight corporals, and 150 men being shot down. The Forty-fourth Missouri (Federal), lying next to the gap where the first break occurred, changed front under fire and maintained its ground, with a loss of thirty-four killed and thirty-seven wounded. The carnage on the Confederate side was still more terrible. Schofield held his ground and at night crossed the river unmolested by Hood's shattered army. GEORGE L. KILMER.

ONE STANDARD—CHARACTER.

The bad man white or black, should have no voice in government. The Democratic party has been hitting at the negro because more negroes vote with the Republicans than with Democrats. Partisans of the Democratic faith saw in this condition a good chance to stir up prejudice against this race and the cry was raised for a more intelligent electorate because it was said that so many negroes were illiterate and they could not therefore, participate in elections intelligently. Whatever may be the situation in the South, in Maryland the effort to get rid of the negro when the white man outnumbers him four to one has att acted attention to the subject because no one pretends that negro domination can be thought of with the whites so largely in the majority, and thus public attention is directed to the merits of the case. Why exclude the ignorant negro and not exclude the ignorant white man? This question rises up and will not down. Some men who are unable to read and write know intuitively good men from bad men and when they go to the polls they often put to shame men of higher intellectual attainments. The scheme to fasten upon Maryland a Constitutional Amendment designed to disfranchise one set of men on account of their color or nationality is more than unjust, it is a cold-blooded attempt to fasten the grip of the Democratic machine on the people of Maryland tighter than ever, and by denying to men their dearest rights. If there is to be any change let's have one standard of fitness and let that be good character. No matter how poor or ignorant or humble a man may be, if he behaves himself, is industrious and is a useful member of the community, he ought to have a voice in government. On the other hand if a man is vicious, lazy, and shiftless, giving evidence by his manner of living that he is a bad man and a burden upon society he should be excluded from voting no matter if he be the most intelligent man in the community. A sturdy, patriotic people like the citizens of Maryland want no Constitutional Amendment that is not the product of the best thought of our best people. They spurn the miserable scheming of a few selfish and designing politicians who would barter away men's liberties to secure a further lease of power for themselves.

NO EXTRA SESSION.

Thanksgiving is well past but the people of this State are grateful that there will be no session of the Maryland Legislature this winter. At least, there will be no session unless the Governor calls the Legislature together to repeal the bill passed at the last session proposing a constitutsonal amendment, and to pass a new amendment bill which will meet with the Governor's approval. This plan has been suggested but the extra session experience of former Governor Smith will likely deter Governor Warfield from a like fate.

It is high time the people of Maryland sent representatives to Annapolis competent to enact such laws as the public demands within the session prescribed by the constitution. The Republicans controlled the Legislature of Maryland for a single administration in the past 30 years and yet the public business was performed decently, orderly and effectually. There was no conniving for partisan advyantage, and no plea of incompetency, such as has characterized every session of the General Assembly since 1898.

The extra session of 1901 was convened for the sole purpose of enacting a partisan election law and it cost the State $100,000. The extra session of 1902 was made necessary because some one forgot to pass the usual bill levying the State tax and it cost $10,000. Now it is proposed to convene the Legislature again to help the Democratic party out of the hole into which it has fallen through insisting upon a grossly unfair qualification of voters.

How long will the people allow the Legisiature to be used solely for political advantage?

FOUR TIPICAL AMERICANS

More humanly significant and more far-reaching even than the political issues involved are some facts which developed in the election just closed concerning the personalities of some of the men elected to high places in the gift of the people. These facts are worth careful thought, says the Baltimore American, for they throw a bright light on the feeling and the tendencies of the American people.

Theodore Roosevelt is a man of action, of broad and human sympathies, of initiative, disposed to adopt the method of cutting gordian knots, of taking the straightest possible line between two points, and of breaking through the barbed wire of restraining red tape when quick practical action seems necessary.

Governor elect Folk of Missouri, the only candidate who survived the defeat of his party and whose survival was in the nature of a triumph, was brought into prominence by his nearly single handed fight, when state's attorney against the political boodlers who were using their official position to rob the people. With an entire subordination of personal feelings and of personal obligations to the sanctity of his oath of office, he put aside every other consideration did his duty fearlessly and ably, and struck a heavy blow at official corruption in his state by not only turning the rascals out, but also sending them to prison.

Governor elect Douglass of Massachusetts, also won his own election over a strong Republican tide, and will go into office literally as the popular choice. He is a self-made man, who built up a big business by sheer dint of industry and energy, and won good will generally by remembering in his prosperity the days of his own adversity and treating others as he would then have wished to be treated himself.

Governor elect Johnson of Minnesota, who also won a remarkable victory, had his family history dug up in the course of the campaign, and the facts circulated widely to prejudice him that his father had been in the poorhouse, and that his mother had taken in washing. The fact that when a mere boy he struggled against such odds, and took the support from the toiling mother as soon as he was able, to awake a perfect torrent of enthusiasm for him, and turned the miserable weapons of attack upon him against the enemies using them.

These men won because they were typical Americans. They were all elected upon their personalities, without reference to the issues of the campaign, to party feeling or to political divisions. Their triumphs point to the significant fact that what appeals, above all other things, to the American mind is character, and that the man displaying is the man to win the honest heartfelt support of the people, be he of the lowest origin, or be he sprung from the ranks of wealth and family. It makes no difference to the people what a man's family has been: what he is himself is the only thing material which appeals to the American people and their sense of fairness is as eager to appreciate genuine manliness and character whenever display as it is quick to resent the fact of early poverty and obscurity bravely overcome being held up as a disgrace and handicap in a land boasting equal opportunity to all. The man of character is the man of the people, and the man of his day. That is one of the most impressive lessons of the campaign recently ended.

SUFFRAGE IN MNRYLAND.

"Apparently the Maryland election law and the Maryland official ballot are not sufficiently complicated to hold the state in Democratic ranks," says the Commercial Tribune of Cincinnati, "and the legislature is to consider the following clause, credit for the drafting of which is given to Senator Gorman:

"A person able to read any section of the constitution of this state submitted to him by the officers of registration and to give a reasonable explanation of the same, or, if unable from physical disability to read such section, able to understand and give a reasonable explanation thereof when read to him by the registration officers.

"That beats the grandfather clause in a walk! It also furnishes the judiciary of Maryland with a body of election officials to which it can turn with confidence when questions involving the provisions of the constitution of the state are involved. It will be necessary, of course, for the election official to be not only able himself to read, but to pass upon the question whether or not the prospective elector has given the correct interpretation to the constitution of the state, and it will be incumbent on him to render his opinion then and there.

"It may not be wholly just to Senator Gorman to intimate that his intention is in the first place, to disfranchise electors otherwise eligible, but who can not read; or who if they can read, have not given the constitution of the state the attention the venerable and historic instrument deserves. Patriotic and educational impulses may have moved his political bosom in drawing the provision which has been the cause of so much criticism.

"It may have been his intention to compel the Marylander to dip deeply into lore of the constitution, to study its provisions, to examine its clauses and to drink in constitutional ideas with his morning meal. In fine, to produce a generation of Marvland constitutionalists among whom a fit successor to Mr. Watterson may be found when declining years warn him of failing strength and further inability to carry on his shoulders the entire burden of the Federal organic law.

"These suggestions are made because of genuine charity, and they are in the nature of a motion for suspension of judgment. Democrats and Democratic states are scarce, it is true, but not for that reason alone ought Senator Gorman to be given an extra coat of black. Of course, the registration officers of Maryland will be taken from the ranks of the highest and the best of the state—and Senator Gorman and his party are in desperate straits."

EVERY little while something happens that advances the newspapers further along toward that time when they will receive the unanimous recognition of advertisers as the best and most satisfactory method of trade publicity. The greatest step in that direction, is the decision of the great traveling shows to hereafter do almost all their advertising in the columns of the press. Barnum & Bailey, which means all the circuses in the trust, and Ringling Bros., the great independents, have come to an understanding about routes and about advertising. That part of the agreement will interest the advertising public more. It is to the effect that the great bulk of advertising will be done in the newspapers. Mr. Tody Hamilton, Barnum & Bailey's famous press representative, says:

"The day of the flaring circus posters is about over in the circus business. In one way this is to be lamented, because people, especially in the West, have come to look upon the big sheets as a sort of curtain raisers, a free show. But its real value as an advertising medium is doubtful. Hereafter the newspapers will get more and the dead walls less. This also means that we will not have to give out anywhere near as many free tickets as we have had to in the past."

When the great showmen are willing to give up the flaring circus poster, which is almost as much a part of their business, as the three rings and the baby elephant, for newspapers as advertising medium, it is about time that the merchant, who still clings to cheap priced contracts in theatre programs, street cars, bill boards and worthless street heralds, "get wise."—Parkersburg News.

GRANTSVILLE.

Dr. G. C. Keller returned home last Friday from Accident where he had been practicing dentistry for the past three weeks.

Last Thursday Mr. J. S. Broadwater, his two sons, Melvin and Olin, and daughter, Ethel, and his niece, Nellie Broadwater, returned home from the St. Louis Exposition. They saw many things of interest and had a general good time.

Miss Mary Yoder, of this vicinity, and Mr. Daniel Schrock, of Gortner, Md., were married at the home of Mr. M. D. Yoder, father of the bride.

The following persons of Salisbury, Pa., spent last Sunday at the home of S. O. Bender and family: Mrs. Adam Fogle and Mrs William Cochran, Messrs. Ray and Geo. Fogle and William Cochran.

Last Monday Miss Carrie and D. W. Dorsey walked through the snow storm from their home in New Germany and return. The distance they walked was fourteen miles.

Mr. F. W. Blocher, of Lancaster, Pa., who has been visiting friends at Grantsville the past few days left for Morgantown, W. Va., where he will remain three weeks and then return to Lancaster. Mr. Blocher is an employee of the Southern Pipe Line Co.

The Garrett Lumber Co., formerly of Friendsville, moved their headquarters to Jennings.

The First National Bank of Grantsville carries a heavier line of deposits at present than any previous time in the history of the bank. This is a good sign of the times and it also speaks well for the managers.

Last Wednesday morning J. J. Bender's store building caught fire by a spark from the chimney. The fire was soon extinguished, as it was discovered when it had burnt a hole only about two feet square through the roof.

On Friday evening while on his way home from the store, Mr. S. O. Bender met with a rather pecular accident. The sidewalk being very slippery and it being very dark also, he, in company with two other gentlemen, walked out in the street. He was suddenly knocked down by the horse of Mr. Wm. Gnagy, who was riding at a lively speed. Mr. Bender was thrown twenty feet from where he had collided with the animal. He was unconscious for a short time. Fortunately he did not receive any serious injury. Neither of the gentlemen heard the horse coming toward them.

The merchants of our town deserve congratulations for the excellent Christmas display they are exhibiting this year.

J. J. Bender & Hershberger have a large and fine variety of Christmas candies, toys, etc. They also have a large collection of handsome picture frames which they will give away.

The windows of Mr. Noah Broadwater's store sparkle with a nice line of Christmas goods.

A choice collection of Christmas goods may be seen on Santa Claus' counter of Mr. Urban Blocher's store.

Surely the young men of Grantsville and vicinity can buy no better candy and no prettier present for their sweethearts anywhere else than right in Grantsville.

On Friday evening, Dec. 9, at 7:30 the Ciceronian Literary Society will render the following public program: Song, "Sweet Hour of Prayer," male octette. Reading, "Mother," Mr. Alvin Miller. Dialoge, "The Wonderful Egg," Messrs. John Younkin and Olin Broadwater. Duet, "Where is My Wandering Boy," Misses Edna Welch and Charlotte Stanton. Recitation, "The Ballad of the Oyster Man," Miss Lizzie Sausman. Debate, Resolved, "That the fear of punishment has a greater influence on humanity than the hope of a future reward," affimative, Messrs. Noah Miller and Ralph Miller; negative, Messrs. Kerlim and Reichald. Song, "Little Birdie," by twenty pupils. Reading, "The Blind Man," Miss Nannie Yutzy. Recitation, "Just before Christmas, William Keller. Song, "Call John," male octette.

To The Bright Girls Of the Country.

The expenses for one year at a leading Southern college will be paid for a bright, worthy girl of Garrett county Md., who will secure for me one hundred and fifteen subscribers to my book, "LEE AND LONGSTREET AT HIGH TIDE." The college expenses include board, books, tution, laundry and incidentals.

For the double purpose of giving the people the truth of our civil war history, and of extending a helping hand to the struggling ambitious girls of the county, I am pleased to place a year at college within reach of a girl of this country who desires an education earnestly enough to exert herself a little Should the girl availing herself of this opportunity prove practicularly deserving, I pledge myself to the endeavor to open the way for her to complete the college course.

The girl who is interested in this offer should communicate with me at once, and her communication should be accompanied by the endorsement if her county School Commissioner, the editor of this paper and the teacher of the last school she attended.

I would be glad to communicate with every ambitious girl in this county who is struggling to educate herself.

Sick Blood

Feed pale girls on Scott's Emulsion.

We do not need to give all the reasons why Scott's Emulsion restores the strength and flesh and color of good health to those who suffer from sick blood.

The fact that it is the best preparation of Cod Liver Oil, rich in nutrition, full of healthy stimulation is a suggestion as to why it does what it does.

Scott's Emulsion presents Cod Liver Oil at its best, fullest in strength, least in taste.

Young women in their "teens" are permanently cured of the peculiar disease of the blood which shows itself in paleness, weakness and nervousness, by regular treatment with Scott's Emulsion.

It is a true blood food and is naturally adapted to the cure of the blood sickness from which so many young women suffer.

We will be glad to send a sample to any sufferer.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

SANTA CLAUS ON COLD WAVE

Rain, Snow, Sleet and Blizzards Are Promised in December.

Rev. Irl R. Hicks says December has in store for most parts of this country as well as other parts of the earth, some if not many severe winter storms.

First storm period, reactionary by the 1st a well defined change to falling barometer, warmer weather and areas of rain will be advancing from the west. Change to colder, with rain turning to snow and sleet, will follow on the western side of these disturbances. Freezing weather will prevail generally for a few days after these storms.

Second storm period, regular—Change to warmer and from the 6th to 10th general rains will move eastward over the country. While electrical storms are probable at the first, look for sudden and sweeping change to much colder, bringing a cold wave out of the northwestern.

Third storm period, reactionary. The probabilities are that very rough and unsettled weather will continue after the preceding period but change to warmer, with falling barometer and more decided storms of rain and snow may be counted on from the 12th to 15th.

Fourth storm period, regular. General storm conditions will appear at the beginning of this period. From the country eastward, while in all western and northern parts of the rain. About the 22nd the storms will assume the character of blizzards in many parts of the country. High, cold gales from the northwest will bring up the rear of these storms, sending a cold wave into most parts of the country by Christmas day.

Fifth storm period, reactionary. Storminess will continue in a general way from the preceding period but this tendency will quicken into more decided storms of wind and snow on and about the 25th and 26th.

Sixth storm period. About the 28th the barometer will fall again, the temperature will rise and as the month goes out more storms of rain and snow will move eastward. These storms will wind up in the opening days of January and be followed by the regular change to colder.

What to Expect in December.

The following data, covering a period of 16 years, has been compiled from the weather bureau records. They are issued to show the conditions that have prevailed during the month in question, for the above period of years, but must not be construed as a forecast of the weather conditions for the coming month.

Average date on which first "killing" frosts occurred in autumn, October 17.

Average date on which last "killing" frosts occurred in spring, April 11.

NOVEMBER THE DRYEST.

Less Rain Fell in Past Month Than In Any During the Past 17 Years.

November this year was the dryest month recorded by the weather bureau in its summary of 17 years and the precipitation has been less by a remarkable degree than in the lowest record of that time. During the past month there was a rainfall of just .11 inches, while the average for 17 years has been 2.75 inches.

There was only one day on which there was rainfall to exceed .01 inch or more and this is the smallest amount of precipitation of which account is taken. Despite this fact there have been 16 days, over one-half of the month, which have been cloudy. There were nine partly cloudy and only five days wholly clear. The statistics recorded above give some idea of the cause of the great drought which the country is now suffering.

The condition of the weather has been remarkable as regards temperature. The temperature has been more uniform than is usually found during the month of November. The highest temperature was 66 degrees and the lowest 23. The average was 42 and the average for 17 years was 44, making the past November by an average of two degrees a day colder than the average month in the time in which the conditions have been recorded.

The prevailing direction of the wind has been northwest. On November 25 the wind came from the northwest.

Trustees' Sale of Real Estate.

Messrs. Frederick A. Thayer and Taylor Morrison, trustees of the estate of the late Hiram Duckworth, will offer for sale upon the premises, in District No. 11, and located about ten miles west of Lonaconing, Allegany county, eight tracts of land belonging to said estate, on Thursday, December 15th, 1904, at the hour of twelve o'clock noon. These tracts contain from two acres to one hundred acres each and lie adjacent to one another. Upon one of the tracts is located the famous "Silver Bell" silver ore vein which is said to be rich in silver and other minerals. See hand bills for particulars.

How Roosevelt Introduced an Author.

On Tuesday afternoon, November 22, President Roosevelt introduced at the Layfayette Opera House, Washington, Rev. Charles Wagner, author of "The Simple Life." He said: "This is the first and will be the only time during my Presidency that I shall ever introduce a speaker to an audience; and I am more than glad to do it in this instance, because if there is a book which I should like to have read as a tract and also, which is not invariably true of tracts, as an interesting tract, by all people, it is "The Simple Life, should be read by everyone. Newspapers all over the country endorse it as well as President Roosevelt. The opening chapters will appear in The Republican shortly.

Game law violators are learning the lesson that it don't pay to break the law any more. The latest convert to this theory is Mr. Charles Walls of Pisgah, W. THE SEVENTH MAN

By INA WRIGHT HANSON

Copyright, 1904, by Ina Wright Hanson

We climbed to the top of the hill, Sylvia and I, and sat down—she in the queen's chair and I on a small rock at her feet. The queen's chair, so named by Sylvia, is a great white rock naturally carved into a very fair resemblance of a throne. Sylvia, her head set proudly on her white, full neck, makes a fitting queen.

Sylvia's black fringed, purple eyes were quiet; her little mouth had pensive curves; even her dimpled chin was not piquant as at some times nor defiant as at others. Sylvia is essentially a creature of moods, and her old guardian would not have her otherwise. A man only yesterday was telling me the beatitudes of his wife to be.

"She is always the same," he babbled. "One always knows how he will find her. A woman like that is a treasure hard to get."

I thought of Sylvia and smiled. It's because I never know how I am to find her that she charms me. Sometimes she is a gay little butterfly, flitting from one flower of speech to another; sometimes she is grave as a nun. I have learned, though, not to believe too much in Sylvia when she is grave. Sometimes the wildest of crimson moods originates in a drab one.

"What do you see, Sylvia?" I asked, looking up at the dreamy face.

"The Sacramento river, forty miles away," she answered. "It looks like a white thread with a knot tied in it. I suppose the knot is a steamboat."

"I suppose it is," I said absently. "Do you realize that there are only five days more."

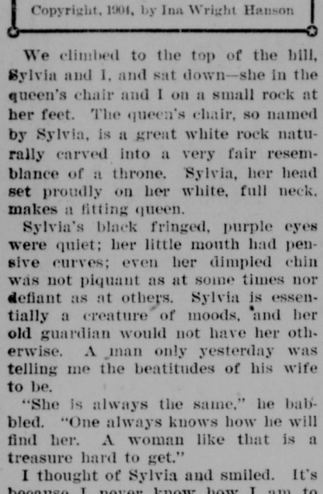
"Only five days," she assented, bringing her gaze back to me. I thought. But no!

"Oh! The manzanita is in bloom. Please bring me a piece."

I obeyed as one harks to his queen, but I remonstrated as one reproves a child.

"It is a matter of half a million dollars, Sylvia."

She sighed. "Money isn't everything," she said tritely. She laid the



"ISN'T THERE SOME OTHER WAY?"

pink blossom in her lap and added: "But money is very handy after all, isn't it, guardie? Tell me about it again."

So, as one repeats a nursery rhyme to the child who knows it, but who delights in its recital, I told "it" again to Sylvia.

"Your mother died at your birth, your father a month later, leaving you no relative in the world but me. An eccentric old man adopted you because he had once loved your mother, and he died when you were ten years old."

"And you were thirty-five," interposed Sylvia.

"That doesn't come into the story," I frowned. "This man appointed me your guardian and left a will by which his fortune becomes yours if you are married on the 15th day of March, 1904."

"My twentieth birthday," murmured Sylvia.

"If you are not married, the money goes"—

"To the dogs," laughed Sylvia.

I smiled. "To found a hospital for the cure and maintenance of infirm canines, and there are only five more days."

"You left out something," she said, taking up the flower again. "You must approve the marriage, and you are a very, very distant relative."

"So distant that the relationship wouldn't count if—I mean that even this remote tie of blood makes me take a great interest in your getting your fortune. Haven't you chosen yet?"

"I've had six offers," she said frankly, "and refused three. There's now left Tom and George and Joe," she counted on her slender fingers. "Tom and George and Joe! I can't marry Tom, guardie. He tells such unreasonable stories. Why, he told me last night that out in Iowa or somewhere there was a cyclone which blew straws from a strawstack right through standing trees."

I grinned.

"But George and Joe don't exaggerate."

"George is too—well, womanish. He came to call on Kate the other day when I was there. She was busy with her piece work that she delights in so and was showing me a crazy work quilt that she had ready to put together. George sat down on the floor and laid the blocks as he thought they ought to go. I don't want to marry George. He would be showing me how to make the quilts his mother used to piece."

"Joe is truthful and manly," I said, albeit grudgingly.

"Joe is a dear, but I am not good enough to be a minister's wife."

"Nonsense! You're too good for any man on earth," I said sharply.

Sylvia smiled down upon me. When Sylvia smiles with her purple eyes as well as her red mouth it makes one wish he were not getting gray over the temples.

"Do you wish me to marry any of them, guardie?"

Something tightened in my throat, but I spoke calmly, very calmly.

"Of course your old guardian doesn't want to lose you, but he is anxious for you to get your fortune, and the time is very soon."

"Isn't there some other way? Don't lawyers sometimes make loopholes or something?"

"They sometimes do," I answered. "But they can't in this case. It's the dogs or a husband, Sylvia, in five more days."

Her eyes were looking forty miles away again, and my eyes were looking at Sylvia. The faintest line of color showed in her rounded cheek; it touched her dimpled chin and crept up to the bronze curl above her little ear. Sylvia turned to me with the shyest of lights in her pansy eyes.

"There's another," she faltered.

Ah! I heard a rustling under the manzanita hush. I went down and threw a stone at it. When I went back I stood facing her.

"He is the seventh man. The ancients thought there was luck in the number seven, but you know the stipulation—I must approve."

"He is good, and he has honest hazel eyes," she began slowly, "and a splendid chin. He isn't poor, but I'd rather take manzanita blossoms from him, if he could give me nothing else, than to accept orchids from a prince. I should rather live in that little two roomed house with him than with a king in his palace."

There was a rift in Sylvia's voice as she finished.

"But he has never asked me to marry him, and I guess he never will."

"He must be a darned fool then!" I remarked savagely.

Sylvia laughed softly.

"That's one thing I didn't mention. He is. But if he doesn't ask me today I am going to ask him. Why shouldn't I? I wish, though, he would ask me. I should so much rather he would, dearest."

The last word was whispered, but I heard it.

"You can't mean me?" I croaked, bewildered.

For answer Sylvia left her throne and came down to me. She pointed the manzanita blossoms toward the Sacramento river, forty miles away.

"See, dear. The sun strikes the river and it looks like a band of gold. It looks like"—she hid her face on my stupid shoulder, and my arms closed around her—"it looks like a wedding ring."

Grant's Marvelous Memory.

General Grant's retentive memory was simply marvelous, more especially to those most closely associated with him from day to day. In the midst of absorbing thought and with apparently unobservant manner his quick ear and eye seemed to hear and notice everything, and two weeks or months later the slightest details had not escaped his attention or memory. This power was unmistakably demonstrated in a game of whist with his guest, Major General Doyle of the British army, between Baltimore and Fortress Monroe. Two staff officers completed the players. With General Doyle at his right it was simply amazing to discover Grant's ability to discover strategic points. He never failed to remember every card that had fallen, whence it came and who was to deliver to him all remaining, which he scooped in as a matter of course, although he never seemed in the least absorbed in the game. He was indeed an enigmatic composition in this as well as in other respects.—National Magazine.

Unanimous.

"Now, boys," said the teacher, "I need not tell you anything further of the duty of cultivating a kindly disposition, but I will tell you a little story of two dogs.

"George had a nice little dog that was as gentle as a lamb. He would sit by George's side quietly for an hour at a time. He would not bark at passers-by nor at strange dogs and would never bite anybody or anything. Thomas' dog, on the contrary, was always fighting other dogs and would sometimes tear them cruelly. He would also fly at the hens and cats in the neighborhood and on several occasions has been known to seize a cow by the nostrils and throw her. He barked at all the strange men that came along and would bite them unless somebody interfered. Now, boys, which is the dog you would like to own, George's or Thomas'?"

Instantly came the answer in one eager shout, "Thomas'!"

Keeping It Circulating.

"This," hoarsely spoke the hero, shaking a roll of bills in the face of the villain—"this is blood money!"

"Blood money?" echoes the villain, pausing to light a cigarette.

"Yes. Take it back. I will not have it about me!"

"Very well," replies the villain, puffing disdainfully; "I shall blow it in myself. Blood money! Ha-ha-a-a! It shall not be spent in vein."

At this point a lady in the third row of the orchestra fainted.—Chicago Tribune.

To Abolish War the War Spirit Must Be Exorcised

By RICHARD OLNEY, Ex-Secretary of State

WHATEVER be the cause—whether rightly or wrongly, whether necessarily or unnecessarily—THE WAR BACILLUS HAS GOT INTO THE AMERICAN BLOOD. Under its influence we are changing from a pacific people to a people under arms, are assuming to rival in fighting ability and readiness the great fighting states of Europe and are bringing upon ourselves and our posterity the onerous taxation AND ALL THE OTHER MISERIES inseparable from great and immediately effective military strength.

* * *

This tendency of our belligerent preparedness is intensified by much current preaching of the doctrine that war is a good thing in itself—is a sort of MORAL TONIC that mankind cannot be without. Such preaching is not by laymen only, but by official representatives of the Prince of Peace, and it is an eminent church dignitary who not only declares for war as a cure for the cankers of a long peace, but quotes, with seeming approbation, the lines:

> That God's most perfect instrument,
> In working out a pure intent,
> Is man arrayed for mutual slaughter.
> Yea, Carnage is his daughter.

IF THIS BE SOUND DOCTRINE, TO PROVOKE WAR MAY BE DEFENDED AS A DUTY, AND TO MAKE WAR MAY BE JUSTIFIED AS A HEALTHY SURGICAL OPERATION.

From the savagery, the relapse into barbarism, which such sentiments portend, every good friend of the American people will pray that they may be delivered.

The relations between England and this country are today of the friendliest—a condition for which both should be profoundly thankful and WHICH PROMISES WELL FOR THE PEACE OF THE WORLD. But the continuance of such relations is not inevitable—family quarrels are not infrequent and are noted for their bitterness—and among current notices of new publications I have observed one called "An Unpardonable War," which treats of an anticipated war between the two great English speaking peoples. A DIRER CALAMITY TO BOTH OR THE WORLD IS HARDLY CONCEIVABLE.

The Hague tribunal and other like contrivances, however commendable in purpose and skillful in method, CANNOT REACH THE ROOT OF THE MATTER.

TO ABOLISH WAR THE WAR SPIRIT MUST BE EXORCISED.

That is an end which may well inspire the best energies of all Christian men and Christian churches. Nothing can promote it so effectively as GIVING CHECK to the rising tide of militarism in this country.

America's System of Naval Education

By Captain W. H. BROWNSON, Superintendent United States Naval Academy

I AM fully satisfied now that our own system of naval education is THE BEST TO BE FOUND ANYWHERE. English naval officers a few years ago were picking all kinds of faults in it, and it even was condemned by some of our own retired officers, but I was gratified to learn in England that naval schools are being established ON EXACTLY THE SAME PLAN WHICH IS FOLLOWED AT ANNAPOLIS.

Germany, too, is taking up our idea, and it was not a week before I sailed that Prince Henry told me that another Annapolis was soon to be started at Bremen. There are A FEW SMALL THINGS which we might take with profit from both the English and the German systems, but on the whole I think we could not improve our own very much.

I BELIEVE THAT WITH IT WE CAN TURN OUT THE BEST EQUIPPED OFFICERS TO BE FOUND IN THE WORLD.

What Constitutes the Gentleman

By President ELIOT of Harvard

IT has been stated that the gentleman's mark in Harvard is C, the different grades of scholarship being respectively A, B, C, D and E. A is excellence, and E is failure. ONE CAN EASILY SEE WHERE C BELONGS.

According to this, the gentleman is not to be a strong, effective worker, not a strenuous seeker after knowledge. Can you imagine a more indifferent, shiftless, lazy person loafing through four years of soldier life? OR CAN THERE BE A STUPIDER IDEA OF A GENTLEMAN? A man to be and do everything that a true Harvard man ought to be and do must be a DEMOCRATIC gentleman.

A gentleman must also be quiet. If a man is heard bawling about the college yard one can feel perfectly sure that he is either an outsider or a newcomer. He must never do anything that will hurt a woman or a child or AN INFERIOR. He must be generous, efficient, DEFERENTIAL TO AGE, beauty, excellence, skill and all worthy things.

CONSTIPATION

For Love of The Major

By HENRY COLGATE

Copyright, 1905, by K. M. Whitehead

Major Davis, paymaster, with headquarters at Fort Brady, was eating his supper at San Remo ranch, presided over by Apache Joe, one of the sleekest, slickest Mexicans in all the west. The sergeant and the troopers of his escort were frying their bacon at a campfire outside. While Jose, who waited on the officer, was away after the wine the major received a sudden shock. The handsomest Mexican girl he had ever seen softly entered the room, a finger on her lips, and whispered:

"Don't drink the wine, senor. It will be poisoned! Don't sleep in the house tonight. They come to rob and murder you!"

She was gone before the son of Mars could reach out and grasp her sleeve or utter a word in reply. He had stopped at the ranch several times before and knew that the girl was a recent arrival. Jose was back with the wine a minute after the girl has disappeared, but the officer waved him away, saying:

"It is kind of you, Jose, but not tonight. In the morning, perhaps, you may ask me to take a bottle along to Fort Reno and have the colonel sample it with me."

At 10 o'clock the major made excuse that he would rather sleep in his ambulance, which was provided with a cot, and at 11 all was quiet within and without the ranch. Within, however, the Mexican stood at one of the rear windows peering out into the darkness, waiting. Without, while all the escort except a single sentinel appeared to be sound asleep, every man's eyes were wide open and his carbine rested by his side.

At midnight to the minute Jose lighted the candle and passed it back and forth across the window a dozen times. Then, taking his revolver from a shelf, he softly quit the house, and after a walk of 300 feet he stood before six men crouched behind a giant cactus.

"They are asleep, the pigs," he whispered, "and it will need only one shot apiece to do for them. Come!"

Five minutes later seven border outlaws crept down to within ten feet of the sleeping men. The sentinel stood as one in a daze. The outlaws crept another foot, and the man on guard suddenly wheeled, firing his musket with deadly effect. His recumbent comrades sprang to their feet and poured in a volley which dropped three ruffians. The rest fled into the darkness with the fleetness of shadows, and it was hardly a minute later when the

"I WANT TO SEE THE SENOR DAVIS," SHE SAID.

coatless, hatless and vestless Jose burst out of the front door of the ranch with the exclamation:

"Who is it? What is it? I am here to die with the senor and his brave men!"

"We won't ask you, Jose, to do any dying for us tonight," grimly replied the major as he came forward. "In the morning after we are gone you may dig graves for those dead comrades of yours if you want to oblige us."

"My comrades, senor? God forbid! I never saw one of them before. I permit no bad men to hang about my place. The cursed dogs, to come sneaking upon you in the darkness to do murder!"

The Mexican tried to throw the ring of truth into his words, but as he had a bullet hole in his shirt and could still feel the skin smart where the lead had grazed it he did not make much of a success. Even when he went over and kicked one of the dead men nobody asked to shake hands with him.

The major ate his breakfast in the ranch house and sought to put Jose at his ease, his one object to get another sight of the girl whose warning had prevented a tragedy. For just five seconds she stood in the half open door and smiled at him, but before he could thank her she was gone.

This was the beginning of the major's "mash," as his regiment chose to call it. The officer would have been a boor not to follow it up at least to the point of having grateful speech with the girl. He rode to the ranch on purpose one day. Jose was fortunately away on a cattle stealing expedition, and his wife was in bed with the jumping toothache. Little did he learn from Pepita, however. She was a girl of eighteen, handsome and convent educated, but she shrouded herself in mystery, and he did not seek to break down her reserve. He expressed his deep gratitude and rode away, but as he galloped back to Fort Brady he was uncomfortably conscious that the girl admired him.

His wife had gone east, and he was not the man to enter into a flirtation in her absence. Once more he saw Pepita at the ranch as he rode on official business, and once she was found lingering around the fort as if to get speech with some one. Gossip filled in all the rest. It was a lonely, out of the world post, and there had to be gossip about some one or something. The major was guyed by his brother officers about the girl, and he knew that the rank and file were talking, but he went his way and said nothing. They would not know that he had offered to send the girl east, where his wife or his mother might provide for her.

Then one autumn night, when the gossip was at its height, the sentinel at the gate suddenly called for the corporal of the guard. It was dark and gusty, with falls of rain at intervals, but he had caught sight of a figure skulking about. The corporal made a dash through the darkness and laid his hands on a human being—on a woman! It was Pepita! Near at hand was the pony on which she had covered a distance of twenty-eight miles in the last four hours.

"I want to see the Senor Davis," she said as the corporal demanded her business.

"Oh, that's the game, eh?" chuckled the man to himself and winked at the sentinel through the darkness.

"At once, if you please."

"It's coming it pretty strong, little one, but it's not for me to interfere. Say, Pete, if we only had a paper to take this up, eh? Prominent officer mashed on a cussed good looking little greaser gal—rides out to chin-chin with her—she rides back to return his call—love—romance—elopement. Everything here for a first class novel."

"With death in it if you insult me further!" said Pepita as she drew a dagger and menaced him.

"A kitten with claws, eh? Put up that frog sticker and come along with me."

The girl was conducted to Major Davis' quarters and remained for half an hour. Then she rode away. She was hardly outside the gate when a silent alarm brought the men out of barracks to fall in. A quarter of an hour later they had manned the defenses and were waiting for Red Cloud and his 600 warriors to attack. When the rush was made the famous chief was beaten for the first time in his life, and there were only 485 warriors to escort him back to his village. Had he come an hour earlier not a man or woman in Fort Brady would have escaped the tomahawk.

"It was the little Mexican gal that gave the reds away," explained soldier to soldier. And the tongue of gossip was silent.

In the morning, when the soldiers pushed out here and there to gather up the sulky wounded and the silent dead, two of them came across a sight that was not pleasant to see.

They covered the figure, beautiful even in death, in tender but soldiery fashion and carried her to Major Davis' quarters. Then they withdrew and left those two alone, the tall, fair man in his stern uniform; the tall, silent woman, with the peaceful smile frozen on her lips. The man bent over and kissed those lips—for the first time.

"For me it was not worth this great sacrifice, dear child. But for my men, and their wives and their children, it was well done!"

La Fontaine's Opinion of Himself.

"La Fontaine," said one of the most brilliant critics and wits of the famous fable writer's time, "is such a fool that he does not know he has more genius than Æsop or Phaedrus."

In truth, he was a severe critic of his own work. He attended the first presentation of his "Astree" and sat near some ladies who did not know him. At some of the important passages he exclaimed: "That is wretched! That is absurd!"

When they protested that it was good and that it was by the great La Fontaine, he rejoined:

"That makes no difference. The piece is bad. I know that La Fontaine you are speaking of. He's a stupid fellow. He's myself."

Then he went out, entered a cafe and went to sleep in a corner. Some of his friends found him there and inquired why he wasn't listening to "Astree."

"Oh," said the author, rousing himself and stifling a yawn, "I just came away. The first part displeases me greatly. No one agreed with what I said about it, but I didn't care to hear more. I admire the patience of the Parisians."

A Story of Evarts.

When William M. Evarts was called to Washington by President Hayes as secretary of state his predecessor, Secretary Fish, gave a dinner in his honor. Mrs. Fish was seated at Mr. Evarts' right hand. During a lull in the conversation Mrs. Fish turned to Mr. Evarts, speaking so clearly as to be heard even at the foot of the table, saying, "Mr. Evarts, I understand that you have sent two of your sons to college."

"Yes, Mrs. Fish."

"They are twin brothers, are they not, Mr. Evarts?"

"Yes, and they have been playmates and schoolmates until now."

"But is it true that you sent one to Harvard and the other to Yale, although you are a Yale graduate yourself?"

"Yes, it is quite true."

"Then I suppose you have done that, Mr. Evarts, so that each of them can take first honors?"

Here Mr. Evarts looked curiously at Mrs. Fish for an instant and then said very earnestly, "Mrs. Fish, you have divined correctly."

Housekeeping and Womanliness

By Rev. MADISON C. PETERS

THE immigration bureau has direct applications for 40,000 immigrant girls as servants, whom they can place in and within twenty miles of New York city. No matter how ignorant, WORTHLESS AND INCOMPETENT, these servants can get from $12 to $30 a month. The servant problem has become one of the most perplexing problems in America. The married are driven out of their homes into hotels and apartments. The tyranny and ignorant wastefulness are burdens UNDER WHICH THE HOUSEKEEPER GROANS and sighs for deliverance from intolerable imported servants.

OUR YOUNG WOMEN OPENLY DECLARE THAT THEY WON'T MAKE SLAVES OF THEMSELVES AND DO HOUSEWORK.

Even if a young woman be not required to do the work herself, she ought to be able TO DIRECT her servants. But a young wife may not be able to do all the work to be done in the house. Not able—not able to cook and wash and mend and clean the house and make the bed for one young man and herself, and that young man her husband, too, who is quite willing to work from morning until night, to put up with a cold lunch, to get up and light her fire, TO DO ANYTHING THAT LOVE CAN CONTRIVE TO SPARE HER LABOR, conduce to her convenience and promote her happiness!

WOMANLINESS AND GOOD HOUSEKEEPING GO TOGETHER. IGNORANCE, INCOMPETENCE AND INDOLENCE HAVE RUINED MANY A HOME.

Society requires of the man a certain amount of preparatory training when he enters a profession where great issues are at stake, and men as a rule do master the business which they follow, and it should be equally binding upon a woman TO MASTER THE DETAILS AND PROPER CARE OF A HOUSE.

How to Win and Hold A Woman's Affection

By HERBERT KELCEY, Star of "Taps"

THE thirteen ways of winning AND HOLDING the affection of a woman I believe to be as follows:

1. Be considerate of her in small things. Small things make up a woman's life.

2. Remember always that everywhere in the animal kingdom kind and NOT SEX makes difference in brain. Show her always that you count on her intelligence.

3. NEED HER AND LET HER KNOW IT. Women understand best that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

4. Let her feel, before and particularly after marriage, that she is more important than your business. You wouldn't care to be supplanted in her thoughts by constant musing over that $3.17 that slipped through her hands yesterday.

5. BEFORE MARRIAGE KISS HER AS THOUGH SHE WERE YOUR WIFE; AFTERWARD KISS HER AS THOUGH SHE WERE YOUR SWEETHEART.

6. Never abuse her confidence. Her faith in you is capital which you will have to invest many times.

7. Compel her respect. Respect is the mother and admiration the father of love.

8. Take an interest in her affairs. You would be hurt if she took no interest in yours.

9. Devote at least half the thought to entertaining her during a lifetime that you would devote to entertaining her pretty sister half an hour.

10. Don't "nag." Men nag as much as women, and vaccination, the slow scraping away of the skin, pains more than the quick incision of the surgeon's knife.

11. Remember that she is THE BETTER HALF OF YOURSELF, and "to thine own self be true."

12. Be generous, not lavish. When she is your wife, she is your partner. Never compel her to ask for money. A woman feels dependence as much as a man would.

13. DEVOTE AS MUCH ATTENTION TO THE SUBJECT OF WINNING THE WOMAN YOU HAVE WON AS TO WINNING THE WOMAN YOU HAVEN'T. It is more important to keep the love of your wife than to create love in the object of your attentions. Eternal vigilance is the price of eternal affection. Never say to yourself, "I've caught the car." YOU MAY FALL OFF.

Present Shortcomings Of the Automobile

By THOMAS A. EDISON

UNTIL the American manufacturer learns something about how automobiles should be constructed we will have accidents, disasters, deaths.

The American machine is imperfectly built. AND IT SEEMS THAT THE MAKER OF THEM WILL NOT LEARN. He constructs his axles and builds the fore part of his machine on plans that do not take durability into consideration. Where the strongest parts should be the weakest are. The bolts are ten times too small.

The American manufacturer goes upon the plan of the manufacturer constructing reapers, harvesters, buggies and the like. He cannot be persuaded into using the French patterns. Why, I do not know, except that the AMERICAN WILL NOT PATTERN AFTER ANYBODY, and more is the pity sometimes.

IN TIME THE AUTOMOBILE WILL BECOME THE POOR MAN'S WAGON, JUST AS THE BICYCLE HAS BECOME THE LABORING MAN'S LABOR SAVING DEVICE.

He will use it to haul his wood, convey his farm freight, to get to and from the postoffice and for the family for church.

Captivity of the Ten Tribes.

It is the surprise of the historian—this page full of circumstantial detail written at the very dawn of authentic history. The walls of Rome were only three decades old when this record was made, yet its truthfulness has had verification in the recently discovered inscription at Khorsabad, now in the Museum of Berlin, in which Sargon says: "I beseiged, took, and occupied the city of Samaria, and carried into captivity 27,280 of its inhabitants. I changed the former government of the country, and placed over it lieutenants of my own."

The fate of the Ten Tribes has always been the play-ground of the imagination. Fancy has followed them to impenetrable localities and affirmed their final restoration to their native land. Great ingenuity and learning has been shown in framing theories and defending them. All start with the assumption that the tribes preserved their identity, and were only modified in racial characteristics by climatic and other conditions. How widely divergent the conclusions of these theorists are, is apparent from the fact that some find the missing Israelites among the Afghans, the Tartars, the Nestorians, the Jews of Malabar, the North American Indians, and, the most singular of all, the modern English. Thus one theory kills another, and all conspire to teach us that the "lost tribes" are lost.

The question of cause is more practical than that of localities. "Why?" rather than "Whither?" The question is answered in this scripture. It has been aptly called the nation's epitaph, written by the finger of the Lord. It is also an autopsy upon the nation's corpse to find the disease of which it died. The inquest is so thorough-going as to leave nothing of facts wanting. The post-mortem report is in the clearest-cut terms possible.

The children of Israel "cloaked their evil practices with the pretense that they were honoring Jehovah." But they soon threw away the cloak. They built high places, set up images and pillars, and burnt incense like the heathen forgetting that for this very reason the heathen had been carried away. They were deaf to the Lord's entreaties by the voice of his prophets. They were hardened in their disobedience and unbelief. They went to the utmost limit of heathenish superstition and cruelty in offering human sacrifices. The parental instinct was so blunted that they burned alive their own children before Baal. This brought upon them the judicial anger of Jehovah. The order for their national disestablishment was decreed in the court of heaven. Sargon, the Assyrian, was the unconsious instrument carrying into effect the decree of Jehovah, who holds nations as well as individuals accountable for their deeds.

Mosaic from Commentaries

Did secretly. Literally, they covered. "They cloaked or covered their idolatry with pretenses that it was a worship of Jehovah."—Cook. Others, with the LXX think that the meaning probably is "they decked out" their worship, employed things alien to the simplicity of the Mosaic ordinances. Gay religious full of pomp and gold. —Anon. Did secretly: They covered Jehovah with things which were not right—concealed Him so he could not be recognized.—Rahr. Tower—City: In every place was some idolatrous rite.—Clarke. The towers in which watchmen were stationed to keep guard over the flocks and crops were always in the most lonely and deserted spots, while fenced cities implied the presence of many inhabitants. So the sense appears to be "in the loneliest as well as in the most populous places." Proverbial Hebrew phrase, meaning everywhere.—Cam. Bib. Hardened their necks: A metaphor derived from those oxen, who in spite of all efforts to guide them, hold their necks set in the way they determined to go.—Pentecost. Did not believe: The original of all their sins. They did not believe God's prophets.—Patrick. Testimonies: His law is the testimony for truth and against iniquity.—Alexander. Left: As soon as any other object is set up instead of God, all he values has perished from man's worship—Lumby. Pass through fire: This idol was made of brass, and the head was that of a calf with a crown upon it. It made hollow, and a furious fire was kindled within it. When the arms were red hot, the victim was thrown into them, and was almost immediately burned to death, while its cries were drowned by drums.—Rabbin. Lord to anger: Indignation that makes God hate sin, punish it, and burn against it.—Pentecost. God's anger is not merely personal resentment because of a personsonal injury. It is profund ethical hatred of sin because it is isn.—Neely. Out of sight: The Holy Land, where Jehovah has his dwelling.—Bahr.

The Teacher's Lantern.

The fall of an empire is always an event of absorbing interest. It is a black background, against which the principles which make for and against national perpetuity can be well defined.

The fall of Israel was the inevitable conclusion of its course of unrighteousness.

All that could be done was done to save Israel from its fate. No nation ever had more faithful or fearless reformers. Amos and Hosea were last in the succession; but, like their predecessors, unsuccessful.

Israel had a striking object-lesson in the career of the southern kingdom. Its religious revival was attended by material prosperity, and the good King Hezekiah joined the prophets in the attempt to call the people back to their allegiance to God.

It is an historical sarcasm that the last king of Israel should wear the name of the earliest of the hero Judges, for Hosea and Joshua are one and the same. An historical parallel is also found in Romulus Augustus last of Roman emperors, who wore the double name of the founder of the city and the founder of the empire.

And Hoshea was far from being the meanest of the nineteen kings of Israel. Just as Louis XVI was innocent as compared with his predecessors, yet their evil courses had their inveterate denouement in him.

John Eliot, apostle to the Indians, whose tercentenary has just been observed, believed the American Indians to be descendants of the lost tribes.

It is a pure assumption to say that Israel must needs have fallen a prey to the world-powers without reference to the moral conditions of the kingdom. Palestine was naturally easy to defend and hard to conquer. National complications were such that the kingdom might have been perpetuated in the way of balance of power. Switzerland is a modern analogy.

There is a national life as well as an individual life. Providence deals with nations as if they were persons.

The Lord's plumb-line, which Amos saw in his vision, is still let down from heaven. Nations must stand true to it in order to insure their perpetuity. Righteousness exalts a nation.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mrs. Ella Conley and two little children was called to Baltimore on last Saturday on account of the serious condition of her husband, Mr. Thos. Conley, who has been a patient in the City Hospital for the past four weeks as a result of an accident in the Buxton mine, where Mr. Conley was employed. Mr Conley's back is broken and spinal cord crushed to such an extent that if he survives he will remain a helpless cripple as long as he lives.

Mr. and Mrs. John C. Brydon, of Somerset, Pa., were with Mr. Brydon's parents over Sunday.

Harry Hartley, aged about 15 years, was kicked by a vicious mule on Monday, while working in the Buxton mine and now lies in a criticai condition from internal injuries to stomach and bowels.

Mr. Freeland Tibbits spent Sunday in Washington City.

Mr. N. U. Bond, of Bond, this county, spent Sunday with friends in the place. Mr. Bond is a member of Bond Bros., owners of the extensive lumber plant at Bond and is an enthusiastic Republican and through whose efforts twenty-five Republicans were added to the registration in this district and our majority thereby increased.

Mr. George Warnick was in Baltimore first of the week on business connected with his store.

The new Junior hall will be ready to occupy about February 1st, 1905. Mr. Sigler, of Luke, has the contract for its erection and the work which is already under way will be rushed to completion.

Commissioner Stump and Mr. John Miller started for the St. Louis exposition on No. 55 Wednesday afternoon. They expect to be gone ten days and on their return will spend some time in Chicago.

Trains Nos. 5 and 6 accommodations, east in the morning and west in the evening, will be discontinued on Sunday Nov. 27th. These trains have been kept on five or six weeks longer than customary as an experiment. Had they been a paying project or even paid expenses the company intended to schedule them regularly for the winter.

Paying Debts.

It is amazing how many professed Christians seem to have no conscience on paying their debts. Just because the non-payment of debts is not regarded as a gross immorality, many never lay it to the heart, nor feel seriously the utter ruin it works in Christian life and experience.

A Christian business man who dealt in religious books and periodicals, said that some of the most incorrigible cases of non-payment of debts he ever met, were some evangelists and professors of full salvation. The habit of going in debt, and then putting off paying of debts, will grow on the soul just as truly as the morphine habit, until the subject has no conscience in the matter, and while he would not intentionally tell a lie, will nevertheless, go right on promising to pay without seriously intending to pay, and go in debt without any clear prospect of getting out. Another strange thing is, many people who are in debt, when they get cash money, instead of paying something on the debt, thereby showing good faith, will spend their money with a new person, and take pains to shun the party they owe. If we are in debt we should repent of it, and make a covenant with God not to go further in debt, and to give one-tenth of all we get to the Lord, and not to take the Lord's tenth to pay our debts, and be careful to treat our creditors aright by explaining our circumstances to them, keeping up the interest paid on the debt until we can pay the principal. Neglecting to pay debts will ruin anybody's spiritual influence, blind the soul to clear moral distinctions, undermine any religious life, and render a person unfit to be used of the Lord, in spite of the greatest gifts or the most thrilling experiences in religion.

If any who read this are slack about paying their debts, begin at once to pray earnestly that the Lord will awaken you to its true magnitude, and to inspire you with perfect integrity to begin at once the settling up of your financial matters in perfect righteousness, and you will begin to find that God will begin to bless you both inwardly and outwardly.—Christian Standard.

"Lee and Longstreet at High Tide."

The people of this country will refuse to be prejudiced against Mrs. Longstreet's book on the life of the "War Horse" of the confederacy, by the suggestion that it is written in a spirit of friendliness to the north. Mrs. Longstreet was born in the American Union, after the Confederate struggle had become the "Lost Cause" of American history. She evidently has never known what it was to hate anything American. It was high patriotism, worthy of the opening days of a new century, that prompted a young woman of the new south to invite a valorous Union officer to write the introduction to the biography of a dead adversary.

The opening words of General Sickle's introduction to "Lee and Longstreet at High Tide" happily silence all criticism:

"If it be thought strange that I should write a preface to the memoir of a conspicuous adversary, I reply that the civil war is only a memory, its asperities are forgotten, both armies were American, old army friendships have been renewed, and new army friendships have been formed among the combatants, the truth of history is dear to all of us and the amenities of chivalrous manhood are cherished alike by the north and south, when justice to either is involved."

Sickles is one of the most famous of the surviving Union officers of the civil war. He has been prominent in Democratic politics in New York since the war and has suffered much in consequence.

The south will not fall out with Mrs. Longstreet for defending the great name she bears, now that the stout warrior is dead and cannot answer his accusers; a magnanimous people will honor her for it.—Exchange.

Order of Publication.

Buford W. Woods vs. Lydia Woods.

No. 1306 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree, divorcing the plaintiff, a vinculo matrimonii, from the defendant.

The bill states, that the plaintiff and defendant were married by the Rev. W. E. George at Deer Park, in the year 1894, and that they resided together at Garrett county aforesaid until about the month of April 1897; that the conduct of the plaintiff towards the defendant has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, and without any just cause or reason, the defendant abandoned and deserted the plaintiff, and has declared her intention to live with him no longer, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for more than three years, to-wit since the month of April, 1897, and is deliberate and final and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation; that one child, George W. Woods has been born to the plaintiff and defendant from said marriage, and resides with his mother the defendant, that the said Lydia Woods is a non-resident of the State of Maryland.

The bill then prays for a decree divorcing the plaintiff and defendant a vinculo matrimonii and for general relief and an order of publication against the absent defendant.

It is thereupon this 25th day of November, 1904, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, ordered that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 30th day of December, 1904, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning her to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 17th day of January next, to show cause, if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

Captivity of the Ten Tribes.

It is the surprise of the historian—this page full of circumstantial detail written at the very dawn of authentic history. The walls of Rome were only three decades old when this record was made, yet its truthfulness has had verification in the recently discovered inscription at Khorsabad, now in the Museum of Berlin, in which Sargon says: "I beseiged, took, and occupied the city of Samaria, and carried into captivity 27,280 of its inhabitants. I changed the former government of the country, and placed over it lieutenants of my own."

The fate of the Ten Tribes has always been the play-ground of the imagination. Fancy has followed them to impenetrable localities and affirmed their final restoration to their native land. Great ingenuity and learning has been shown in framing theories and defending them. All start with the assumption that the tribes preserved their identity, and were only modified in racial characteristics by climatic and other conditions. How widely divergent the conclusions of these theorists are, is apparent from the fact that some find the missing Israelites among the Afghans, the Tartars, the Nestorians, the Jews of Malabar, the North American Indians, and, the most singular of all, the modern English. Thus one theory kills another, and all conspire to teach us that the "lost tribes" are lost.

The question of cause is more practical than that of localities. "Why?" rather than "Whither?" The question is answered in this scripture. It has been aptly called the nation's epitaph, written by the finger of the Lord. It is also an autopsy upon the nation's corpse to find the disease of which it died. The inquest is so thorough-going as to leave nothing of facts wanting. The post-mortem report is in the clearest-cut terms possible.

The children of Israel "cloaked their evil practices with the pretense that they were honoring Jehovah." But they soon threw away the cloak. They built high places, set up images and pillars, and burnt incense like the heathen forgetting that for this very reason the heathen had been carried away. They were deaf to the Lord's entreaties by the voice of his prophets. They were hardened in their disobedience and unbelief. They went to the utmost limit of heathenish superstition and cruelty in offering human sacrifices. The parental instinct was so blunted that they burned alive their own children before Baal. This brought upon them the judicial anger of Jehovah. The order for their national disestablishment was decreed in the court of heaven. Sargon, the Assyrian, was the unconsious instrument carrying into effect the decree of Jehovah, who holds nations as well as individuals accountable for their deeds.

Mosaic from Commentaries

Did secretly. Literally, they covered. "They cloaked or covered their idolatry with pretenses that it was a worship of Jehovah."—Cook. Others, with the LXX think that the meaning probably is "they decked out" their worship, employed things alien to the simplicity of the Mosaic ordinances. Gay religious full of pomp and gold. —Anon. Did secretly: They covered Jehovah with things which were not right—concealed Him so he could not be recognized.—Rahr. Tower—City: In every place was some idolatrous rite.—Clarke. The towers in which watchmen were stationed to keep guard over the flocks and crops were always in the most lonely and deserted spots, while fenced cities implied the presence of many inhabitants. So the sense appears to be "in the loneliest as well as in the most populous places." Proverbial Hebrew phrase, meaning everywhere.—Cam. Bib. Hardened their necks: A metaphor derived from those oxen, who in spite of all efforts to guide them, hold their necks set in the way they determined to go.—Pentecost. Did not believe: The original of all their sins. They did not believe God's prophets.—Patrick. Testimonies: His law is the testimony for truth and against iniquity.—Alexander. Left: As soon as any other object is set up instead of God, all he values has perished from man's worship—Lumby. Pass through fire: This idol was made of brass, and the head was that of a calf with a crown upon it. It made hollow, and a furious fire was kindled within it. When the arms were red hot, the victim was thrown into them, and was almost immediately burned to death, while its cries were drowned by drums.—Rabbin. Lord to anger: Indignation that makes God hate sin, punish it, and burn against it.—Pentecost. God's anger is not merely personal resentment because of a personsonal injury. It is profund ethical hatred of sin because it is isn.—Neely. Out of sight: The Holy Land, where Jehovah has his dwelling.—Bahr.

The Teacher's Lantern.

The fall of an empire is always an event of absorbing interest. It is a black background, against which the principles which make for and against national perpetuity can be well defined.

The fall of Israel was the inevitable conclusion of its course of unrighteousness.

All that could be done was done to save Israel from its fate. No nation ever had more faithful or fearless reformers. Amos and Hosea were last in the succession; but, like their predecessors, unsuccessful.

Israel had a striking object-lesson in the career of the southern kingdom. Its religious revival was attended by material prosperity, and the good King Hezekiah joined the prophets in the attempt to call the people back to their allegiance to God.

It is an historical sarcasm that the last king of Israel should wear the name of the earliest of the hero Judges, for Hosea and Joshua are one and the same. An historical parallel is also found in Romulus Augustus last of Roman emperors, who wore the double name of the founder of the city and the founder of the empire.

And Hoshea was far from being the meanest of the nineteen kings of Israel. Just as Louis XVI was innocent as compared with his predecessors, yet their evil courses had their inveterate denouement in him.

John Eliot, apostle to the Indians, whose tercentenary has just been observed, believed the American Indians to be descendants of the lost tribes.

It is a pure assumption to say that Israel must needs have fallen a prey to the world-powers without reference to the moral conditions of the kingdom. Palestine was naturally easy to defend and hard to conquer. National complications were such that the kingdom might have been perpetuated in the way of balance of power. Switzerland is a modern analogy.

There is a national life as well as an individual life. Providence deals with nations as if they were persons.

The Lord's plumb-line, which Amos saw in his vision, is still let down from heaven. Nations must stand true to it in order to insure their perpetuity. Righteousness exalts a nation.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mrs. Ella Conley and two little children was called to Baltimore on last Saturday on account of the serious condition of her husband, Mr. Thos. Conley, who has been a patient in the City Hospital for the past four weeks as a result of an accident in the Buxton mine, where Mr. Conley was employed. Mr Conley's back is broken and spinal cord crushed to such an extent that if he survives he will remain a helpless cripple as long as he lives.

Mr. and Mrs. John C. Brydon, of Somerset, Pa., were with Mr. Brydon's parents over Sunday.

Harry Hartley, aged about 15 years, was kicked by a vicious mule on Monday, while working in the Buxton mine and now lies in a criticai condition from internal injuries to stomach and bowels.

Mr. Freeland Tibbits spent Sunday in Washington City.

Mr. N. U. Bond, of Bond, this county, spent Sunday with friends in the place. Mr. Bond is a member of Bond Bros., owners of the extensive lumber plant at Bond and is an enthusiastic Republican and through whose efforts twenty-five Republicans were added to the registration in this district and our majority thereby increased.

Mr. George Warnick was in Baltimore first of the week on business connected with his store.

The new Junior hall will be ready to occupy about February 1st, 1905. Mr. Sigler, of Luke, has the contract for its erection and the work which is already under way will be rushed to completion.

Commissioner Stump and Mr. John Miller started for the St. Louis exposition on No. 55 Wednesday afternoon. They expect to be gone ten days and on their return will spend some time in Chicago.

Trains Nos. 5 and 6 accommodations, east in the morning and west in the evening, will be discontinued on Sunday Nov. 27th. These trains have been kept on five or six weeks longer than customary as an experiment. Had they been a paying project or even paid expenses the company intended to schedule them regularly for the winter.

Paying Debts.

It is amazing how many professed Christians seem to have no conscience on paying their debts. Just because the non-payment of debts is not regarded as a gross immorality, many never lay it to the heart, nor feel seriously the utter ruin it works in Christian life and experience.

A Christian business man who dealt in religious books and periodicals, said that some of the most incorrigible cases of non-payment of debts he ever met, were some evangelists and professors of full salvation. The habit of going in debt, and then putting off paying of debts, will grow on the soul just as truly as the morphine habit, until the subject has no conscience in the matter, and while he would not intentionally tell a lie, will nevertheless, go right on promising to pay without seriously intending to pay, and go in debt without any clear prospect of getting out. Another strange thing is, many people who are in debt, when they get cash money, instead of paying something on the debt, thereby showing good faith, will spend their money with a new person, and take pains to shun the party they owe. If we are in debt we should repent of it, and make a covenant with God not to go further in debt, and to give one-tenth of all we get to the Lord, and not to take the Lord's tenth to pay our debts, and be careful to treat our creditors aright by explaining our circumstances to them, keeping up the interest paid on the debt until we can pay the principal. Neglecting to pay debts will ruin anybody's spiritual influence, blind the soul to clear moral distinctions, undermine any religious life, and render a person unfit to be used of the Lord, in spite of the greatest gifts or the most thrilling experiences in religion.

If any who read this are slack about paying their debts, begin at once to pray earnestly that the Lord will awaken you to its true magnitude, and to inspire you with perfect integrity to begin at once the settling up of your financial matters in perfect righteousness, and you will begin to find that God will begin to bless you both inwardly and outwardly.—Christian Standard.

"Lee and Longstreet at High Tide."

The people of this country will refuse to be prejudiced against Mrs. Longstreet's book on the life of the "War Horse" of the confederacy, by the suggestion that it is written in a spirit of friendliness to the north. Mrs. Longstreet was born in the American Union, after the Confederate struggle had become the "Lost Cause" of American history. She evidently has never known what it was to hate anything American. It was high patriotism, worthy of the opening days of a new century, that prompted a young woman of the new south to invite a valorous Union officer to write the introduction to the biography of a dead adversary.

The opening words of General Sickle's introduction to "Lee and Longstreet at High Tide" happily silence all criticism:

"If it be thought strange that I should write a preface to the memoir of a conspicuous adversary, I reply that the civil war is only a memory, its asperities are forgotten, both armies were American, old army friendships have been renewed, and new army friendships have been formed among the combatants, the truth of history is dear to all of us and the amenities of chivalrous manhood are cherished alike by the north and south, when justice to either is involved."

Sickles is one of the most famous of the surviving Union officers of the civil war. He has been prominent in Democratic politics in New York since the war and has suffered much in consequence.

The south will not fall out with Mrs. Longstreet for defending the great name she bears, now that the stout warrior is dead and cannot answer his accusers; a magnanimous people will honor her for it.—Exchange.

Buford W. Woods vs. Lydia Woods.

No. 1306 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree, divorcing the plaintiff, a vinculo matrimonii, from the defendant.

The bill states, that the plaintiff and defendant were married by the Rev. W. E. George at Deer Park, in the year 1894, and that they resided together at Garrett county aforesaid until about the month of April 1895; that the conduct of the plaintiff towards the defendant has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, and without any just cause or reason, the defendant abandoned and deserted the plaintiff, and has declared her intention to live with him no longer, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for more than three years, to-wit since the month of April, 1895, and is deliberate and final and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation; that one child, George W. Woods has been born to the plaintiff and defendant from said marriage, and resides with his mother the defendant, that the said Lydia Woods is a non-resident of the State of Maryland.

The bill then prays for a decree divorcing the plaintiff and defendent a vinculo matrimonii and for general relief and an order of publication against the absent defendant.

It is thereupon this 25th day of November, 1904, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, ordered that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 30th day of December, 1904, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning her to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 15th day of January next, to show cause, if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

VOLUME 28. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1904. NUMBER 42

TO PRESENT NAME OF B. A. RICHMOND

Prominent Attorney Will Be Urged for Appointment as Judge Alvey's Successor.

CUMBERLAND FRIENDS URGE HIM.

Some Upon Whom Support Will Be Counted.—He Is One of the Brainy Lawyers of Maryland and in the Prime of Life.

It is understood that the friends of Benjamin A. Richmond, Esq., of Cumberland, including most likely the membership of the Allegany county bar, will present his name to the President and recommend his appointment as the successor of Richard H. Alvey, who will soon retire as chief justice of the United States Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. Mr. Richmond has for years been regarded as one of the leaders of the bar of Western Maryland and easily one of the ablest lawyers in the state. There has been very little litigation of importance in Western Maryland in the past thirty years in which he has not figured. He is counsel for the Western Maryland and West Virginia Central railroads and the Gould interests in Maryland and represents about forty corporations in Allegany county. He has always been a profound student of the law and is now one of the bar examiners of the state. His friends believe that the bar of Maryland would generally approve the appointment of Mr. Richmond as one pre-eminently fitted to make an ideal justice of this court.

Mr. Richmond is now in the prime of manhood. His friends says they will leave no stone unturned in presenting his name in such a way that it will receive the most favorable consideration. It is understood that Mr. Richmond takes kindly to the use of his name in connection with the place.

JUDGE ALVEY TO LEAVE THE BENCH

Has Decided to Retire From District Court of Appeals December 31.

WAS APPOINTED TO PLACE IN 1893

In terest Keen as to Choice of His Successor.—Many Are Being Urged For the Place Soon to Be Vacant.

Richard H. Alvey, chief justice of the United States Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, will retire December 31. Judge Alvey at his home in Hagerstown stated he proposed sending to President Roosevelt this week notice of his retirement. He was sixty-seven years old when appointed by President Cleveland, in 1893, and is eligible for retirement at an annual salary of $7,500. It is estimated that he is worth $100,000.

For several years Justice Alvey.s health has been failing. Frequently of late he has been unable, by reason of illness to be on the bench. Judge Alvey said he knew nothing concerning his successor. It is understood a lively contest will be made for the place he vacates.

Judge Alvey has been at his home for ten days, but expects to return to Washington this week. He expects to clean up all legal business before him by the end of the year.

Judge Alvey is a descendant of English ancestors, who came to America with Lord Baltimore and settled in St. Mary's County. He was the eldest of the eight children of George Alvey, school-teacher and magistrate of St. Mary's county. He was born in 1826. When eighteen he became a clerk in the office of the court clerk of Charles county, studying law at night. In 1849 he was admitted to the bar. In 1850 he was moved to Hagerstown and has lived there since. He was associated as law partner with Judge John Thompson Mason and the late Gov. Hamilton. All this time he applied himself assiduously to increasing his legal knowledge. He soon occupied a front-rank position in the profession in Western Maryland.

He was nominated by the Democrats for state senator, and stumped Washington county, then strongly Whig. The result was a tie. In the second election he was defeated by only a few votes. In 1852 he was nominated a Pierce elector, and canvassed the state, which gave a large Democratic majority. When the civil war commenced he opposed secession, but felt that many of the grievances of the South were well founded.

In 1861 he was arrested by Union officers upon the charge of holding communication with the Confederates. He was sent to Fort McHenry, and finally to Fort Warren, Boston, and there held until February following, when he was permitted to return home on parole.

Judge Alvey after the war worked hard for restoration of rights of many Maryland citizens disfranchised. He drafted the present jury law for Maryland, and worked hard for its passage by the legislature in 1867. He was one of the leading figures in the Maryland constitutional convention. He was twice elected chief judge of the Fourth Maryland judicial circuit. His election made him a member of the Maryland Court of Appeals, of which he became chief judge in 1882. He retired in 1893 to take the chief judgeship of the District Court of Appeals. In 1895 President Cleveland appointed him a member of the commission to settle the boundary dispute between Venezuela and British Guiana.

Judge Alvey was twice married, first to Miss Mary Wharton, who died in 1860, and then to Miss Julia L. Hays. Nine children were born of the last union, among them being William Alvey, who lives in Washington.

The Washington Post says speculation has been rife among members of the local bar as to who Justice Alvey's successor will be when he retires, and several judges, who have been generally discussed for a long time as eligible candidates for the next vacancy on the appellate bench, are being talked of for the place in the event of Judge Alvey's retirement. Prominent among these are Hon. Stevenson A. Williams, of Belair, Md.; Chief Justice Clabaugh and Justice Gould, both of the District Supreme Court; Senator Louis E. McComas, of Maryland, and Attorney Charles C. Cole, both of whom were formerly justices of the District Supreme Court.

President Cleveland appointed Chief Justice Alvey to the District Court of Appeals at the time that court was organized. He was commissioned April 15, 1893, and qualified by taking the oath of office May 1 of that year. Before that time he had served as judge of the Sixth judicial district of Maryland and afterward as chief justice of the circuit. When in Washington he resides at 33 B street northwest, and has a beautiful place at Hagerstown, where he often goes for brief visits and for the summer months.

Despite the advanced years of the chief justice, he has been assiduous in his devotion to work on the local bench ever since his appointment to the place. He has rendered many notable opinions. Some attorneys believe that he will write the opinion of the Court of Appeals in the Machen-Lorenz-Groff post-office conspiracy case, although, of course, no one but the judge knows whether he will.

2,546,169 VOTES AHEAD

Roosevelt's Enormous Plurality Over Judge Parker.

The New York Times says A canvass by the New York Times of the popular vote at the last Presidential election, complete, except as to one county in Tennesee and four counties in Michigan, for which estimates are given, shows that President Roosevelt defeated Judge Parker by 2,546,169. He polled the largest vote ever given for a President of the United States, 7,640,560. This is more than 400,000 in excess of the vote cast for McKinley in 1900.

"The official figures for Missouri show that Roosevelt carried that State by 25,900 votes.

"A comparison with the popular vote table of 1900 shows a marked change in the Socialist vote. Debs, the candidate of the party that year, was also the candidate this year. His vote shows an increase of more than 300,000.

"Watson, the Populist candidate, ran strongest in his own State, Georgia, where he received 52,635 votes. He received most of his votes in the South and West, but only one was cast for him in South Carolina."

The total vote is given as 13,534,119, and that for each of the Presidental candidates is given as follows: Roosevelt (Republican), 7,640,560; Parker (Democrat), 5,094,391; Debs (Socialist), 392,857; Swallow (Prohibition), 248,412; Watson (Populist, 124,381, and Corregan (Socialist Labor), 33,519.

The electoral vote will be 336 for Roosevelt and 140 for Parker.

Married in Oakland.

Robt. Vogel and Miss Lewis, of Helvetia eloped and were married at Oakland, Md., last week. The girl's father attempted to thwart the young people's intentions by telegraphing the authorities in Oakland to arrest them, but when a young couple have the courage to leap Mason and Dixon's line for the privilege of "jumping the broom stick," telegrams availeth not. They were serenaded at Mr. Vogel's home last Saturday evening by several of his friends who were cordially invited to beer and lunch and all had a good time.—Tygarts Valley News, Elkins.

THE PINEY RUN OIL AND GAS COMPANY

Lot Deterred by Failure of First Well Putting Down Another Hole.

HAS REACHED DEPTH OF 325 FEET

Location Is a Short Distance Removed From Scene of First Operation—Well Will Also Be Sunk In Its West Virginia Holdihgs.

The Piney Run Oil and Gas Company started its second well on last Saturday in the meadows on the Stustz farm, about six miles north west of Finzell. Mr. Ira Logan of Rochester, Pa., has the contract and Lawrence McCandlus, James Morrow, William Schell and Frank Graham are the drillers and tool dressers. At this writing the well is down to the depth of three hundred and twenty-five feet, with fine prospects of success.

In the well which was abandoned by the company on account of the driller losing the tools in the well, and not being able to get them out, the drill penetrated five fine oil sands at different depths, the well having reached the depth of sixteen hundred feet when it was abandoned. According to the testimony of expert oil men when ever the sands are encountered in sinking a test well that is a sure indication of oil being found somewhere within the territory, though not always found in the first well.

Capt. James D. West, the noted scientist and geologist of the south, recently visited this territory and pronounced it fine oil territory. A Brazilian Government geologist recently visited this territory and gave the same testimony as Capt. West. The U. S. Government Geological Survey is getting samples from the well for the purpose of study and comparison, is being the first attempt to thoroughly test the country and the result is being anxiously awaited. The company expects to finish the well within the next month.

The Lincoln Oil and Gas Company recently completed a well just north of this tract and have a fine producing gas well which produces over one hundred thousand cubic feet of gas per day.

Just west of the company's land the Cambria Iron & Coal Co., of Johnstown, Pa., has secured ten thousand acres of land, erected a derrick and will shortly commence to drill for oil, having encountered a small flow of gas at a depth of four hundred feet while prospecting with a diamond drill.

The Piney Run Oil and Gas company will start its well in West Virginia on Monday, the 12th. This tract of land comprising of twenty-six hundred acres, lies in Gilmer county which is entirely surrounded by ninety thousand acres of land owned by the South Penn Oil Co. This is one of the choichest tracts of ore and gas lands in West Virginia, being seven miles from the Copley fields, where Copley gusher poured forth seven thousand barrels of oil per day, three miles from Indian Fork, where thirty producing wells pour forth their streams of wealth and but one and a half miles from Joes Run, where twenty producing wells give forth their greasy product.

The company is pushing the work rapidly and hope to have a good production in each field, which looks truly promising.

FIRE AT SWANTON.

Alarm Given Citizens by Passing Locomotive.

Fire on last Thursday night about midnight broke out in the blacksmith shop at Swanton, but was put out before much damage resulted. Considerable excitement was created for a time. The alarm was given by a passing locomotive and the night telegraph operator who fired his revolver several times, thus awaking the citizens of the village from their dreams.

Our correspondent states that those who had been reading the papers recently thought they were at Port Arthur, but after groping about with lanterns for a while they were attracted by the light in the old village blacksmith shop.

COL PEARRE WILL ENTER A PROTEST

Will Object in Congress To Giving Maryland's Vote To Parker.

He THINKS THE LEADERS ERRED

When they Decided To Abandon Contest In the State—The Doughty Colonel Will Not Submit To the Theft of the State's Vote

A special from Washington, Dec. 12, says:

"It is my intention when the electoral votes of the states are canvassed in Congress next February to arise and protest against the acceptance of the electoral vote of Maryland," said Representative Pearre today. Mr. Pearre was in his seat today for the first time this session, and from all his colleagues he received the warmest congratulations on his very evident return to complete health.

"I think the program of our party to abandon the contest against the action of the state canvassers in giving the certificates to seven Democratic electors is a grave error. We ought to have made the fight, and I propose to do what I can to bring about an investigation of the counting of the returns. I am convinced that the state went Republican, and I intend to see if we can't prove it. When the vote of Maryland is called I shall challenge it and give my reasons; and I shall ask that Congress appoint a committee to investigate the matter.

"I think the leaders of our party ought not to have laid down. We owe it to every Republican in the state who voted the Republican ticket on election day to at least try to get justice for him. A man has a right to cast his vote as he pleases and he has an equal right to have that vote counted as he cast it. What a pretty spectacle it is to claim that we Republicans carried the state and then tamely submit to have it stolen from us! I for one won't submit. If there is any way of having the election investigated I shall try to bring about an investigation, and if it accomplishes nothing more it it will at least prove to the Democratic machine in Maryland that there are some Republicans in Marylsnd who will not permit themselves to be cheated with impunity."

CUSTER FAMILY SUE FOR DAMAGES.

Relatives of Late Jarvis Custer Say Release Was Not Signed Willingly.

WAS STRUCK BY TROLLEY CAR.

Custer Died Soon After Settlement With Company. Was A Resident Of Garrett County. Defense Is that He Died Of Natural Causes.

Miss Amanda Custer and children, residing four miles north of Barton, in Garrett county have entered a suit against the Westernport and Lonaconing Electric Railway Company for the death of Jarvis Custer, aged 58 years, and will probably claim $10,000 damages. On November 11, 1903, Jarvis Custer, while driving his wagon across the trolley tracks at Pekin, was struck by a car and hurled some distance. He sustained cuts and bruises, his wagon was broken and his produce scattered about. He was able to return home after his injuries were dressed, one of the cuts requiring stitches and not long after he settled with Joseph S. Cofrode, superintendent of the road, for $100. Several days later Mr. Custer died. Mrs. Custer also signed the release. She claims that she was unwillingly compelled to do so, while the railroad people declare that the act of her husband and herself in signing was voluntary. They also claim that Mr. Custer died from natural causes. His injuries were dressed by Dr. M. Gibson Porter, then of Lonaconing, now residing at 414 Woodlawn Road, Roland Park, Baltimore. D. Lindley Sloan, Pearre & Lewis and David A. Robb are attorneys for the plaintiff. DeWarren H. Reynolds, Benj. A. Richmond and D. James Blackiston will represent the defense.

72 CANS POWDER EXPLODED.

Quite a serious accident occurred at the Buffalo Creek Coal Mine, near Bayard, W. Va., Saturday night when Henry Gay, a young man, twenty one years of age, went into the powder house and a spark from his torch fell into a can of powder, which caused an awful explosion, there being seventy-two cans of powder, all of which went off. Mr. Gay was burned badly but it is thought not seriously.

"THE SIMPLE LIFE."

A WORLD FAMOUS BOOK AND ITS AUTHOR, CHARLES WAGNER.

What President Roosevelt Says About the Volume—Interesting Career of the Disciple of Simplicity. How the Book First Made a Hit.

Charles Wagner, author of "The Simple Life," was practically made famous by President Roosevelt, author of "The Strenuous Life." Early in 1902 certain well known New York publishers brought out very quietly a translation of "The Simple Life." At first the book did not attract much attention, except among the literary few, but among the literary few was President Roosevelt. On him the little volume made such an impression that he referred to it in one of his public addresses as follows:

"The other day I picked up a little book called 'The Simple Life,' written by an Alsatian, Charles Wagner, and he preached such wholesome, sound doctrine that I wish it could be used as a tract throughout our country. To him the whole problem of our complex, somewhat feverish modern life can be solved only by getting men and women to lead better lives. He sees that the permanence of liberty and democracy depends upon a majority of the people being steadfast in that good, plain morality which as a national attribute comes only as the result of the slow and painful labor of centuries and which can be squandered in a generation by the thoughtless and vicious. He preaches the doctrine of the superiority of the moral to the material, but he insists, as we of this nation should always insist, upon the infinite superiority of the moral and the sordid destruction which comes upon either the nation or the individual if it or he becomes absorbed only in the desire to get wealth."

This public commendation from the president of the United States, who was the author of a book that seemed the very antithesis of "The Simple Life," aroused public curiosity, and in a very short time there was a large demand for the volume.

Charles Wagner is a popular evangelical in Paris, and it seems the height of incongruity that such a work should come from such a source. As Grace King says in her biographical sketch: "From the great metropolis and sovereign see of modern civilization, from the world's heart of sophistication, from Paris, the complex city, comes this volume of little essays upon the simple life. A limpid, bubbling spring, fresh and cool from its forest source, running down one of the boulevards would hardly appear more miraculous to the eye or more refreshing to the sense."

Wagner is a noted man in Paris, the kind of man whom people stare after in the streets. Among the dapper and undergrown Parisians he bulks large, with his great height and massive chest and shoulders. There are various legends, constituting a sort of little mythology, about his enormous physical strength and the feats supposed to have been achieved by him in his peasant days. For the rest he is described as a man of singular sweetness and straightforwardness of character, with a strong personal charm. He has a wide following, personal as well as ethical.

The early career of this noteworthy man is interesting. He is the son of a Lutheran minister of Alsace, born at Wibersville, in the Vosges, on Sunday morning, Jan. 3, 1852, while his father was preaching in the village church. He was only seven years old when his father died, and yet he was the eldest of five children. The family moved to Phalsbourg, and there Charles labored in the fields and studied for the ministry. He was sent to Paris at fourteen and took a degree at the Sorbonne in 1869. He was a student of theology at the University of Strassburg during the Franco-Prussian war, and there he underwent a sort of spiritual revolution, losing his religious faith. He read Spinoza and found in that philosopher something to compensate for what he had lost, but two simple incidents led to the restoration of his religious life.

One was the first sight of the Alps. The mountains seemed to him God's witnesses. The other event was something that has happened to nearly everybody—simply the sight of his mother on returning home after a long absence. She was there, loyal to her duty, doing her daily work with tranquil energy, never wearied and never discouraged, and the very thought of her brought quietude, content, faith.

He went from Strassburg to Gottingen in 1875, and from there he returned to Alsace and became assistant pastor at the foot of Ste. Odille mountain. His native place had been taken into the Prussian territory, his pastorate was within the new German frontier, and for the first time the political change began to weigh on him. There was no sense of political oppression, but a consciousness that intellectual independence was not possible for him in the conquered provinces. He set to work, therefore, to master the French language, accepted a position at Remiremont, in the French Vosges, and in 1882 went to Paris, where he entered upon a successful career as a minister and a literary man. "The Simple Life" is the best known of several works that he has written, though "Youth and Courage" and "The Better Way" are fairly well known to American readers.

After President Roosevelt spoke in complimentary terms of "The Simple Life" such interest in the book and its author developed in America that Rev. Mr. Wagner came across the Atlantic to lecture. One of the first men he called upon was President Roosevelt, and concerning the visit he wrote the following for Success magazine:

"I was particularly struck with the simplicity of the home life of the president. To one accustomed to viewing the pomp and ceremony which surround the rulers of Europe there seems to be something notable in the entire lack of ostentation in the Roosevelt family. I was surprised at Mr. Roosevelt's habit of inviting to his private dining table those who are doing good work in the world quite regardless of what their power or social position may be. He looks to the man himself rather than to his appurtenances, and this is a brushing away of the superfluities which is rare in men of his position. In Washington I saw his boys starting to a public school, and one of them did not even bother to wear a hat. This, of course, was a small matter, but it impressed me. In Europe the children of a ruler with not one-tenth of the power of Mr. Roosevelt do not go to school at all, much less to a public school. They have a corps of private tutors and rarely venture into the streets except in elaborate equipages.

"The observance of complete simplicity in his personal and family life by the president of the United States, one of the most powerful rulers on earth, has a wholesome influence not only upon America, but also upon the world at large."

When he landed in New York not long ago Rev. Mr. Wagner said:

"I love the American people. I wanted to see them in their own country and to know them personally. To obtain that end I learned their language, and here I am."

He referred to the kind of English he was about to speak, saying he had studied the English language only a short while ago to tell the American people of simplicity, and that if any "accidents" occurred it would not be by premeditation.

"I know that you are saying in your hearts that it is not possible to live the simple life in this great city of rushing thought and energy, this city of tremendous activities and skyscrapers," he said, "but I tell you that it is."

"It is possible to live the simple life on the twenty-fourth floor of a New York skyscraper in the midst of all the noise and confusion. The simple life is not a thing of the first floor or the fortieth, not of the shoes or the waistcoat, but of the heart.

"Once in Paris, that great city of dust and busy human life, I heard a lark singing in a garden. He was a prisoner, it is true. But when I heard him lifting up his voice to the blue sky and I remembered the freedom of the hills and the fields that had been mine as a boy, the walls and houses of the great city seemed to fade away, to stretch out and expand.

"I speak to you here in the center of one of the most tremendous cities in the world. I sing my song of simplicity like a lark in a cage—but it is a good place to sing it. The more I study your national character here in America, the more I look into the foundations of your government, the more I see of your stupendous energy, the more I realize that at the bottom of it all is the simplicity of your national character.

"I visited the White House at Washington. I found there nothing of the grandeur of the homes of kings and kaisers, but the pure simplicity of a great people expressed in the home of a chief executive. I was a guest of your president. I pressed his hand, and I had many long talks with him upon the great questions of the day. And again I felt that a splendid simplicity was at the root of your national character. Stay true to your traditions; be true to your convictions. The human race demands it of you."

Dr. Wagner told how he came to write "The Simple Life." He was called upon while a pastor in Paris to marry a workman and his sweetheart. One of the six witnesses was the daughter of a great politician.

"I talked to them upon the beauty of living simply," he said. "A few days afterward the young lady came to me to ask me to perform her marriage, and she asked me to give just the same talk that I had to the workman. There were to be 2,000 people present, including the greatest diplomats, the greatest politicians and the leaders in the intellectual and social life of Paris.

"I consented and talked to them simply and straightforwardly upon the simple life. There was a publisher present, as there always is, and the next day he asked me to write 'The Simple Life.' I did, and it has gone through the world everywhere. As for me, I intend to remain a boy, with a boy's heart, till I am an old, old man."

The author-clergyman's chapel in the Boulevard Beaumarchais, Paris, has grown from a quaint little upper room and is now too small to hold the crowds that flock to hear him, and generally more than 1,000 persons are turned away from the doors on Sunday.

The Bowsers' New Cook

He Puts In Practice Theories of His Own In Trying to Engage Her, but Without Success, and He Leaves the House In Disgust.

[Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure.]

UNTIL he got seated at the dinner table the other evening Mr. Bowser had no inkling that anything had happened in the house during the day. Then, missing the cook, he inquired what was the trouble, and Mrs. Bowser explained.

"I am sorry to say that Annie had to leave me this morning. Her father, who is an old man, met with an accident yesterday, and she had to go home to care for him for a few days. She may be gone two weeks, but will be back when she can."

"That's a pretty state of affairs, I must say!" he exclaimed as he laid down his knife and fork.

"But accidents will happen, you know."

"Do you know that an accident did happen, Mrs. Bowser?"

"Of course—that is, a boy came here with a note for Annie."

"Yes, a boy came here with a note for her, but I have no doubt that it was all planned out days beforehand. The girl simply wanted an excuse to get out of the house."

"But why?"

"Why? Why? Because you were grinding her under the heel of despotism, because never an hour in the day passed that you were not reminding her of her menial position, because you had no more feeling for her than a dog in the street. She was afraid that if she gave notice you would assault her with the poker or butcher knife."

"I WAS SENT FROM THE INTELLIGENCE OFFICE."

"You know nothing whatever about the matter," replied Mrs. Bowser, with a good deal of spirit. "No girl was ever better treated in a place. Annie has often said she never had as good a one. No one could have hired her away from me."

"It won't do, madam. Don't think that because I haven't said anything I have not had my eyes open. A dozen times a week I have heard you grinding away at that poor girl until my blood fairly boiled. It is no wonder that the working people of this country are on the eve of a rebellion. If I was a cook in your kitchen and you ground me under your heel as you have"—

"Don't you think I'm capable of managing our kitchen?" she interrupted.

"No, ma'am, I don't; far from it. You make every cook feel like putting poison in our coffee, and only for me some of them would have done it long ago. They see the difference between us. They see that while your object is to grind them into the earth mine is to lift them up and make their positions bearable."

"And yet the one we had before Annie came quit solely on your account. She told the girl next door that you were a man to be afraid of."

"By thunder, woman, but don't talk such nonsense to me!" shouted Mr. Bowser as he shoved back from the table. "No woman on the face of this earth ever made such a remark about me, and you know it. A man to be afraid of! Humph!"

"Well, they are going to send a cook this evening from the intelligence office, and I insist that you engage and manage her. While we don't think alike on the help question, your way is probably the best."

"Don't try to bluff me, Mrs. Bowser."

"I am not trying."

"It's not my business to hire cooks and run the kitchen; but, being you have acted so mighty snippy about it, I'll have a try for once."

Mrs. Bowser refused to continue the subject, and they had retired to the sitting room and half an hour had passed when the doorbell rang.

"That's probably your girl," she said to Mr. Bowser, who was lazily smoking and half asleep, "and you can interview her in the parlor. Don't call me in on any account."

"Don't you be afraid of being called in," he replied as he went down the hall and opened the door.

It was the new cook. She was a red headed girl, with the end of her nose tilting up, and any one but Mr. Bowser would have realized at a glance that no tyrant's heel had yet succeeded in pulverizing her to any extent, but to him she seemed to be humble and half heartbroken.

"I was sent from the intelligence office," she explained as she handed over her slip.

"Exactly, my dear young lady. Please come into the parlor. It has been a beautiful day, hasn't it? You are then obliged to take a menial position, are you?"

"I'm a cook, sir, and a good one."

"Yes, yes, but in a way that is a menial position. From your general appearance I should say that you had seen better days. I pity those who have once had every luxury and cultivated surroundings, but through misfortune have been thrown out upon the cold, selfish world to take care of themselves. However"—

"I have always worked, sir," replied the girl, "and if your wife is in I'd like to see her."

"I see. Yes. My wife is in, but unfortunately she knows nothing about employing help—that is, she has no sympathy with them."

"And who's asking for sympathy, sir? I want $16 a month for doing my work, and I'm not expecting the lady of the house to be weeping over me. If your wife is not in"—

"But she is in, only I prefer to engage a girl myself. Later on she will show you the kitchen and tell you what is expected of you. This is a place, I am glad to inform you, where we have a girl's welfare at heart. At least I do. While you may temporarily be occupying a menial position, I want you to know that I realize you have feelings, the same as I have."

"That's very kind of you, indeed!" sneered the girl.

"Now and then I shall come down into the kitchen to speak a word of cheer to you."

"Oh, you will!"

"And let you know that you are not forgotten in your solitude. Do you love to read? My library is open to you, and I shall take great pleasure in selecting the kind of literature you ought to read. Do you love music? If so, there is the piano in the back parlor. I shall have no objections to your going out of an evening, but I shall want to be sure of the character of your company. I shall feel myself in a sense responsible for you, you know."

"What sort of a shanty do you call this anyway?" asked the girl as she began to back off.

"Shanty? Shanty? My dear young lady"—

"I'm not a young lady."

"Then, my dear young woman, I am surprised at your language."

"And I am at yours. I am sent here to see the lady of the house and take a place as cook, but I meet you, and you begin to chin-chin a lot of nonsense. Don't take me for a spring chicken, sir."

"You came here to get a place as cook, and I am going to hire you," answered Mr. Bowser.

"Not unless I see your wife, and maybe not then. If I stop in this house you don't come chinning around the kitchen, and you can make up your mind to that."

"Chinning! My dear young woman, while Mrs. Bowser grinds the cook under her iron heel, I seek to elevate and cheer her. I was simply telling you that you should find a home here—some one to take an interest in you—some one to sympathize and encourage. You mistake me, it appears."

"Oh, no, I don't," replied the girl. "I want no old rooster buzzing around my kitchen, and it would be none of your business about my company. When I can't take care of myself, I'll not be asking advice from such as you."

"Such as me? Please explain."

"You're an old soft soaper."

"My dear young woman"—

"And I pity your wife."

"But you don't understand. I set out"—

"Yes, I know you did, and you may think yourself lucky if I don't tell the first policeman I meet. I sized you up in a minute for an old rascal, and I only stayed on to tell you my opinion of you. If you try to prevent me from leaving the house I'll arouse the neighborhood."

"My dear young woman"— he protested again.

"Rats!" she answered as she walked out and banged the door behind her.

Mrs. Bowser had heard all the conversation through the folding doors, and when the girl left she sat down and prepared to get off something sarcastic to greet Mr. Bowser. A quarter of an hour passed without his appearance, and then she entered the parlor to find him gone. He had put on his hat and made a sneak. The cat had also disappeared. A look from the front steps up and down showed that they were not in sight.

Four blocks away in the darkness of evening Mr. Bowser was walking up and down and wondering where it hit him, and the cat was following at his heels and wondering why he would never give up like a man when fairly licked.

CONSTIPATION

A Long Distance Marriage

By S. T. STERN

Copyright, 1904, by S. T. Stern

With most people the story ends after the heart interest has been properly adjusted. Thus: Proposal, acceptance, tableau, finis.

In our case the situation reversed it. I had suggested to Veryl, fervently, of course, that proper economy would sanction the practice of sending out her wedding invitations and my own in the same envelopes. With the money saved thereby I agreed to purchase outright a ring—a gleaming, glistening affair—with a large single stone. To this day I do not know whether she said yes. I have a vague impression that she said nothing at all. Presently I found myself seated by her side holding her hand, which leads me to suspect that some manner of affirmation must have greeted my proposal. We were engaged. With that our story starts. Thus: Proposal, acceptance, tableau, chapter one.

For the next few moments neither of us spoke. We sat gazing into the open fire, quiet and deliriously happy. Think of it—Veryl was mine, my very own!

"Of what are you thinking, dear?" said I at length.

"I am thinking of our wedding, John. It will be splendid to be married in England."

"England?"

"Of course," she replied. "Don't you remember? Father is at Matlock, in Derbyshire. When I last left him he exacted from me a solemn promise that I should never be married during his lifetime unless in his presence. I know, dear, it means a long trip for both of us and the absence of a great many of your friends from the ceremony. But dad has my promise, and it must be kept. Why, John, you are staring at me as though I had committed a crime. Don't—don't look at me like that. Are you afraid of the ocean voyage?"

"Not that, Veryl. The situation is worse—far worse. My mother is no longer young, and I am the last of the brood. When I told her last night what I expected to say to you she asked me to be married at once. 'Laddie,' she said, 'I am getting old, and before I go I want to see you married and settled down. Promise me, son, that you will be married as soon as possible, so that I can be here to see my boy united to the woman of his choice.' I promised."

"SHE LEFT FOR AMERICA LAST THURSDAY."

"But your mother can go to England with us, dearest."

"Impossible. She has a horror of the ocean that nothing can conquer. Why not bring your father to America?"

"If I waited for father to come to America to see me married, John, I must die a spinster. The last time we crossed it took him four months to summon up his courage to the point of embarkation. Three times we bought tickets; twice we forfeited our deposits. Once on shore, he assured me that he had suffered his last trip. John, you are such a resourceful, clever fellow that you must devise some way out of our dilemma."

At first I suggested to Veryl that half the ceremony be performed at Matlock and that we proceed by different steamers to America, where the remaining portion might be read. Veryl would have none of it. She had covenanted to be married in the presence of her parent—not half married. "And, besides, John," she added reproachfully, "if anything should happen to you on the return trip I would be a semiwidow." The lugubrious prospect of semiwidowhood invited tears, and I desisted.

The plan of marriage by cable, next advanced, met with like discouragement as being "too much on the order of an international chess tournament." Wireless telegraphy offered some slight prospect of solution, but Veryl objected on account of its uncertainty.

With the rattle of the first milk wagon on the street outside and its reminder that morning had arrived came the scheme that we finally adopted. Veryl was to go to England, I to remain behind in America. On the 14th day of June at high noon, Greenwich time, she was to stand before her father in Matlock and repeat her responses. At the same instant I agreed to go through the ceremony at my mother's home in Belmont. That necessitated a slight postponement of our honeymoon and the omission of a bridal procession. Veryl grieved over both features. I shared only half her sorrow.

As time went on Veryl became quite reconciled to our marriage plan despite the separation it involved. She is a most unconventional little person at all times, and the oddity of the arrangement doubtless appealed to her strongly. With me it was otherwise. The glory of our engagement was quite dimmed by the prospect of her departure for the other side. When she sailed on the 1st day of June my grief was abysmal. Mother has since assured me that for three entire days I ate not a morsel of food. My thoughts were with a certain ocean greyhound speeding over its Atlantic lane, and I read and reread nothing but storm reports and derelict statistics.

One Friday evening I found two small trunks in our front hallway. The maid informed me that they were there by order of my mother. When she came down for dinner that evening I noted at once an air of suppressed excitement about her, but I asked no questions.

"Son," said she after we had seated ourselves, "I bought your wedding present today. See?"

Imagine my astonishment when she held out for my inspection passage tickets for Southampton by next day's steamer.

"But, mother," I protested, "I cannot leave you. I intend to keep my promise. I know I am a selfish brute in acting as I have been doing, but I cannot help myself."

"Son," said my mother, "the Rodney is safe in every way. I have seen her captain, who is an old friend of your father, and he assures me his boat is perfectly seaworthy and that a trip at this season of the year is a mere pleasure jaunt. Yes, I am going with you. We sail tomorrow morning. Don't hug me like that! I go with you on one condition."

"And that is?"

"That our departure be kept a secret from Veryl. We must surprise her."

We had an uneventful trip. I remember very little of it. Some time during the second day we passed a lonely whale. He excited my sympathy at the time. Somehow, somewhere, we landed and took train for London. We rushed through London in a cab and found ourselves on another train. As near as I can remember we spent four months on that train, though mother says it was nearer five hours. Late that afternoon, she tells me, we reached Matlock. We climbed a long, steep hill and found ourselves in front of a very large and very gloomy hotel, bearing a gilt sign, "The Matlock Arms."

The next scene will abide with me to my dying day. A fat clerk stood in front of us and held out a long pen.

"Is Miss Veryl Preston at home?" I asked.

"No, sir."

"Where is she?"

"She left for America last Thursday with the general, her father. She said something about being married over there and planning a surprise for her fiance."

* * * * * * * *

Yes, we were married, after all. Veryl cabled that she was coming back at once after I had cabled my own whereabouts. She insisted on being married in England. I insisted on New York. We compromised on New York.

Both Astonished.

A boy, apparently a newsboy, with papers under his arm, was standing at Eighth and Market streets when a man hurriedly approached, slipped a paper from under the youngster's elbow, tossed a coin at him and then boarded a passing car. Instead of appearing pleased at having made a sale the supposed newsboy uttered a yell and started up the street in pursuit of the car, bawling "Stop thief!" at the top of his voice. He caught the car at Ninth street and rushed inside. "Gimme that!" he demanded, grabbing the paper away from the man who had taken it from him.

The boy swung off and walked away before the astonished passenger had recovered his self possession. Then matters were reversed, for in his indignation the passenger alighted and started after the boy. The latter made no attempt to escape. "You young rascal!" exclaimed the excited pursuer, collaring the lad. "What do you mean by taking that paper away after I bought it?" "Bought nothin'," said the boy defiantly. "I ain't sellin' papers. You went an' swiped me paper that I put over the boss' pictures to keep 'em clean. Look here!" And he turned the pages back, revealing to the surprised citizen several nice engravings stowed in between the leaves. It developed that the boy worked in an art store and was on the way there with the prints when the hasty individual mistook him for a newsboy and ran off with about $10 worth of art works.—Philadelphia Record.

A Coat For a Word.

A poor man may possess a wit so fine that it is capable of doing him a great deal of service and then wait a long time before an opportunity comes for him to exercise it profitably. This was the case with an elderly tramp who was once intrusted, for want of a better messenger, with an errand to the Duke of Bedford.

"Well, you're a queer fellow," said the duke on seeing him. "What is your name?"

"My name is Russell, your grace."

The duke laughed heartily, for his own name was Russell.

"And how about your coat of arms?" asked the duke. "Is that the same as the Duke of Bedford's?"

"Ah, your grace," said the man, "our arms may be much the same, but I fancy there's a slight difference in our coats!"

As this fact was only too apparent, the duke sent for a good coat of his own and gave it to the man.

Elasticity of the Constitution of the United States

By WOODROW WILSON, President of Princeton University

MUCH has been written lately as to the present day interpretation of the constitution of the United States, the cry being that it is not held in the esteem and veneration of years ago.

If that means that it is not interpreted by the supreme court of the United States as it was interpreted WHEN THE FATHERS HAD JUST FRAMED IT, then the critics are right. There is NO REASON why it should be so interpreted. The constitution was not made to fit us like a straitjacket.

IN ITS ELASTICITY lies its chief greatness. There were blank pages in it, into which could be written passages that would suit the exigencies of the day. It is constructed like one of our great modern buildings, where the nuts and bolts are so formed that they give sufficiently TO THE STRAIN put upon them.

As Kipling writes in his story of "The Ship That Found Herself," the different parts of the machinery cry to each other to give just a little under the tremendous pressure until finally she sails into port a great and harmonious whole, with every part working smoothly with every other part because the construction had been such as to allow it.

THE CONSTITUTION WAS NOT MADE TO HINDER US, BUT TO HELP US. IF IT WERE NOT SO WE WOULD LONG AGO HAVE SNAPPED THE CORDS.

The typical American is such a man as could live on our frontier. I would name Benjamin Franklin rather than Alexander Hamilton, for Hamilton, much as I admire him, was a transplanted European in his way of thinking. He was not such a man as could have formed a vigilance committee, but Franklin was the man for the frontier. If there wasn't any way to live HE WOULD HAVE INVENTED ONE.

Today our map makers say they could mark no frontier on the map of the United States. Since 1898 our frontier has been moved across the Pacific, and we can find uses for it, no doubt, just as we used the old frontier for the restless spirits who feel hemmed in by present restrictions.

What we need today is not irregular strength; WE WANT TESTED AND SCHOOLED STRENGTH. We have principles enough and ideals enough; what we need now is the method to apply our principles. We have been tolerably good mechanics, and we are now in the way to become skilled artists. Our task is to round off the product, to show it in its finished state.

Any man can be a reformer. It is easy enough to get into this chronic state of finding fault with existing conditions, but it is quite another thing TO PUT FORTH AN APPLICABLE REMEDY. If you want to make the reformer understand this, ask HIM to frame a bill, and after he has worked at it night after night he will be likely to tell you that he knows just exactly what he wants, but he'll be hanged if he KNOWS HOW TO EXPRESS IT.

I CONSIDER THAT IT IS NOTHING LESS THAN IMMORAL FOR A MAN TO ADVOCATE PULLING A STRUCTURE DOWN WHEN HE CANNOT TELL YOU WHAT TO PUT UP IN THE PLACE OF WHAT HE WOULD DESTROY.

The man of today MUST have a programme. Take this trust question, for instance. If our efforts are to be confined to "trust busting" we must approach the matter not only from the standpoint of wanting to wipe out a thing because it hinders us or because it grips us here or there. That is the ESSENCE OF SELFISHNESS, and we shall never arrive at anything by that route.

That subject, like all others, must be considered in a spirit of fairness, fairness to capital as well as to labor. We should no more seek to deprive a man of his accumulated wealth than to deprive the laborer of the fruits of his labor. If you want me to consider you witty, I may ask you to make a joke; if you want me to consider you wise, I will ask for some other show of that wisdom THAN YOUR MERE CLAIM TO IT. If we are groping today, we are groping not for principles, but for A WAY TO APPLY those principles which we have in plenty.

IT ISN'T AMERICANISM TO KNOW MY JOB BETTER THAN YOU KNOW YOURS, BUT TO HELP YOU WITH MY KNOWLEDGE TO MAKE YOU KNOW YOUR JOB BETTER. WE HAVE PLENTY OF MEN WHO ARE SKILLED AND SELFISH. WHAT WE NEED ARE MEN WHO ARE SKILLED AND PATRIOTIC.

The Mischievous Boy Is All Right

By Professor ZEPHANIAH HOPPER, Philadelphia High School

A BOY'S mischief is generally based on originality. He usually has something up his sleeve, so to speak, that is all his own—THE PRODUCT OF HIS CREATIVE GENIUS. It is this gift of originality and individual force that gives him prominence in after life, and not the mere fact that he is either mischievous or good.

ORIGINALITY GIVES HIM THE PLAN FOR SOME PRANK OR OTHER, AND THEN FORCE OF CHARACTER COMES TO HIS AID AND ASSISTS HIM IN CARRYING IT OUT.

It is INNATE FORCE OF CHARACTER that achieves success, and this forcefulness is apt to show itself in animal spirits and explosions of mischief.

Some of the most mischievous boys I ever saw are now prominent clergymen, of growing fame and influence.

Such boys are wrongly called BAD. They are simply full of energy, aggressiveness, hope and self reliance. They fight their way, if necessary, BUT THEY WIN IT.

THEY SEEM, AS A RULE, MORE CAPABLE OF PUSHING FORWARD IN LIFE THAN THE QUIET, RETIRING BOYS.

REV MR. GOODWIN IN THE SOUTH.

He Is Now Located at Green Cove Springs, Florida.

To the Editor of the Republican

In the dismal quiet of "this winter of our discontent" and general hunger for news in this snow bound zone, many of your readers, we are sure particularly those of Protestant Episcopal persuasion, will be cheered to have tidings of a former Oaklander, the recent Rector of St. Matthew's Parish, Garrrett county, Mr. L. E. Goodwin. He is alive and in robust health, and letters of his polished style and easy diction come to us in our mountains of ice from his pacific climate as visions of sweet summer days. After the services on the last Sunday in November Mr. Goodwin resigned, for the time at any rate, his Oakland pastorate to accept a most tempting call from Bishop Weed of the Florida See, and following a brief visit to Raltimore, left for the favored land of sunshine and flowers. He writes that his new home is Green Cove Springs, Clay County, Florida, on the west bank of the St. Johns river, a river four miels wide, a short distance above a railway connection of perhaps, less than twenty miles between the river and the time honored City of Spanish planting, St. Augustine on the Atlantic coast. Of all our Southern States Florida lies the most distant to the South, extending her arm out into the Atlantic billows as if in road and greeting of the Island of Cuba Green, Cove Springs is an abode of luxury and fashion, an apple in the eye of Southern admiration, and a Mecca sought by people of wealth and retirement from frigid Northern climates. This beautiful town is said to be blessed with an almost faultless climate; has a White Sulphur Spring gushing from a great depth three thousand gallons to the minute of limpid and beautiful water, a street railway with many other of the most modern advantages and equipment found in the best governed municipalities of this day and nation.

Mr. Goodwin's letter was dated Saturday, Dec. 3rd—a day of sleet and freezing with us—and stated that flowers were in bloom, leaves fresh, birds singing and the air as salubrious as Oakland's best summer days. He alludes to a warm welcome by a gentle bred and church serving people; of having in the Green Cove congregation not less than seven English families and a tributary charge about six miles distant but pleasantly reached by steamer on the St. John's river.

Now, Mr. Editor, in the abscence of a better amusement, stretch a line from a grassy plat in Green Cove Springs to the frost-capped altitude of Garrett—less than half the breadth of National domain—with a reporter ot each extremity jotting down the realities of the two communities. telling at the Green Cove Springs end of the fragrant breezes and mellow warmth, and the Garrett end of accumulated snows with the thermometer registering ten degrees below the zero mark, as it did today, and you will have more than an object lesson of the marvelous climatic and productive diversities of this matchless country so strangely and wisely tempered to every condition and need of man by the fashioning Hand of worlds.

TO ACT ON CANAL BIDS

Board of Public Works May Refuse to Sell.

The Board of Public Works will meet tomorrow to take farther action on the two bids which were made on December 1 for the purchase of the State's interest in the Chesapeake and and Ohio canal. It is quite likely that no definite action will be taken, and there is good reason to think that neither of the two bids will be accepted. It has been suggested that the Board, in selling, should safeguard the interests of the State and city as was done in the sale of the Western Maryland Railroad to the Fuller syndicate, and to do this it might be necessary to readvertise for proposals.

It is pointed out that during the administration of former Governer Lowndes a bid of $425,000 was rejected, and it is said that a Democratic Board could not afford to let the State's interest in the ditch go for $155,000, which is the bid of the Western Maryland Railroad Company, and the highest one now pending. It is known that two of the members of the Board of Public Works consider the bids grossly inadequate. The other bid is that of Mr. J. H. Wheelwright for $151,000 and is believed to be in the interest of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company.

The view generally entertained in railroad circles is that if the bid of Mr. F. S. Landstreet is accepted the closing of the deal will eventually be followed by some settlement between the purchaser and the trustees of the canal. Mr. Landstreet, although making the offer individually, it was explained by his counsel, is representing the Western Maryland Railroad. The canal trustees are accepted as the representatives of the Baltimore and Ohio.

If the sale is made the question then will be whether there shall be a legal fight that would prove costly to all concerned or a compromise by which the Western Maryland would be given all the rights of way it wants and the Baltimore and Ohio would get the State's interest in the canal. The belief that corporations don't engage in fights when they can be avoided encourages the belief that if a sale is made the two sides will quickly pave a way of getting together.

Governor Warfield announced today that the Board of Public Works will be glad to hear arguments from any one interested in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal when the Board meets at Annapolis tomorrow to decide whether it will accept or decline either of the offers made for the State's holdings in the waterway.

It is pointed out by those who favor a sale of the State's interests that bids were duly advertised for, and as $151,000 was the largest amount offered it is argued that no one is anxious to pay more; that as the matter stands now the canal is of no practical use to the State unless a large amount of money is spent to improve it, and this is not believed to be the desire of the taxpayers; that its value is in what somebody else will pay for it, and the two bids referred to were the highest offered, after extensive advertissng for several weeks in Baltimore and New York newspapers. It has also been suggested that there might be some connection between the offers made by the Western Maryland and the Baltimore and Ohio.

Governor Warfield wishes a very full and free discussion of the advisability of disposing of or retaining the canal, and any one who has logical reasons to advance pro or con will be willingly heard at Annapolis tomorrow. The Board will meet at 2 p. m. for the purpose of announcing its decision.

Resented the Compliment.

A Missouri paper wound up a compliment to a young schoolma'am with a good word about "the reputation for teaching she bears." The next day the young schoolma'am met the editor and chased him down the street with an umbrella, and at every jump in the road she screamed that she had never taught a she bear in her life.

MOLASSES IN WATER TANK

Engines Were Disabled By Making Taffy Instead of Steam.

Twenty-five tons of New Orleans molasses were dumped into the railroad water tank at Fairpoint, Ohio, in mistake for water Saturday morning, by a gang of Italian laborers. On account of the drought, the Baltimore and Ohio railroad has been running water trains to keep water station supplied. The water is hauled in oil tank cars and a tank containing molasses got mixed up in the train. The Italians unloaded the molasses into the big tank at Fairpoint.

The engineer at the pumping station did not discover the presence of the molasses for hours, and in the meantime several locomotives stopped and took on water. None of them got very far away before the heat in their boilers began to made taffy out of the molasses and the engines were rendered useless. When the fires were let down the sweet and sticky mixture began to congeal. Traffic between Wheeling and the Holloway terminal was handicapt for several hours.

For Improved Highway.

Dorchester and Caroline counties may be expected to file applications shortly for the surveying of certain roads under the state law. At a large meeting of tax-payers in Denton on Nov. 22nd, called by the County Commissioners, the latter were requested to take such steps as they deemed necessary to secure Caroline's quota of the state appropriation, which is $7,078.16, based upon the 547 miles of highways in the county, for which a like sum must be added by the county. The residents and tax-payers of Dorchester county also held a mass-meeting at Cambridfie on Nov. 29th, and urged the Commissioners to petition for Dorchester's allotment of $7,763.98 of the state road fund. Mr. A. N. Johnson, State Highway Engineer, explained the state road law, and Mr. George W. Woodford, president of the Board of County Commissioners, advocated the taking up of the appropriation by the county. The resolution to request the Commissioners to apply for the full amount of the state road fund was then made by Mr. Sewell M. Johnson, editor of the Democrat and News of Cambridge, and was immediately passed.

PIPE ORGAN HAS ARRIVED

New Instrument for St. Paul's Church Came In This Morning.

The new pipe organ for St. Paul's M. E. church, arrived here over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad this morning, coming direct from the factory at Brattleboro, Vermont. It will be unloaded from the car today and hauled to the church where it will be stored until men arrive from the factory to set it up, which will probably be within a very few days.

It is the desire of the church officials to have the instrument installed and ready for use at the Christmas services.

County Commissioners' Meeting.

The Board of County Commissioners will meet in Oakland on Tuesday, January 3rd, 1905, for the purpose of appointing road supervisors and constables for the succeeding year.

BITTINGER.

On Saturday night the thermometer registered near the zero point. This was followed by a bright, clear Sabbath, but this Monday brings us a return of storm conditions, and we have been experiencing a north-westerly blizzard throughout the day.

Ex-Deputy Sheriff Silas O. Wiley returned from Salisbury, Pa., last Tuesday and we learn is preparing to occupy the new Lutheran parsonage for the winter. Mrs. Wiley will remain in Pennsylvania for a few weeks longer.

Mr. Simon Maust, of Springs, Pa., was calling upon friends and relatives here part of last week.

Mr. Chas. Sechler went to Meyersdale last Monday to bring his sister Miss Lou up for a visit among relatives here.

A Polish priest from near Johnstown, Pa., drove to this place last Friday, and visited a village of foreigners located about a half-mile north of this place, where he performed some ecclesiastical duties.

Mr. Joel Brenneman, oldest son of Daniel D. Brenneman, died at his home near Grantsville, Monday afternoon, Dec. 13th. Mr. Brenneman was about 60 years old and is survived by his aged father, a number of sisters and brothers, who with the immediate family of the deceased have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends. This death was occasioned by pneumonia, which proved fatal within a few days of its attack.

Mr. C. E. Ellithorpe who has been quite sick for a few weeks, is improving rapidly, and his friends hope to see him out soon.

The Lutheran Sabbath school at this place will hold a special Christmas service on Saturday evening, Dec. 24th.

LEADING FLORISTS.

A Fine Establishment at Oakland Maryland.

One of the things that Western Maryland is proud of is the garden of the H. Weber & Sons at Oakland. These boys were raised in Cumberland and have done as much or more than any other persons in the country to develop high grade flowers.

Since the death of Mr. Weber the sons have carried on the business, which he established in a most mendable manner.

The REPUBLICAN is in receipt of a price list from them for their Christmas flowers. One thing noted on the price list is candy, an entirely new departure, but it is evident from the statements made by the Weber boys that this candy is as good as their flowers which their father and themselves have sold for a generation.

HUTTON.

The themometor registered 14 below zero here Sunday morning.

The Garrett Leather Company is installing another 150 horse power boiler.

C. Grusendorf holds the pig prize here, an eight month's old one dressing 352lbs.

Mrs. U. G. Palmer has just returned from a ten days visit to friends in northern Pennsylvania.

This town has become the scene of much sneak thieving, manifesting itself by raids on chicken coops, coal bins and smoke houses.

Mr. Forney manager of the Boston selling department of Swift and Company, the big Chicago packers spent a day at the tannery here last week.

John A. Connell and family are again bone fide residents of Hutton after several years residence at Crellin.

The supply of water in this section for domestic purposes is the lowest known for many years, and at this writing it looks like a veritable famine.

The People's Telepone company will begin next week to string a through telephone line to Kingwood. There has been no connection between that city and Morgantown for several weeks, and subscribers have felt the inconvenience. The service will be free to subscribers for all parts of Preston county. When the Kingwood line is completed, the People's 'phone will have connection with Cumberland, Keyser, Piedment, kins, Belington, Philippi, and other towns in the adjacent sections of Maryland and West Virginia. The company is about to issue a new and complete directory, which will be placed in the hands of the subscribers. —Morgantown Dominion.

Plucky Pat Finzel, not to be outdone by a streak of bad luck by which the tools in the oil well near his home was lost early in the fall, has begun the boring of another hole in the territory nearby. His many warm friends throughout the county wish him the success his perseverence and vim merits.

Died

WILT—Mrs. John H. Wilt died Friday night, December 9th, 1904, at the residence of her late husband, about three miles north of Swanton, aged about sixty-five years. Interment took place at Swanton Monday, December 12th, 1904.

SMALLPOX AT ELDER.

Family of John H. Sterling Stricken With the Disease.

At Elder, some twenty miles north of Oakland between Hoyes and Friendsville, there are at present three well developed though mild cases of smallpox, the victims of the disease being members of the family of John Henry Sterling, a well-to-do and highly respected farmer of that section of the country.

Early in November Mr. and Mrs. Sterling visited Mr. Sterling's brother at Kingwood and while there a member of the family they were visiting was taken ill. The cause of the illness was not known until after they had returned to their home when the physicians pronounced it smallpox. A short time after leaving Kingwood Mrs. Sterling was also taken ill but was not attended by a physician and in a few days she had recovered her usual health except for an eruption of the skin which was thought by her to be chickenpox. Last Friday three of her children were taken ill and Dr. Mason, of Friendsville, was called to attend them. Upon seeing the patients he suspected the disease to be smallpox but not having much experience with the disease was not fully convinced. To guard against any possible infection being imparted to others, however, he established a quarantine over the premises and it is thought that no cases will develop.

This morning the three Sterling children are improving.

Owing to the death of Mrs. Thurston, the mother of Mrs. A. Hunter Boyd, wife of Judge Boyd, and the illness of Judge Henderson, the December term of the Circuit Court for this county did not convene on Monday as is the practice, but was postponed until today when Chief Judge Boyd came up to Oakland and opened Court. Very little business will be transacted, the session being a non-jury term.

Indications point to a great scarcety of turkeys for the holidays. In years prior to this many of the farmers were around town at this season of the year taking orders for the fowls but this year marks an exception to the rule. Chickens seem very plentiful even now and nicely dressed ones are selling at 12½ cents per pound. Turkeys, what few there are of them in the country will bring anywhere from twenty to twenty-five cents per pound.

The stockholders of the Garrett County Telephone Company will meet at Hoyes on January 14th for the purpose of considering a proposition to increase the capital stock of the corporation to three thousand shares and at a par value of $10 per share, thus making the capital stock $30,000, which additional funds will be used to further extend the lines of the company and make some extensive improvements to the lines already erected and in operation.

Mr. J. Fletcher Friend, of Swanton, accompanied by his son, Mr. L. H. Friend, who was so seriously injured in a runaway accident near Oakland several weeks ago and lay for several days in precarious condition at the hospital here and later at his home at Swanton, were Oakland visitors yesterday. Mr. Friend, Jr., though still quite weak as a result of his injuries and wholly incapacitated from attending to business, is slowly recovering.

Mr. Truman West, owner of the West Hotel, which property has been vacant since early in the fall, is making extensive repairs to the house and it will be occupied within a short time by an up-to-date hotel man. The closing of this old hostelry which has been one of the landmarks of Oakland for more than half a century, inconvenienced a great many people who had been patrons of it for many years. When it is reopened it will be newly furnished throughout and many conveniences which it lacked in former years will be added.

James Truly, the faithful colored porter at the Commercial hotel in Oakland, is lying dangerously ill at his home on Water street with an acute attack of pneumonia. The sick man has been a familiar figure about Oakland for the past forty years or more. He is probably better known by the traveling public than any other colored man in Maryland or West Virginia, having been connected with the Glades Hotel in its balmiest days and for the past ten years or more he has occupied the position of porter at the Commercial.

Members of the Methodist and Lutheran Sunday schools in Oakland are making extensive preparations to properly observe the approaching Holiday season. In the Methodist church a special program prepared for the occasion consisting or songs, readings, recitations, etc., will be rendered in which the children, especially the younger ones, will have the leading parts. In the Lutheran church a program similar has been prepared and the parts are being rehearsed by the members of that school. Both entertainments will take place in the respective churches on Christmas eve.

NO CONTEST FOR MARYLAND VOTE

Republicans Will Make No Effort in the Electoral College.

It has been settled that there will be no contest made by the Republicans for the electoral vote of Maryland.

Within a few days Chairman Hanna will issue a statement practically in the form of an address to the people of Maryland. This address will recite the partisan character and unfairness of the present election laws, and particularly of the Wilson ballot law, which applies only to certain counties, and was admittedly passed by the Democrats in order to virtually disfranchise illiterates in Southern Maryland and in parts of the Eastern Shore.

Mr. Hanna's statement will include the result of the investigations made by him and the Republican advisory board since the last election. This will be based on reports made by precinct watchers and challengers from about 50 per cent. of the precincts of the State, those from the Eastern Shore being especially full, because a more thorough inquiry was made there to get grounds for a contest on the part of Congressman William H. Jackson. This will be largely a recapitulation, with more detail of statements which have appeared from time to time in the newspapers. The trick ballots used in some of the Wilson bill counties will be reviewed, and statements from other counties showing the number of instances in which the intentions of voters were evidently defeated through technicalities which caused the rejection of their ballots will be tabulated. It is expected to show that if all ballots intended to have been cast for the Republican candidates had been so counted the whole eight Republican electoral candidates and Congressman Jackson would have been returned elected.

The conclusion will be that the only way in which to get a fair ballot law will be to elect a Republican Legislature next fall While the Republicans may gain the House of Delegates, and are practically certain to do so if the Poe disfranchising amendment be pushed by the Democrats, it will be more difficult for them to control the Senate, as there will be so many holdover Democrats in that body. They cling to the hope, though, that there may be enough fair-minded Democrats to join with them in removing the abuses now existing.

This course, the Republican leaders believe, will be more practical and will result in more real benefit to them than a contest, which could gain them nothing and could, at best, be only academic in its nature.

The Country Circus

By CAROLINE DUER

Copyright, 1904, by Caroline Duer

DOLLY and I were out in the fields when the circus troupe went down the least road preparatory to its triumphal march up the main street of the village. It was a poor enough little procession—a white band wagon, carved and painted to represent a swan, between whose widespread wings five shirt sleeved men played indifferently upon different instruments; a cavalcade of six horses, three of them ridden by men in tawdry red and yellow uniforms and three by women, whose trailing white satin habits brushed the dust from the bushes by the roadside; three small vans with looking glasses let into the sides, all scarlet paint and tarnished gilding, purporting to conceal the cages of wild beasts; a Roman chariot, driven by a stalwart lady in a purple gown; two clowns on bicycles bearing aloft a red lettered advertisement, and, lastly, a little tail of such unemployed youngsters as had been able to escape from the hard handed wrath of incensed mothers.

As the last stragglers disappeared round the corner we were aware of a little cart drawn by a lazy, learned looking donkey and containing a dark haired young woman, who held on her knee a little child, whitened, painted and pantalooned like a clown. By her side was a boy of about fifteen, who divided his attention between driving the donkey, which seemed loftily unconscious of him, and admonished the young woman, who appeared hardly more heedful, for her head was turned away, and every now and then she sang a snatch of song to the baby clown in her arms.

Every word they said was blown by the south wind straight to our ears.

"You'd better drop it, Minna," observed the boy. "I tell you the old man's on to you, and he's been watchin' you closer 'n a cat for I dunno how long. If it wasn't for the kid he'd have given Jim the sack a week ago."

"Would he?" said the young woman defiantly. "Well, maybe Jim wouldn't have gone."

"Oh, go'n!" cried the boy, but whether to the girl or the donkey seemed doubtful. "You make me tired. Ain't he good to you—the old man?"

"Off and on," returned she pettishly.

"Well, it'll be more off than on if you keep foolin' with a married man, though he is the smartest high flier on the bars and the father of 'Master Snow, the youngest livin' clown.'" And he stroked the child's nose gently with the whip. "See here, Minna, you liked the old man good enough when he first took a notion to you. You held your head up to beat the band when you begun to be affianced to the boss of the whole bloomin' show. What's the matter with you?"

SHE SANG A SNATCH OF SONG TO THE BABY CLOWN.

"I didn't know Jim then," returned the young woman shortly.

"Oh, that's it, is it?" said the boy in high disdain.

"Yes, that's it," doggedly.

The little cart moved on. At the corner of the road the young woman and the boy got out, the boy walking by the donkey's head and the young woman keeping near the child, who stood up bravely in his dazzling white and red spotted apparel, holding the reins and brandishing the whip.

"I am going to the circus, Aunt Pauline," announced Dolly with the assurance of one whose wishes have only to be made known to be gratified.

We bought red, shiny tickets from an unseen person in a covered wagon and, following the crowd through the narrow, roped way to the opening of the large tent, gave them up to a huge, crippled man who sat there on a wooden stool, with his crutches leaning against the canvas wall behind him.

I felt at once that I was in the presence of the "old man," the "boss of the whole bloomin' show"—Joshua B. Crane himself. His face was pale, square and determined, his thick eyebrows and hair were very black, and his shaved chin was of a deep blue. His shoulders and arms were muscular and powerful, but his right leg dragged stiff and distorted from the hip socket, and I thought I saw in his wrinkled forehead and the lines about his mouth the signs of irritability born of long pain and impatiently endured discomfort.

We passed by him into the tent and by Dolly's orders scrambled to the highest pinnacle of this paradise, whose gayly carpeted gateway was presided over by the pretty, furtive eyed, discontented looking Minna, and from that vantage point we complacently surveyed our surroundings.

A blast of melody announced the grand entry, and in a minute the six horses which had formed part of the procession earlier in the day were cantering heavily round and round the ring, nose to tail, while their riders smiled the fixed, hackneyed smile of fatigue and long habit.

As there was no room in the ring for further evolution, the equestrians trotted out, and during the slight pause which followed I recognized the boy who sold peanuts and popcorn as the very same who had driven the donkey cart and admonished Minna. He seemed to be somewhat undressed about the throat and to be wearing something light and spangly under his coat, from which I gathered that he was to appear later in a more glorious capacity. Nor was I mistaken, for after a muscular lady in purple tights had twisted herself in and out among the rings and swung head downward hooked by her white kid boots, after the ringmaster had held a most spirited conversation with a red headed countryman (who wanted to buy a giraffe of almost human intelligence and extraordinarily human legs), I beheld the young gentleman being tossed like a bag from the feet of one prone pink acrobat to another, apparently as composed as when he had been offering advice to unreasoning womanhood in the morning.

After this the band played galloping music to an empty ring. Then the curtains parted, and the baby clown came running in, followed by a man also in clown's dress. Their costumes were identical except that while the man wore only the usual white skullcap the baby had a tiny black chimney pot perched on the side of his head. He came trotting straight to the edge of the ring nearest us, and there he blew a shrill blast on a tin trumpet which he held in his hand. This the elder clown took away, with a mock warning to make no more noise. Another was promptly produced from the voluminous pocket, and this also was removed. After the child had been deprived of six in succession the man threatened to thrash him and then, pretending to listen, cried in surprise: "What! You want to fight me?"

"Yes," piped the baby clown, straddling to the right. "Come over here." But the ground did not suit, and again the little, shrill voice could be heard inviting his tall opponent to "come over here." But the left, it appeared, was no better.

"Hello!" says the man. "This won't do. You're making a fool of me. I want to fight, I tell you."

"Then you must run like the dickens!" cries the child and scampers out of the ring.

This produced such a burst of applause that Master Snow had to be brought back, and there, held on the shoulder of the big clown, while the band played a soft, wheezy accompaniment, he sang the song I had heard Minna teaching him on the road:

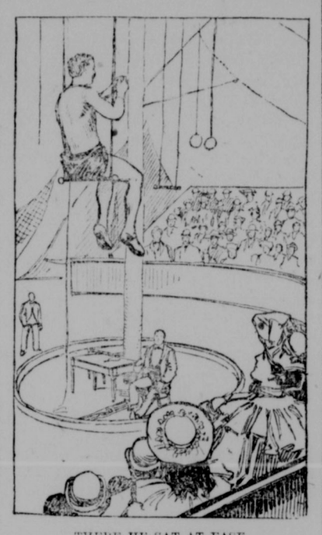
"Oh, the badger and the bear and the monkey and the hare
And the bonny birds a-singing in the greenwood tree,
And the charming little rabbits, so engaging in their habits—
And they all have a mate but me, but me,
And they all have a mate but me."

Against the brown dimness of the tent shadows the white figures stood out with the boldness of a chalk drawing. The expression of the man's face was infinitely amused, but sad and tender, as he listened to the clear little voice quavering on the last notes. When the song was finished and the clapping had ceased he let the little creature slip down into the hollow of his arm, bade him bow to the audience, bowed twice himself gravely from right to left and then walked out of the ring and disappeared between the curtains. A murmur went about that he was the child's father, as indeed I had been sure from the moment I saw them together, and presently photographs of Mr. James Snow and Master James Snow, "the youngest living clown," began to be circulated by the industrious popcorn boy, who had again resumed the outer shell of respectability. There were some of the father alone in the acrobatic costume in which he was to appear later as the "smartest high flier on the swinging bars," some of the child in clown's dress and some of the father and child together as I had just seen them. Dolly bought one of the child alone and I of the two together, and I would not part with it now for a good deal.

During the next act (the flight of a shaggy pony through hoops of fire) we noticed Master Snow, divested of his motley attire and dressed in a blue jean blouse, being put cozily to sleep by Minna in a little white hammock hanging near the entrance of the tent. He appeared to be of a placid disposition and used to take his afternoon nap in public, for he settled down contentedly as soon as she had lifted him in and never moved after she covered him up with what appeared to be one of her own jackets. For a long time she stayed by him, seated in a little rocking chair, swaying herself and the hammock lazily to and fro, and by and by I saw a man's figure, coated to the heels, but revealing a flash of scarlet when it turned, slip out from the curtain and join her.

And as I looked I also saw in the background Mr. Joshua B. Crane leaning on his crutches, and his expression as he watched what I watched was by no means a gentle one.

He was now in evening dress, and the prim ceremoniousness of the black and white seemed as oddly incongruous with the time and place as with his harsh, rugged face, straining shoulders and dragging leg. He was to perform some juggling tricks, and as he swung himself slowly forward toward the stool which had been placed for him in the middle of the ring he made an impatient motion with his head, signing that the table containing his implements should be set nearer. Whatever else he had been before he met with the accident which lamed him, he was at least a good juggler. His power over inanimate objects was amazing. He twirled a flaming hoop round and round on a paper parasol; he surrounded himself with a halo of glancing knives; he played with cannon balls as if they were marbles and broke chains by expanding his chest; he kept a bag, an open umbrella and a bit of paper circling in the air before him.



THERE HE SAT AT EASE.

It was pathetic in a way to see this broken giant sitting alone in the squalid little ring amusing his audience with sleight of hand tricks.

When we clapped he picked his crutches up from the ground beside him, fitted them under his arms, rose, bowed and sat down again.

The ringmaster now announced that one of the most remarkable feats of marksmanship in the world, "shooting the eye out of the ace of spades," was about to be performed by Mr. Joshua B. Crane, assisted by that celebrated aeronaut, Mr. James Snow.

The figure by Minna dropped its long coat and shot out into the ring, all scarlet and gold, beautiful, supple, graceful—altogether a startling contrast to the big juggler in his ill fitting evening dress.

In a minute the ringmaster and the one attendant had run Jim up to the trapeze, and there he sat at ease, rubbing his hands and looking out over our heads through the space between the roof and the sides of the tent to the strip of afternoon sky.

It had grown dark, and I heard the growling of distant thunder. Others heard it, too, and some of the people began to straggle out.

"It seems so rude to go, doesn't it, Aunt Pauline?" said Dolly. "We're going to stay, aren't we?"

"If you like, dear."

"But are they going to make a noise with pistols—are they?"

"Only for a minute."

"I think perhaps we might go, Aunt Pauline, and come back when they have finished. I hate firing."

We began to descend, Dolly holding her ears with both hands and pausing now and then to stamp with her feet, like a horse in high action.

The air seemed full of electricity, the sky grew darker and the thunder sounded nearer. The people appeared to be in several minds about leaving. Some of them sat still, some of them stood up in their places and some moved in groups toward the entrance.

In the ring the black figure raised its pistol, and above on the trapeze the red and gold one stood erect, holding a card in its outstretched hand. Crack! The card fluttered to the ground, and the ringmaster, picking it up, showed that a clean hole had been made through the center of the black ace.

"Isn't it over?" shouted Dolly, not removing her hands from her head.

I nodded, but at the same moment the ringmaster announced:

"He will now shoot the middle out of the three spot while the trapeze is in motion."

This sounded more interesting, and the exodus, which had become more general, ceased for a minute. The people nearest the entrance even sauntered back. Dolly's eyes reproached me, and her hands flew up.

The trapeze began to swing to and fro, faster and faster. The band played recklessly a medley of everything it knew. The pistol shot rang out again, the card fluttered down, the sweep of the scarlet figure continued for an instant, and then, just as the applause burst out, there were a snap and a shout and the dull sound of a body striking against wood.

The man was caught and wedged between the juggler's table and the center pole of the tent, a limp red bundle.

The crowd swarmed into the ring, and they lifted him and then laid him down again quite close to where I stood, hemmed in so that for the moment movement was difficult, but doing my best to shield Dolly from the sight. He was very pale, but his eyes were open, and he spoke to the juggler, who was leaning on his crutches near by.

"You'd given me the sack anyhow, governor," he said.

"The rope broke! It was an accident," whispered Crane hoarsely.

"You didn't use to play that trick with a real bullet, did you? Well, never mind. I'd as lief be here as tramping for another job. Let Minna look after the kid, will you? I guess his mother 'll never trouble you; she hasn't me for years."

"Is there a doctor here?" roared Crane.

I saw Dr. Dampier's gray head and broad shoulders zigzagging through the crowd. He had left his children at the entrance and was making his way back as quickly as he could.

As I hurried Dolly out of the tent I saw Minna forcing her way into the ring, but Master Snow still slept contentedly in his white hammock all alone.

THE CORN SONG

By John Greenleaf Whittier

HEAP high the farmer's wintry hoard!
Heap high the golden corn!
No richer gift has Autumn poured
From out her lavish horn!

Let other lands, exulting, glean
The apple from the pine,
The orange from its glossy green,
The cluster from the vine.

We better love the hardy gift
Our rugged vales bestow,
To cheer us when the storm shall drift
Our harvest-fields with snow.

Through vales of grass and meads of flowers,
Our ploughs their furrows made,
While on the hills the sun and showers
Of changeful April played.

We dropped the seed o'er hill and plain
Beneath the sun of May,
And frightened from our sprouting grain
The robber crows away.

All through the long bright days of June
Its leaves grew green and fair,
And waved in hot midsummer's noon
Its soft and yellow hair.

And now, with Autumn's moonlit eyes,
Its harvest time has come,
We pluck away the frosted leaves,
And bear the treasure home.

There, richer than the fabled gift
Apollo showered of old,
Fair hands the broken grain shall sift,
And knead its meal of gold.

Let vapid idlers loll in silk
Around their costly board;
Give us the bowl of samp and milk,
By homespun beauty poured!

Where'er the wide old kitchen hearth
Sends up its smoky curls,
Who will not thank the kindly earth,
And bless our farmer girls!

Then shame on all the proud and vain,
Whose folly laughs to scorn
The blessing of our hardy grain,
Our wealth of golden corn!

Let earth withhold her goodly root,
Let mildew blight the rye,
Give to the worm the orchard's fruit,
The wheat-field to the fly:

But let the good old crop adorn
The hills our fathers trod;
Still let us, for his golden corn,
Send up our thanks to God!

MAN'S IMMORTALITY

Author Unknown

LIKE a damask rose you see,
Or like a blossom on a tree,
Or like the dainty flower in May,
Or like the morning to the day,
Or like the sun, or like the shade,
Or like the gourd which Jonah made:
Even such is man, whose thread is spun,
Drawn out and out, and so is done.
The rose withers, the blossom blasteth,
The flower fades, the morning hasteth,
The sun sets, the shadow flies,
The gourd consumes, the man—he dies.

Like the grass that's newly sprung,
Or like the tale that's new begun,
Or like the bird that's here today,
Or like the pearled dew in May,
Or like an hour, or like a span,
Or like the singing of the swan:
Even such is man, who lives by breath,
Is here, now there, in life and death.
The grass withers, the tale is ended,
The bird is flown, the dew's ascended,
The hour is short, the span not long,
The swan's near death, man's life is done.

Like to the bubble in the brook,
Or in a glass much like a look,
Or like the shuttle in a weaver's hand,
Or like the writing on the sand,
Or like a thought, or like a dream,
Or like the gliding of the stream:
Even such is man, who lives by breath,
Is here, now there, in life and death.
The bubble's out, the look forgot,
The shuttle's flung, the writing's blot,
The thought is past, the dream is gone,
The waters glide, man's life is done.

Like an arrow from a bow,
Or like a swift course of water flow,
Or like the time 'twixt flood and ebb,
Or like the spider's tender web,
Or like a race, or like a goal,
Or like the dealing of a dole:
Even such is man, whose brittle state
Is always subject unto fate.
The arrow shot, the flood soon spent,
The time no time, the web soon rent,
The race soon run, the goal soon won,
The dole soon dealt, man's life soon done.

Like the lightning from the sky,
Or like a post that quick doth hie,
Or like a quaver in a song,
Or like a journey three days long,
Or like snow when summer's come,
Or like a pear, or like a plum;
Even such is man, who heaps up sorrow,
Lives but this day and dies tomorrow.
The lightning's past, the post must go,
The song is short, the journey so,
The pear doth rot, the plum doth fall,
The snow dissolves, and so must all.

THE TWO ANGELS

By Henry W. Longfellow

TWO angels, one of Life and one of Death,
Passed o'er our village as the morning broke;
The dawn was on their faces, and beneath,
The somber houses hearsed with plumes of smoke.

Their attitude and aspect were the same,
Alike their features and their robes of white;
But one was crowned with amaranth, as with flame,
And one with asphodels, like flakes of light.

I saw them pause on their celestial way;
Then said I, with deep fear and doubt oppressed,
"Beat not so loud, my heart, lest thou betray
The place where thy beloved are at rest!"

And he who wore the crown of asphodels,
Descending, at my door began to knock,
And my soul sank within me as in wells
The waters sink before an earthquake's shock.

I recognized the nameless agony,
The terror and the tremor and the pain,
That oft before had filled or haunted me,
And now returned with threefold strength again.

The door I opened to my heavenly guest,
And listened, for I thought I heard God's voice;
And, knowing whatso'er He sent was best,
Dared neither to lament nor to rejoice.

Then with a smile that filled the house with light,
"My errand is not Death, but Life," he said;
And ere I answered, passing out of sight,
On his celestial embassy he sped.

'Twas at thy door, O friend! and not at mine,
The angel with the amaranthine wreath,
Pausing, descended, and with voice divine,
Whispered a word that had a sound like Death.

Then fell upon the house a sudden gloom,
A shadow on those features fair and thin,
And softly, from that hushed and darkened room,
Two angels issued, where but one went in.

All is of God! If He but wave His hand,
The mists collect, the rain falls thick and loud,
Till, with a smile of light on sea and land,
Lo! He looks back from the departing cloud.

Angels of Life and Death alike are His;
Without His leave they pass no threshold o'er;
Who, then, would wish or dare, believing this,
Against His messengers to shut the door?

Reflections.

[A birthday soliloquy.]

AGAIN my natal day is here,
When conscientiously I peer
Into the looking glass to see
If this past year has brought to me
Some wrinkles. Every woman knows
And dreads them as her deadliest foes!
Full well, I vow, a spinster maid,
Whose looks are her best stock in trade,
Feels like demanding days of grace
When her sole fortune is her face
And prays that Father Time would stop
And once forget to wind his clock.

So I survey my face with care.
Thank goodness, there's not one gray hair
The animation in my eyes
My (——)-and-twenty years belies.
Dear me, a tiny crow's foot shows!
Well, let that pass—under the rose—
I really think it does no harm,
But adds a certain knowing charm
And makes me look as though I knew
An interesting thing or two.
It costs, I've found, to take a look,
When learning from Experience's book!

But on the whole, I think I'll pass.
Small thanks to you, my looking glass,
For you would frankly show to me
Were I passe—but now I see
No cause for grave alarm as yet.
Still, meantime I must not forget
That tempus fugits, and 'tis wise
To snare a matrimonial prize.
A woman grows to be so sage,
Whose birthdays count up to my age;
So just as quickly as I can
I'm going to settle on "the man;"
Then, if when next year rolls around,
Still on the family tree I'm found,
'Twill be my only course, I fear,
To change my birthdays to leap year!
—Mazie Virginia Caruthers in New York Times.

His Temporary Story.

"Do I understand that you were a soldier in the civil war?" queried the pedestrian of the one armed man who had asked for alms.

"Well, I thought I was up to yesterday, but now I dunno," was the reply.

"What happened yesterday?"

"Why, one of these fellers you call statisticians doubted my story and soon figured out that I was only six months old when the war broke out and consequently couldn't have been there. I've got to get up something new, I suppose, and meanwhile, as a temporary thing, you can put it down that I tried to make a short cut by crawling under a street car and in that way lost this arm."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Not Guilty.

Sunday School Teacher—Tommy, can you tell me who threw the stone that struck Goliath?

Tommy—Ye kin search me. Our street 's all tore up, an' dey ain't no automobiles.—Brooklyn Life.

A Serious French Duel.

"Yes, William was passing by a vacant lot some place in Paris where one of these French duels was going on."

"And what did William do?"

"He looked on while the principals jabbed the air with their swords. Finally he got tired and was going away when they brought out pistols."

"Yes."

"Both fired at the word, and one shot grazed a tree in the next field, and the other tore a hole in William's hat."

"What did William do?"

"He got mad and chased the whole party two miles through the woods, but the only man he could catch was the doctor."

"What did he do to the doctor?"

"He kicked a hole in his surgical case, traded hats with him and let him go."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Mrs. Hyems—It isn't so bad as you might expect. It costs us more, of course, to have our butter and fresh vegetables brought out to us from the city, but we don't have to entertain nearly as much company.—Scottish American.

A Puzzled Parent.

"It is a difficult problem," said the conscientious man, "very difficult."

"What is worrying you?" asked his wife.

"What is versatility?"

"Versatility is having so many talents that you can't get time to make a living with any one of them."—Chicago Record.

Bill, the Back Number

By HOWARD FIELDING

Copyright, 1905, by Charles W. Hooke

"THE man who handles the money." That is the way the more aggressive newspapers spoke of James Murdock, known to his friends as "Big Jim." The statement was substantially true. Murdock conducted the private negotiations with the men of political prominence whose favor was necessary to the consummation of the General Transportation deal, and Lucius Stagg, the financier, was his principal.

Everything was going well, except that Murdock was obliged to avoid the injunctions and other legal missiles aimed at him by certain men whom the deal would ruin. He was supposed to have fled out of the state. In fact, he was hidden in his own residence, which was besieged both day and night by an army of process servers, who were there upon orders, though most of them believed that the house was as empty as it seemed to be.

Neither Stagg nor any other man prominent in the deal dared to go to Murdock's house openly, and this peril became presently a serious annoyance because Murdock did not have the money which he was supposed to be "handling." The cash was in the hands of Lucius Stagg, who was extremely anxious to transfer it to his agent.

Upon a certain day, when the emergency had become extremely pressing, Stagg had a consultation with his lawyers, Harding, Leroy & Stevens, and as a result the firm's chief clerk was dispatched upon a very remarkable errand. In the disguise of a tramp and with the sum of $400,000 in a money belt he went to Murdock's house about 10 o'clock in the evening and succeeded in getting into the yard without attracting the attention of the process servers.

A key of the side door was hidden under the mat in the vestibule, and Wilmot was groping for it in the darkness when a strong hand was suddenly laid upon his throat, and his head was drawn back until it rested upon the shoulder of some one who stood behind him.

"Who—who's that?" gasped Wilmot in a choked whisper.

"Jes' me; only jes' Bill," was the reply. "An' this thing that I'm diggin' into your left kidney is only my revolver. See? So don't be frightened. What you doin' here?"

Wilmot remembered his disguise.

"I was thinking that I might get something to eat," he stammered.

Bill stopped to reflect upon this statement.

"I guess that's right," said he. "I guess you're only a hobo. I took you for a fly cop. But it seems that I done you an injustice. Open that door."

"Isn't it locked?" faltered Wilmot.

"It was before I called," responded Bill. "Open it, an' be blamed spry."

Wilmot obeyed and was pushed forward into the dark interior of the house. As the instrument of propulsion was the barrel of Bill's revolver there was no disposition on the clerk's part to delay the proceedings. The muzzle of the weapon was exactly upon the money belt, and any undue precipitancy on Bill's part would have wrecked a fortune. A fleeting thought passed through Wilmot's mind that Bill would have been much more careful had he known the financial consequences which would follow a discharge of the revolver.

"JES' ME; ONLY JES' BILL."

Thus they came to the dining room, where Bill made an examination of the windows, which were both shuttered and curtained.

"I reckon we can stand a bead o' gas," said he and lighted a jet upon the chandelier. "It's a wonder," he added, "that an up to date guy like this man Murdock wouldn't have 'lectricity."

"You know him, then?" said Wilmot.

Bill spat upon the highly polished floor.

"Know him!" he echoed. "Yes, I know him. I've read about him in the papers. He's a drat pirate. I got no sympathy wit' such as him."

"Is it not imprudent to talk so loud?" asked Wilmot.

"There ain't nobody here," said Bill; "not a soul. We can do about as we please so long as we don't make noise enough to be heard on the street. Murdock has skipped. I've read all about it. There's a gang outside waitin' for him, but he ain't here, an' he ain't comin'."

Wilmot did not dare to express any doubt of this, but he ventured to make another suggestion of caution, to which, however, Bill did not reply. He drew a large bag from under his coat and began to collect in it the family silver from the sideboard and a closet, keeping his revolver ready and an eye upon Wilmot all the time. Finally in a compartment of the sideboard he came upon a quantity of cooked food and some bottles.

"Champagne!" he muttered. "What's it doin' here? An' this beef an' bread looks pretty fresh. Well, blast me!"

He brought the food and drink to the table.

"I don't understand this," said he, "but we may as well get next to it. Hungry, are ye? Well, I'm thirsty. Never was any other way. Sit down."

They took their places at opposite sides of the table, and, keeping the revolver handy, Bill opened two bottles of wine, pushing one of them across to his companion. They drank from silver cups, Wilmot sparingly, Bill with a deep, absorbing, natural thirst, like that of a sponge.

Presently Bill appeared to fall into a sort of trance. His head sank forward a little; his eyes stared at the cup from which he had drunk. Minutes passed slowly.

After what seemed to Wilmot an eternity Bill slowly emerged from his torpor. He put up his left hand and rubbed his stubbly chin. Then he pushed back the tangle of black hair that tumbled over his low forehead and in so doing dislodged the rusty hat which had been perched upon the back of his head. It fell upon the floor with an unnaturally loud sound, but Bill gave it no heed.

"I'm a back number," said he slowly; "that's what I am. Look at that stuff on the table. What 'll I get for it? Mebbe $500. It's worth a good deal more, sure. But I got to take what they'll give me. The fellers that buy this sort o' stuff are all in a combine. A gun that sells outside the ring goes to the jug. It's the same all the way around. The feller that does the work gets nothin'; the feller that's got the money an' is in the combination gets everything. I'm a back number; that's what's the matter with me."

"What you complain of," said Wilmot, "is a feature of our present industrial development."

Bill, whose head had sunk upon his breast, looked up again.

"You seem to be an edjercated man," said he, "but," he added, with a sigh, "edjercation cuts no ice any more. It's a grab game. Now, look at this man Murdock. What's he been a-doin'? Do you read the papers? Well, then you know. He's grabbed two railroads; he's ruined an old fashioned millionaire named Harrison—a sort o' back number like myself, I judge—an' a lot o' little guys that put their money in the road. But what's that? What did the fellers get that built the road, the fellers that did the work? Mebbe a few contractors an' bosses got a little rake-off, but most o' 'em was dagoes workin' for a dollar a day. An' now in comes this man Murdock, this blamed up to date pirate, an' grabs them two roads an' hands 'em over to the gang. An' they say his fee 'll be near half a million bones. Think he'll get as much as that?"

"I've heard somewhere," said Wilmot, "that it would be $400,000."

A sudden shiver swept over him as he named the sum, and for an instant the money belt against his body seemed stuffed with ice.

"Four hundred thousand!" echoed Bill. "Think what a fellow like me could do with all that money! But it ain't nothin' in these days. Why, some o' these trust magnates blow in more'n that on a steam yacht. Why 'n blazes they should do it," he added reflectively, "I don't know. I can get as seasick as I want to be for a dollar and a half goin' down to Sandy Hook on a fishin' excursion. But the stomachs o' them fellers will stand anything, I guess. It's as much as mine can stand sometimes to read about 'em."

"You seem to be a sort of a socialist," said Wilmot.

"Sometimes I get a-thinkin' about them things," he admitted. "I get a-thinkin' about people workin', workin' all over the world. They're a-goin' it all the time, for the world turns over, an' some of 'em work while the others sleep. An' what are they doin'? They're makin' things that they can't have—jes' makin' 'em for fellers like Murdock. Ain't that queer? Ain't it queer to think o' a lot o' men buildin' on a great, big, fine fireproof hotel all day an' them goin' home to sleep in 7 by 9 rooms in little fire trap tenements? I saw a lot o' men at work on a fifteen story department store buildin' today. They'll work at that sort o' thing for twenty, thirty or forty years, some o' 'em, an' when it's all over an' they're dead their wives won't have enough to go an' buy decent mournin' clothes in these same stores. Oh, well, well! What's the use o' talkin' to the likes o' you about work? You don't do any."

"No," replied Wilmot, remembering his role. "I'm a tramp."

Bill eyed him with drunken severity.

"Ain't you ashamed to sit there an' admit it?" he demanded. "Haven't you got no ambition?"

"Have you?" retorted Wilmot.

"Yes, sir, I have," said Bill, striking the table with his fist so hard that some wine spattered out of his cup, whereupon he prudently drank what remained. "I want to do somethin' big before I get laid away. I'd like to turn a trick that was really worth while—to do a job that would be talked about. But it's no use. There's nothin' in my line any more. Plain stealin' has gone out o' fashion. I don't know why that's come over me so hard tonight unless it's thinkin' about this man Murdock. He's the new, an' I'm the old, an' so," he concluded, with an oratorical gesture, "we git right back to where we started. I'm Bill, the back number."

"It may be that you neglect your opportunities," said Wilmot, whose courage was stimulated by the wine. "Mr. Murdock saw the industrial advantage that would accrue from the consolidation of these railroad lines. It was a thing difficult to accomplish, but his keen mind soon found a legal way"—

"A legal way!" exclaimed Bill. "A legal way to crack a safe! That's what he found. An', by"—Bill struggled in vain to choose an oath to fit his need, and in default of it he spat upon the floor again and went on—"I'm ashamed to be in the house o' a man like that!"

At this moment Wilmot, looking over Bill's head, saw a door slowly open. The face of young Jim Murdock appeared and his burly form immediately thereafter. With a catlike tread he came across the bare floor, his stockinged feet as silent as the tread of fate.

Wilmot felt a deadly faintness. He knew that his face must be a mirror

HE DISPLAYED A HUGE ARMY REVOLVER.

If Bill should glance into it tragedy would instantly result, but Bill, the back number, was staring blankly at the silver cup from which he had just sipped his last brief taste of the luxuries of wealth.

To Wilmot's great surprise, Murdock, instead of springing upon Bill's back, suddenly pulled a chair out from the table and sat down in it. At the same instant he displayed a huge army revolver. Bill made a noise between a groan and a gasp and stretched forth his hand for his own weapon, but to touch it was death, and he shrank back.

"I've been listening at the door," said Murdock calmly, "and I've sized this thing up. I saw this fellow prowling around the house earlier in the evening. Took you prisoner, eh? And lectured you on socialism over my wine? Well, well! Give me that little gun of yours, my friend," pulling Bill's weapon toward him along the table. "It is the modern rule that the greater absorbs the less."

He waved his enormous revolver gently to emphasize this remark, and then, taking the burglar's cheap weapon in his left hand, he looked at it with contempt.

"Expected to do me up with this thing, eh?" said he. "Well, you are a back number. Say, why didn't you bring an injunction? Then you'd have been up to date. If I'd tried to take that away from you I'd really have been in trouble, and old man Harrison would have paid you for serving it. He'd have paid you twenty times what that stuff is worth." And he pointed with Bill's revolver at the silverware upon the table.

"No, no, Bill," he continued; "it won't do. A back number? You're a dodo, that's what you are. You're a jailbird of an extinct species. And now, Wilmot, have you got the money?"

Already the clerk was tugging at the belt with weak and frantic haste, and he answered the question by flinging it on the table.

"How much?" demanded Murdock.

"Four hundred thousand."

Bill, the back number, gave a gurgling groan and fell forward upon the table.

"Brace up!" said Murdock, straightening him up with a hand upon his shoulder. "Brace up! You may live to steal the United States treasury yet."

"I ain't fit to live at all after this!" gasped Bill.

"Oh, yes, you are," responded Murdock. "Courage, my friend. And now," he added more seriously, "I shall have to ask you to excuse me. I'm expecting friends."

He rose and motioned to Bill to do the like. The burglar moved heavily, as if he were old and ill, while Murdock escorted him to the side door, lighting the way with Bill's own dark lantern.

"I'm going to let you go," he said. "You can't do me any harm."

Bill paused a moment on the threshold, and he spoke as if to himself:

"I've been up against Jim Murdock," he said, "an' I ain't lost nothin' but a four dollar revolver an' a secondhand bullseye lantern. It's better 'n I had a right to expect."

He stepped with heavy and despondent caution into the dark vestibule and went stumbling and staggering along the flagging toward the gate. Some men got under the darkest shadow of the trees to let him pass, and he did not see them. They were Murdock's friends—three aldermen of the more respectable sort and a well known political leader who is also a judge.

Sherman's Coup at Savannah

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

December 13, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

SHERMAN'S march to the sea came to an end early in December, 1864, and the first problem to settle was the establishment of a base on the coast to sustain his army. Savannah was the most suitable port, but was in the hands of the Confederates. General W. J. Hardee held the city with a force of 18,000 men. The Confederates were not certain as to Sherman's plans or movements after he reached the coast, but assumed that he would turn northward and strike the rear of Lee on James river. For this reason it was decided not to make a stubborn fight to hold Savannah in case he should surround it, but that Hardee should withdraw his troops and unite them with other Confederate forces in the Carolinas to dispute Sherman's march northward.

The city of Savannah is built upon a sandy plateau about forty feet above tide in Savannah river. Sherman approached it from the south across territory cut up with little streams tributary to the Ogeechee river. His troops closed in on Dec. 12 so as to form a line from the Ogeechee to the Savannah above the city. Hardee prepared to defend the place and assigned his troops and commanders to the most important points. His batteries consisted of about 100 guns, half of them of heavy caliber.

The principal work to be attacked was Fort McAllister, situated at Genesis Point, on the southern bank of the Ogeechee river, and commanding the channel of approach from Ossabaw sound and also covering the bridge of the Gulf railway across the river. It was a heavy earthwork, with its principal front toward the river, which it was intended to defend. The armament consisted of seven heavy guns in permanent position and eight light field guns. The river all around was planted with torpedoes, and sub-terra shells had been planted on the land approaches to the fort. The land defenses were strengthened by palisades and abatis. The garrison of Fort McAllister at the time of Sherman's attack numbered about 200 men, under command of a major. On the approach of Sherman General Hardee had supplied the work with fifty days' rations to enable the men to stand a siege in case the work should be isolated. It was located about fifteen miles from the city of Savannah.

"NOT YET, BUT IT WILL BE IN A MINUTE."

During the last few days of Sherman's march the troops had been on short rations. Breadstuffs were scarce in the country passed through, and the army foraging bands had brought in but scant supplies. The first task was to get in touch with Federal transports on Ossabaw sound. A Federal scouting officer passed Fort McAllister by night in a canoe and succeeded in reaching the friendly fleet in the sound. However, it would be impossible to make use of the Ogeechee to bring the transports close to camp until Fort McAllister was in Sherman's hands. The Federal cavalry under General Kilpatrick attempted to reach the fleet along the roads leading through the swamps seaward, but had failed. Kilpatrick also attempted to take the fort by surprise, but this also failed, and Sherman ordered General O. O. Howard, whose command lay nearest the work, to send a force sufficient to carry the place by storm at the first dash. This would involve the least loss of life. Howard sent the division of General W. B. Hazen to do the work, and after a circuitous march it reached the front of the fort about noon on the 13th of December.

In order to prevent re-enforcements from reaching the fort from the Confederate lines at Savannah proper General Howard planted two guns upon a hill about two miles from the rear of the work. Near the battery was a rice mill, which stood close to the river bank and commanded a view of the fort, the river and the sound. Howard used the mill for a signal station, and while Hazen was marching forward to the attack he and Sherman looked on and communicated by signal.

General Hazen's advance guard captured a picket about a mile from the fort and got from him the particulars about the torpedoes buried in the road leading to the fort. These were removed, and a brigade of troops moved forward to within half a mile of the work. The commander of the brigade wished to dash ahead at once, but General Hazen decided to wait until portions of three brigades could be brought into position. The reserves and supports found difficulty in getting forward without drawing the enemy's fire, and it was 5 o'clock before the signal for attack could be given.

Luck favored Hazen's enterprise from the very start. The discovery of the torpedoes saved his line from heavy casualties and possibly from panic, for hidden foes are a terror to the bravest men. It happened also that just before the attack the garrison had added an abatis to the defenses on the land side of the fort by felling large trees and cutting the limbs, which when sharpened formed a hedge of wooden bayonets in the pathway of the assailants. But the attack came before they had time to remove the large trunks of the trees, and these gave good cover to Hazen's skirmishers, enabling them to get close to the fort and pick off the Confederate gunners. In this way the guns of the fort were rendered useless.

While Sherman and Howard impatiently watched the proceedings on Hazen's line from their perch upon the rice mill a tugboat from the fleet sneaked along under shelter of the river bank to communicate with the Federal commander. As the sun was going down Sherman signaled Hazen to hurry the charge, and just then the captain of the tug hailed Sherman to ask if the fort had been taken. Sherman answered, "Not yet, but it will be in a minute."

The gallant dash of Hazen's men quickly fulfilled Sherman's promise. There was a short, sharp struggle on the parapet, and then detachments from all sides poured into the fort. So swiftly did the line move that no halt was apparent either at the abatis, the palisades or the ditch. The ground on the outer edge of the ditch had been planted with Confederate torpedoes, and there the assailants lost heavily, about 200 men killed and wounded. This method of defense, barbaric as it seemed, is permissible by the usages of war. A further stroke of luck favored the attacking party at the right time. The extreme flanks of the works extended to the water, and the palisade had been constructed with a view to high tide. At the moment of attack the tide was out, and Hazen's soldiers passed safely around the obstructions on a dry beach. In fifteen minutes after the charge was sounded the Confederate flag came down. The garrison made no formal surrender, but individuals ceased to struggle when they found themselves overpowered. The Confederate loss in killed and wounded was forty-eight in all. Sherman sent dispatches by the tug to Admiral Dahlgren, whose fleet lay off the coast, and went himself by steamer next day to confer with the navy about removing obstructions to the channel of the Ogeechee to enable transports to bring supplies to camp. A dispatch steamer which was with the fleet brought instructions from Grant to Sherman directing him to move his army by water to the James river and aid in the attack on Richmond.

Sherman decided to capture Savannah in any event on the 17th of December and sent to General Hardee a demand for the surrender of the city. This demand was refused, and Sherman prepared to lay siege. Hardee had no intention of remaining until he was shut in by overwhelming forces, and Sherman, fearing that the foe would escape, sailed away to Hilton Head, up the coast from the mouth of the Savannah river, where there was a large force of Federal troops. Supposing that Hardee would attempt to go north to Charleston, he hoped to interpose a force in South Carolina to cut off the retreat.

Meanwhile Hardee got out of the net, safely removing his troops and light artillery, and made his way to Charleston unopposed. When Sherman got back to the lines on Dec. 23 he found his troops occupying Savannah. His telegram to Washington announcing the capture was made public on Christmas eve and led to great rejoicing, although the escape of Hardee was a disappointment to the army. Sherman said that when Hardee refused to surrender the city there was no way out but a bloody assault or the complete investment of the place, and while he was occupied in efforts to close the last avenue the enemy slipped out.

PLEASANT FIELDS OF HOLY WRIT

SAVE for my daily range
Among the pleasant fields of Holy Writ,

The International Sunday School Lesson.

Fourth Quarter. Lesson XII. December 18, 1904.

The Review Of The Quarter.

Biography preponderates in the Bible. "A troop cometh" whenever one lifts its lid. Shakespeare only approaches the Scripture in the multitude of characters introduced. They are men, women, and children, from every rank and station—good, evil, and neutral. The whole gamut of human emotion is run, and every conceivable experience depicted. Even a superficial reader does not fail to note this striking characteristic. It makes the Bible unique.

No one need go far for the reason. The Bible is a handbook for human conduct. Its purpose is to furnish the ethical and spiritual principles of life. It was not written to surprise or entertain—certainly not for revenue or fame. It is a Divine instrument to cultivate a Divine life in the human soul. It is to reveal God and at the same time to reveal the life that is pleasing to God.

The Bible is a cabinet of working models. We see in it characters in which the divine life is exemplified. We see that life in its inception, growth, and consummation, the utility and beauty of it. In this same cabinet we find a set of models in which the demon-life is exemplified—all phases of it—the growth, the inutility and dread denouncement. The proverb has it that "example is better than precept." On that plan the Bible is built. It is full of precepts, the categorical statement as to character and conduct. But over against every precept there are a score of examples—the incarnation of precepts. The good for imitation, the evil for avoidance. It is this characteristic which makes the Bible the most serviceable book in the world. One moment it flashes the green light of safety on the path of youth, the next the red light of danger.

The Teacher's Lantern.

Exit Elijah. Enter Elisha. The chronological order in which these dissimilar prophets appeared must be remembered. Elijah, the iron flail of Jehovah, came first and beat down a path through the foul idolism of Isreal along which Elisha, the almoner of God's mercy could walk. It has been so in the Church from the beginning. Controversialists and reformers have opened a way for the patient toilers of the kingdom to follow. The one class is as indispensable as the other.

That prophet's widow showed gumption. She did not waste time inveighing againts the cruality of the creditor. The law was on his side. Her appeal was to the chief of the prophetic society. She stated her case and claim clearly, and followed the program to the dot. There was a dash of passion in it, for she uttered (literally) a heart disturbing plea. She was thrown upon her own resources. All she had was just enough inferior oil for anointing person a single time. But she must use what she has, not what she has not. She will not move a hand in disposition of this treasure until she has the prophet's orders. "satisfy your creditors first" is the direction. Nothing is our own until all debts are paid.

One pot of oil over against a debt, and that debt large enough to enslave her sons. But no human resource is to be despised. It is the unit which is to be multiplied. She must also personally use what she has. Even the prophet can not pour out the oil for her.

This lovely idyl of Elisha and the Shunammite shines in the troubled stream of public life. We stumble upon the comparatively small domestic incident in the midst of wars and kingscraft. Hospitality, contentment, mother-love, bereavement, grief, faith and importunity,—all are shrined in this story. It casts a light upon the character of the prophet and upon the human life of thirty centuries ago.

"A mighty man—but." That "but" is the "wolf-note" that destrovs the harmony. The meanest Syrian seullion would not have exchanged cuticles with Naaman. This little girl did not mope over her hard lot. She showed a cheerful and helpful disposition. Her contribution was caught up and woveninto the providences of the ages, which is to make God known to man. Help often comes from unexpected quarters. It was not the first nor the last time when a word of wisdom was on the lip of a slave. And when misfortune is severe no advice is too contemptible.

The slowness of the human heart to apprehend God is further indicated by the next step taken by the Syrian king. He sends an army to make the prophet a prisoner. He had learned nothing in his failure to cope with the Omniscience of God. He challenges Omnipotence. This effort to arrest the prophet sets forth at once the temerity and impotence of the soul in its fight against God. The timorous servant well represents some believers when they find themselves beleaguered by temptations and unfavorable conditions.

Half measures are usually weak measures. All Athaliah's cruelty counted her nothing, because she was not quite cruel enough. If she had killed Jehoiada together with the others, she might have reigned longer. After all, she was too unsuspicious. She left the old high priest in possession of the dilapidated temple. That was her undoing.

The temple was an asylum for one boy (Joash). Every boy should have right of asylum in the Church. It should be chief shelter and resort of youth.

What the Roman Forum is to Rome and the Acropolis it to Greece, the temple is to Palestine. A history of the temple is a history of the nation. Names illustrious and ignoble, deeds valorous and despicable, doctrines of faith and usages of ritual,—all are shrined and exemplified there. It is the epitome of a thousand years. It is no wonder that the repair of such a building became a matter of State, and that the king took personal supervision of it. But the crown was not able as in Soiomon's day, to carry out the enterprise unaided. The co-operation of the people must needs be urged, and there was the reflex advantage incident to such co-operation.

The very position of Isaiah in the canon is significant. Although written later than others, it yet stands first among the prophecies. Isaiah is easily first of the prophets. He is more frequently quoted in the New Testament than all the other prophets put together. Whether every part of the book which bears the name of Isaiah was written by that prophet or not is a curious question which does not bear upon the integrity and usefulness of the book. There may have been several Isaiahs, as there were certainly several Davids, who joined in writing the Book of Psalms History of the prophets is absorbingly interesting. They make a brilliant galaxy from the Samuel on—men like Othneil, Gideon, and Samson, prophets of the sword, and Hosea, Joel, Amos, prophets of the pen. History of prophecy is equally entertaining—the function and possibility of the prophetic office; how the personality of the prophet is conserved: he is not a speaking trumpet, but a speaking man: not so much a mechanical predictor of future events as a man with a vision of the bearing of current events upon the future.

The Prophet Isaiah appears in a new role. He is parexcellence the temperance reformer of his age. He is not intemperate in his attack upon intemperance. Yet for moral earnestness he is not surpassed. Drunkenness is usually insolent. It was ribald and abusive toward the prophet. But this did not deter him. He warded off the sneer with a terrible denunciation.

The times were very evil and irreligious. The Chronicler tells of Israel's neglect of the temple in graphic phrase. They showed their backs to it instead of their faces. They shut the doors, put out the lamps, and ceased from incense and offerings. The sacred ritual was entirely discontinued. Neglect of a public edifice is a species of vandalism, slower, but ultimately as effective as the hammer of the inconclast. When sweeper and artisan left off their daily work, filth accumulated, and the holy and magnificent house was on the verge of dissolution. No reasons of State or policy deterred the young king from at once mending this evil. He did not wait until he had tested the allegiance of his subjects or debated the matter with his council of princes. He immediately addressed himself to the task of restoring religion and strenuously squared himself to the difficulties involved.

Estray Notice.

This is to give notice that about June, 1904, there came to my place a yearling steer without mark, red in color; also three two-year old heifers, which came in the early part of October, all three being red and white, marked with end off left ear and underbit out of right ear. Owner or owners will please come forward, prove property, pay all costs and damages and take same away.

BLOOMINGTON.

Edward Riley and Edward Messenger, two well known young men of Savage, W. Va., were arrested by Deputy Sheriff Davis of Mineral county, on last Friday evening and lodged in the Keyser jail. Riley and Messenger are accused of burglarizing the Buxton and Landstreet Store at Savage a few weeks ago, and stealing coupons, tobacco and other articles to the amount of five or six hundred dollars. The hearing will take place at Keyser on Thursday of this week and it is rumored other parties will be implicated in the robbery.

An accident occurred in the Buxton mine on last Monday morning by which three men were pretty severely injured. Mr. Dennis Eagan had a leg broken, Mr. Weimer sustained a fractured arm and other injuries; Mr. James Brown slightly injured about arms and legs. The accident was caused by the rope connected with the haulage, slipping from the rollers in the fourth right heading and catching the men between the rope and the rib. The parties were residents of Westernport Hill.

Mr. Edward Devine, who has been a patient at the Western Marylnnd Hospital for the past six weeks, returned home Monday evening. Mr. Devine has been suffering from a severe attack of rheumatism and expects to be able to resume his position in a couple of weeks.

Mr. John Rowland, of Whisner and Rowland, Piedmont, was in town Wednesday.

Commissioner Stump commenced the erection of the iron bridge across the Potomac river on last Monday.

On account of the unprecedented drouth of the past sixteen weeks, all the wells in town except two have failed in their water supply. Snow and ice are melted for domestic purposes and our drinking water is almost counted by the drops.

Messrs. Warnick and Miller are running water wagons and relieving the condition somewhat by furnishing drinking water from Savage river. If the severe freezing weather continues, it is only a matter of a few days before Savage river will be frozen up fast and the water supply of Piedmont, Westernport and Luke cut off.

Mr. John Comp, of Altamont, was in town on Tuesday.

Messrs. Oss Bros., who recently purchased a large body of hardwood timber on Savage river, have about completed a large mill, one mile and a half west of Everett tunnel and four miles from this place. They have a large force of men grading a tram way to connect with the B. & O. R.R. at a point near the tunnel.

Good old prosperity times have certainly struck this region. The mines are busy day and night with shifts and relays of men still unable to keep abreast with their orders.

Mrs. Elzie Fazenbaker, who has been quite sick for the past few weeks with pneumonia, is improving.

Mr. Charles A. Mullen, a prominent business man of Williamsport, Md., son of our esteemed citizen, Mr. Andrew Mullen, is here on a visit to his parents and the place of his nativity.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

"Highland Hall" was sold Saturday last, under foreclosure, for $1650, to Messrs. Rathbun and Garthright and others. The property brought not one-half its value.

Mr. J. L. Echard has purchased Mr. Levi Echard's interest in the livery business at this place, and his interest in the Echard farm near Pleasant Valley U. B. church; consideration $2200.

Messrs. Cuppett, Leighton & Co. moved into their new store building last Friday, vacating the store room in the postoffice building.

The Methodist and Loch Lynn Sunday schools will have Christmas exercises and "treats" for the children.

Last Saturday was an old time wintry day. Raw winds and snow. The sleighing was all that could be asked for.

Miss Ida Whetsel is visiting in Cumberland.

Sunday morning Mr. J. L. Echard's thermometer registered 6 degrees below zero.

The W. Va. Central, Wabash system has put on through trains from Cumberland, Md., to Durbin, W. Va., where connections are made with C. & O. R. R. This arrangement brings our people 100 miles nearer Charleston, W. Va., via Gormania, than via Parkersburg, and consequently a saying of several dollars.

There will be preaching at Wesley Chapel (near Dallas Riley's) next Sabbath at 10:30 a. m.

Resigns as Railroad Agent.

J. M. Moore has resigned as agent for the West Virginia Central and Pittsburg railway at Bayard, W. Va., after having held the position for eighteen years, and will be succeeded by Charles F. Blackburn. Mr. Moore goes with the Hoffman Tanning Company, at Gorman.

Notice of Dissolution.

Notice is hereby given that the firm of "W. H. Bartlett," carrying on the retail grocery business in the town of Oakland, Garrett county, Maryland, and composed of William Harper Bartlett and F. T. Martin, has discontinued business. All persons indebted to said firm will make payment to F. T. Martin, who will pay all the debts against said firm.

Order of Publication.

Buford W. Woods vs. Lydia Woods.

No. 1306 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree, divorcing the plaintiff, a vinculo matrimonii, from the defendant.

The bill states, that the plaintiff and defendant were married by the Rev. W. E. George at Deer Park, in the year 1894, and that they resided together at Garrett county aforesaid until about the month of April 1897; that the conduct of the plaintiff towards the defendant has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, and without any just cause or reason, the defendant abandoned and deserted the plaintiff, and has declared her intention to live with him no longer, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for more than three years, to-wit since the month of April, 1897, and is deliberate and final and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation; that one child, George W. Woods has been born to the plaintiff and defendant from said marriage, and resides with his mother the defendant, that the said Lydia Woods is a non-resident of the State of Maryland.

The bill then prays for a decree divorcing the plaintiff and defendent a vinculo matrimonii and for general relief and an order of publication against the absent defendant.

It is thereupon this 25th day of November, 1904, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, ordered that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 30th day of December, 1904, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning her to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 17th day of January next, to show cause, if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

TWO CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH NEAR BOND.

One the Son of George Wilt and Other Daughter of Riley O'Haver.

ASLEEP WHEN HOUSE CAUGHT.

And Hard Work Was Experienced by Mr. and Mrs. O'Haver to Save Themselves.—Two Children Rescued.

On last Friday morning about five o'clock the house occupied by Riley O'Haver, his wife, three children and a son of George Wilt, a neighbor who was visiting Mr. O'Haver's family, located half a mile from Bond, this county, caught on fire while the occupants were asleep, resulting in the burning to death of one of the O'Haver children and the Wilt boy and seriously burning both Mr. and Mrs. O'Haver, both of whom along with two of the children experienced a miraculous escape from horrible deaths.

From reliable sources the following is learned relative to the catastrophe. Mr. O'Haver arose about four o'clock and kindled a fire in a heating stove and then went back to bed, intending to remain there until the house became warm. He fell to sleep, however, and was awakened by the crying of an infant who, with his wife, occupied the bed. Mrs. O'Haver awakened about the same moment and seeing that the house was all in flames and about to fall upon their heads they snatched the child up and ran out the door. Their little five-year old daughter, who occupied another bed in the same room with their son aged three years and the Wilt boy, struggled from the bed after Mr. and Mrs. O'Haver had succeeded in getting out and went to the window where she was seen by her father who broke the glass and lifted the child out through the aperture thus made. Repeated attempts were made by the parents to rescue the other child and the Wilt boy but all were unsuccessful and they were burned to death.

Mr. O'Haver, clothed in nothing but a shirt, walked through the snow to Bond where he aroused the people and recited to them his sad story, leaving his wife and their two children, also thinly clad, by the burning house where they were compelled to stay to keep from freezing to death. The people at Bond were not slow in in going to the rescue of their unfortunate neighbors and within a very short time clothing etc., was being carried to the spot where the house was burning and where the wants of the unfortunate woman and children were ministered to with open hearts and willing hands.

The house was a two story log structure and was owned by Mrs. F. C. Michaels, of Westernport until a short time ago, when it was purchased by DuBois and Bond Bros., the saw mill operators at Bond.

MINE NAMED FOR COUNTY GIRL.

Miss Flossie Jacobs, Daughter of Hon. W. H. Jacobs, the Lady.

Deeds have been filed in the county clerk's office, wherein S. A. Duggans transferred to J. A. Saurbaugh a one fourth interest in the Psysica, Mineral Point, Flossie Jacobs, Dodgeville, Queen of Sheba, Darlington, and Jamesville mining claims, all located in the Portneuf Canyon. Mr. Saurbaugh is timekeeper for the Inman Mining Company, and the claims are adjoining the claims of this company. By transfer Mr. Saurbaugh becomes the owner of one-half of these claims, the other half being held by Mr. Herman Cruetzberg, commissionary officer of the Inman Mining Company, and Mr. Louis Roeder, both of whom will hold one-fourth interest in the group of claims, which is that recently located by Mr. N. A. Downey, and they are considered very valuable property. —Pocatella, Idaho, Tribune.

Mr. Saurbaugh is a young man from Frostburg who went to Pocatella, Idaho, last summer, and is meeting with much success with the Inman Mining Company's operations. Mr. Cruetzberg is a Bartonite well known here.

One of the claims was named for little Miss Fossie Jacobs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Jacobs, she being the first child to visit the mines during her visit with her parents to Pocatella last summer. Mr. Downey and Mr. Roeder, who were at the mines, took a fancy to the little girl, and incidentally to two anchors, ornaments on Flossie's blouse, which they desired to wear on their hats. A knife was procured and the anchors transferred to the miners' hats and they forthwith named the mine "Flossie Jacobs."

NO PROCLAMATION NEEDED.

Next Monday A Holiday Without Action By Governor.

Many persons are under the erroneous impression that a proclamation by Governor Warfield will be necessary to make next Monday a legal holiday as Christmas will fall on Sunday. Section 9 of Article 13 of the Code of Public General Laws provides that when Christmas and New Year's Day fall on a Sunday the following Mondays shall be legal holidays.

By an act passed by the Legislature of 1898, commercial paper falling due on a holiday is payable the next day. Therefore, notes and bills coming due on December 26 and January 2 will not be liable to protest for non-payment until the close of business on December 27 and January 3, respectively.

Calendars Receivee.

This office acknowledges the receipt of handsome calendars from quite a large number of out as well as in-town friends.

THE PIPE ORGAN HAS BEEN INSTALLED

In St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church in Oakland.

RECITAL TO TAKE PLACE DEC. 30.

An Elaborate Program Has Been Prepared for the Occasion—Mr. Earl Byron Byers, of Allegany City, Organist.

The new pipe organ purchased several months ago by the members of St. Paul's M. E church in Oakland, arrived here last Thursday from the factory and on Friday the work of assembling and placing in position of the numerous parts, was begun by an expert builder sent by the manufacturers from Philadelphia. The work of setting up the instrument was completed Monday at noon and was accepted by the official board of the church the same afternoon.

The instrument was manufactured by the Estey Organ Company at Brattleboro, and represents the highest development of pipe organ construction. It is equipped with tubular pneumatic action throughout as well as tubular pneumatic stop action. The stop action consists of an abridged key board just above the manuals in the centre of the organ. By an ingenious arrangement of white and black keys the pressure of one opens the register or set of pipes and the pressure of another closes it. This renders it possible to make changes of registration much more rapidly than by the old-fashioned draw stop action.

The base of the organ is made of handsomely carved oak in dull finish. The pipes exposed are bronzed, without ornamentation and wholly in keeping with the church interior. There are 604 speaking pipes in the instrument, two banks of keys, twenty stops and twenty foot pedals. At any time power to pump the instrument can be attached, it now being fitted with a lever operated within.

The voicing of the instrument is as perfect as it is possible to make it. The various tones are very pure and the characteristic quality of each individual note is preserved throughout the length of the register. Each note blends perfectly with every other tone and the balance of the full organ is well preserved. Each pipe in the organ has its individual supply of wind, thereby avoiding any "robbing" of other pipes.

A recital has been arranged for which will take place on Friday night the 30th inst., when Mr. Earl Byron Byers, of Allegany City, will act in the capacity of organist. Dr. John G. Robinson and Mr. Earl Townshend will be the soloists. The program as arranged will be as follows:

Married.

Mr. J. Elsworth Michaels was united in holy wedlock to Miss Laura Belle Warnick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Warnick, New Germany, Dec. 14, at noon. The ceremony was performed by the brides pastor, Rev. Homer S. May, of Salisbury, Pa. About twenty guests assembled to witness the ceremony, after which all partook of a sumptuous dinner. Many useful presents were received by the bride. The couple will reside in or near Westernport. We wish them a long, happy and useful life.

MR. LOWNDES AT WHITE HOUSE.

Former Governor Calls on the President—Maryland Condition Discussed.

Washington, Dec. 15.—Hon. Lloyd Lowndes was here yesterday in conference with President Roosevelt for over an hour. He discussed with the President in detail political affairs in Maryland, especially the present situation in the Republican party. Mr. Lowndes gave the President an account of the recent meeting of prominent Republicans held in Baltimore, and assured him that a number of gentlemen who had formerly taken a very active interest in party matters, but who in recent years no longer had been as prominently identified with it, were eager to resume their former activity, and he promised the President that by hard and judicious work Maryland could be placed in the list of states that might always be reasonably expected to go Republican instead of going Republican only under the stress of extraordinary circumstances. He pointed out that the steady increase of manufacturing and other business interests in the state had so fostered the protection spirit among the employes that on national elections, where the protective policy will always be the principal issue before the voters, can here after always be depended upon to be as safely Republican as West Wirginia or as New Jersey.

Mr. Lowndes when seen at his hotel seemed thoroughly satisfied with his visit to the President, and he intimated in a guarded way that he believed that in the appointments to be made in Maryland in future the President would not ignore some of the old leaders who were now again in active affiliation with the party. He said that he regarded the prospects of the Republicans in the state as most promising on state and municipal matters.

"Will you be a candidate for governor?" he was asked just as he was entering his carriage for the depot.

Mr. Lowndes chewed his cigar, and without a word entered his carriage.

SHOT IN FACE AND NECK.

Mr. Harmon Bittinger Accidentally Shot By His Brother Francis.

Last Saturday afternoon, December 17th, Mr. Harmon Bittinger and his brother Francis, were out in the woods near their home, which is locatod on the east slope of Meadow Mountain, trailing a wildcat which had been prowling about their premises, and while on diverging lines about fifty yards apart, Mr. Francis Bittinger, believing he had caught a glimpse of the cat, fired His target however, proved to be his brother instead of the beast. The load scattered over the upper portion of his brother's body, causing dangerous, and it was feared at the time, fatal wounds.

A telephone message was quickly delived to Dr. C. J. Fazenbaker at his office in Swanton, who responding to the call, found twelve large bird shot in the face, neck and body of the wounded man, and succeeded in extracting most of them.

The physician does not apprehend any serious consequences and says the patient, a most worthy man and respected citizen of Swanton District, is doing well.

Christmas Table Decorations.

The dinner table itself should proclaim the season by its decoration. A snowy cloth patterned with holly leaves or mistletoe, a centerpiece of glossy holly leaves and brilliant berries, silver candelabra and silver bon bon dishes are appropriate and dignified. Flat wreaths of holly tied with bows of "berry" red ribbod are very effective on the table, one in the center and one encircling each candelabrum. A silver or a cut glass bowl of holly and meteor roses or holly and mistletoe may be set in the wreath to complete the centerpiece. The outline of the Christmas star may he used instead of the wreaths. In this case the bows of ribbon are omitted. And for the guest cards either bells, stars, plum puddings, holly or ivy leaves, cut out and painted and ornamented with Christmas verse or greetings, are appropriate, and a little silk stocking of bonbons may be laid by each card as a souvenir.

Granted Divorce and $10,000.

The Supreme Court of Appeals has affirmed the decision of the Circuit Court of Monongahelia county, W. Va., which granted a divorce to Mrs. Mary V. Hartigan from her husband, Dr. J. W. Hartigan and also the custody of the children and was given property of the value of $10.000 in lieu of alimony.

RAPID GROWTH OF RURAL DELIVERY

There Are Now 28,073 Routes In Operation.

2,000 ADDITIONAL ARE IN SIGHT

Postmaster General Wynne Says Salutary Changes in the Classification of the Mails Have been Carried Out to the Benefit of the Service.

Postmaster General Wynne in his annual report shows a satisfying condition of affairs in the department. Rural free delivery has marched steadily forward until now there are 38,073 routes in operation and 2,000 more will be added to the roll by the middle of January. The Postmaster General says that the postal revenues have increased during the year. Salutary changes in the classification of the mails have been carried out greatly to the benefit of the service. Amendments to regulations facilitating the handling of mercantile packages in bulk have been put into effect. At home and abroad postal facilities have been extended. Exchange of money orders with foreign countries has been simplified and cheapened. Parcels-post conventions were extended to European countries as an experiment with Germany five years ago. They have been extended to Japan and the British colony of Hongkong to meet changes of trade conditions in the far East; also to Norway.

Economy and strict accountability have been enforced in all branches of the service. While the deficit of $8,779,492 is greater by $4,219,447 than for the fiscal year 1903, it must be borne in mind, Mr. Wynne says, that the expenditure authorized for the extension and maintenance of the rural free delivery service during the past fiscal year was $4,902,237 greater than the preceeding year.

Speaking of the abuses of the second-class mail privileges the Postmaster General says:

"Difficulties in the application of the law itself, which requires so many intangible qualifications, led in the beginning to the granting of those rates to publication of doubtful claims. These entries were followed by others perhaps in a less degree entitled to the privilege, and thus, the precedents having been established, abuses grew and multiplied until they became a serious detriment to the postal service. Reform was undertaken in 1901; much progress is recorded. The department has steadily proceeded upon the lines of reform since that date.

The popularity of the rural free delivery service is seen in the fact that 9447 routes were established during the year. Since 1897, when the service was started with 44 routes, it has grown so rapidly that by the end of the current fiscal year in June next there will probably be 32,500 routes in operation, requiring an appropriation of $23,120,000 for its maintenance. In addition, the department will ask for $3,000,000 more to provide for extensions during the next fiscal year, as petitions are coming in at the rate of 828 a month asking for the establishment of the service. The effect of this great number of routes is seen is the discontinuance of 5587 offices during the year, During the same time 2549 new offices were established in regions the free delivery does not reach.

The department has equalized salaries and length of routes during the year so that the carriers covering the most territory get the most pay. A carrier covering a route of twenty-four miles or over gets $720 a year, and for each mile less than twenty-four, $18 is deducted.

Just a Word for "Central."

In Nuremberg, Germany, a man was fined $6.25 for calling a telephone girl a "sheepshead" over the wire. In Vienna a man was fined $8 for calling a telephone girl a "Chinese." All of which may be right, but how is a man to relieve his feelings when he gets the wrong number?—Cleveland Leader. The plumber, the book canvasser, the lightning rod agent, the sewing machine man may be fair game for the paragrapher, but after all, has not the telephone girl a claim to mercy? Undoubtedly it is very annoying to hear her cry "busy" almost before you have given her a number, but did it ever occur to you what a nerve-racking, temper-trying position is hers answering incessaut and often impossible demands from "early morn till dewy eve" for a pittance of salary?

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

(Christmas Lesson)

In the spirited style of Hebrew poetry the prophet throws himself beyond, in point of time, the event which he is describing, and speaks of it as having already occurred. He takes the mantle of night to represent the moral state of the people. They were groping in a deathly shadow. Leaders were as blind as the led. All was rayless, cheerless, hopeless. Suddenly, to the anointed vision of Israel's noble seer, there bursts through the leaden pall such a light as is never seen on land or sea. He is ready to cry, It is

"The Star, the Star of Bethlehem!"

The great darkness is matched by a great light. It floods not the plains alone, but penetrates the deepest moral chasms of earth. How must Isaiah's heart have glowed at such a goodly sight! He was in a rapture. Hallelujah was on his lips!

He sees a goodly company, an ever-increasing throng, who walk in this new light. Kingdoms of earth, islands of sea, are steadily merged into it. It spreads from the river to the ends of the earth. And the joy of the throng keeps pace with its ever-augmenting proportions. It is joy like that when, after all the heat and toil, the harvest is shouted home; or like that after battle when victors divide spoil.

And this deliverence from darkness—this lifting of the yoke of sin, despair, and death, is recognized by the prophet as supernatural and Divine. The earthly means of its accomplishment are as unequal as Gideon's lamps and pitchers against the grasshopper multitudes of Midianites and Amalekites.

The earthly, historic means of victory is always through the awful dim and carnage of battle. But here is a weaponless victory in which the very instruments of human warfare, so far from being used, shall be turned up or beaten into the implements of husbandry.

And all this because the Babe it born in Bethlehem. Born to us—to humanity. The badge of universal spiritual sovereignty shall lie upon his shoulder. Kingdoms of earth, without of necessity losing their identity, shall become His kingdoms.

The prophet-herald announces his regal titles. How dim the appellations of royalty grow in comparison to his lustrous names! Wonderful—the mystery of whose nature is the amazement of angels and men. Counselor—the unerring, unfailing Guide in truth and duty; not of the few, but of the race. The Mighty God—the very Person of the omnipotent Deity. The Father of Eternity, and the peaceful and peace-producing Prince.

The spiritual dominion of this lovely and Divine Sovereign, and its gracious concomitants of assurance to the individual and quietness to the multitude, shall unceasingly cover larger areas and include more people.

The pledge of this is the moral earnestness of the glorious Being who stooped to the incarnation, the cross, the tomb. Jesus is in dead earnest to make His mediatorial work a triumphant success. And all the armies of sky are obedient at His slightest beck.

Mosaic from Commentaries.

Nevertheless ["But"]: With this transitional word the prophet passes from the dark picture of the gloom and distress of those who are led away into captivity to the brighter one of that new dawn which portends the glorious consummation of the Messianic era.—Peloubet.

Dimness: Accumulated darkness.—Clark.

Land of Zebulun: Parts that first and principally suffered in the Assyrian invasion, first also to enjoy the blessings of Christ's preaching.—Ibid.

For it does not remain dark where there is now distress: In the first time he brought into disgrace the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali and in the last he brings to honor the road by the sea the other side of Jordan the circle of the Gentiles.—Delitzch.

The developement of a definite expectation of a Messiah was gradual, and a greater distinction or scope must not be attributed to it at any given epoch of Jewish history than had been actually attained.—Peloubet.

The heighth of glorification would correspond to the depth of the disgrace.—Ibid.

These countries would be the very first remembered when the morning dawn of glory should break.—Ibid.

The Messianic hopes of the Jewish nation were really directed toward Galilee.—Ibid.

Talmud and Midrash both taught that redemption would break forth from Tiberias.—Ibid.

Land of shadow: Deadly shade, properly a title of the Hebrew Hades—a night like that of Hades.—Cheyne.

The gist of the section: Assyria shall overwhelm Israel and crush her. She shall remain awhile in gloom and darkness, but at length the darkness shall be dispelled, first in the north, then over all the land, and the Child shall be born.—Pulpit Com.

The light first streamed forth in this quarter, glorifying the region on which contempt had been poured.—Ibid.

Government upon shoulder: Government was regarded as a burden. Vizier means "burdened."—Pul. Com.

Name shall be called: Not important whether we view what follows as one name or several. Isaiah does not really mean that the Child should bear as a name or names any of the expressions, but only that they should be truly applicable to them.—Ibid.

The Teacher's Lantern.

Philosophy had proved an engregious failure. Wisdom could not know God. The sage could not save the people who lived on the same street with him, let alone the whole mass. Culture was at one end of the beam and morals at the other: as culture rose, morals sank. Roman law, Greek refinement, had proved equally impotent to save. It seemed as if the advent was delayed in order that the inefficiency of all human expedients might be thoroughly demonstrated.

A fine illustration of this, of the nature, force, and integrity of prophecy. Isaiah graphically describes what the moral condition of the race shall be at a given epoch. He describes the sudden entrance of a new corrective force, unlike any which had ever been used before; a weaponless, but victorious kingdom. He becomes more explicit. He defines the person of the king, enumerates His titles, describes the spread and perpetuity of His kingdom.

The soldier is a waning factor in current civilization. The assertion may seem paradoxical in view of the terrible war now waging. However, this very war has itself just furnished an incident of the possibility of avoiding war altogether by arbitration. Wars have become increasingly infrequent. The present may be at the last. Isaiah's blessed prophecy is on the eve fulfillment, "For every boot of those who tramp with boots in the tumult of battle and (every) cloak rolled in blood shall be for burning, a food of fire." (Delitzsch.) All the accouterments of war—its weapons offensive and defensive its blood-spattered uniforms—all shall be incinerated. The horrid demon of human hate shall give up the ghost. There shall yet be universal righteousness, peace and joy.

The universal and millennial extension of the kingdom of God does not involve the overthrow of existing civil governments. Instead of supplanting them, it will infuse them with its principles. It does not even necessitate the perpetuation of any existing ecclesiastical organizations. In its final analysis the kingdom expresses itself in the moral qualities of human souls. It is the universal spread of goodness, and this may be achieved without organized religion. The human means for the extension of the kingdom of God seem utterly inadequate. But the history of God's ancient people furnishes a helpful and inspiring analogy. "It shall be as in the days of Midian." The reference is to Gideon's breaking the seven years' dominion of the Midianites and utterly routing them. His band was paltry in numbers. His resources were grotesquely inadequate—trumpets, lamps, and pitchers. But this year was signal.

Feed The Birds.

The early snow storm will be trying on partridges in Maryland, and we learn that the State Game and Fish Protective Association has money in hand to anticipate such conditions. Secretary O. M. Dennis on Monday said:

"Snow has fallen in great volume all over the State, and our association now makes the earnest appeal to the farmers and others to aid the birds. Fortunately there have been no big snowdrifts because the winds were not high enough, but there was enough snow to cover all the natural food growth.

"Any farmers or others who find birds in distress and will feed them until they are able to care for themselves will, upon sending vouchers to State Game Warden John W. Avirett, be reimbursed for the amount expended for the food."

ECCENTRIC MUSICIANS

Queer Habits of Certain Men Who Attained Fame As Composers

"Perhaps the most eccentric man who ever lived was the great composer Beethoven. He was certainly the most eccentric musician," says I. F. Rowbotham in "The Strand Magazine."

"One of his eccentricities was to go out for walks usually in the pouring rain.

"After playing the piano for hours at a stretch—his favorite diversion of an afternoon—his hands often became hot. He delighted to cool them by the simple expedient of taking his water jug and pouring cold water over them till the basin was full. This would have been well enough had he not sometimes forgotten that the basis was a highly necessary item in this pastime. When intoxicated with music inspiration he often seized the water jug and walked about the room, pouring the fluid first on one hand, then on the other, ignoring the fact or existence of a basin altogether.

"Wagner was also full of eccentricities. One of his most extraordinary was to have his grave constructed during his lifetime in the back garden of his house, at a convenient distance off and sufficiently concealed so that if he were in the mood he might go and have a look at it.

"For pure eccentricity Haydn, perhaps, stands next to Beethoven in the history of musicians. In order to compose to his heart's satisfaction Haydn found it necessary to be up with the lark, on the assumption that while the birds were singing musical ideas came most freely to his mind. He first satisfied himself that every article in the study, every knicknack was in its proper place, and in perfect order, and then he sat down to write. But the most extraordinary thing we have not yet said. At this early hour in the morning for the purpose of prosecuting his studies, he invariably donned full court dress, with bobwig, sword, hat and ruffles. In no other attire could he ben a line—so he averred. He must moreover, have on his finger a particular ring, which he greatly prized—otherwise, such was his fidgety nature, not a musical idea would come into his head.

"Meyerbeer courted inspiration by a different method. The fresh morning air, the songs of birds, were as nothing to his saturnine spirit. But the rumbling of thunder, the flashing of lightning, the plash of a steady downpour of rain, never failed to inspire him with a rush of musical thoughts. For the purpose of enjoying this peculiar accompaniment and source of inspiration to the full Meyerbeer had a chamber constructed for himself at the top of his house, where he could expose himself without restraint to the fury of the elements, with nothing but a glass partition to shield him from the weather.

"The Italian composer Donizetti courted inspiration by another means quite as eccentric, but infinitely more injurious. He was accustomed to immure himself in a room, with a quantity of music paper, pen and ink and three or four coffee pots full of coffee. He began imbibing these when he began to write, and continued till the supply was exhausted. Then he ordered in more, and when that was finished another supply. The amount of coffee which he drank was fabulous—yet, he deemed it entirely necessary for his inspiration. As the result of such an extraordinary habit the once handsome man contracted the yellow colored complexion which we are apt to associate with a Chinese or a Hindoo, his lips were genarally jet black, his nervous system broke down, and this brought in its train the premature decay of his faculties.

"The eccentricity of Rossini was of a very different type to this. He wrote a great deal of music in bed—perhaps most of it. It was his habit to have a roll of music paper and a pencil always lying on a table by his bedside at night, so that in the morning, without disturbing himself in the least, and while still comfortably tucked up in the bedclothes, he might undertake the composition of an opera.

"One day after writing a beautiful duet in this manner, and almost completing it, the sheet of music unfortunately rolled off the bed and continued its dance to some distance on the floor, quite beyond the composer's reach. What was to be done? To get up and fetch it would totally disarrange the bedclothes and spoil his comfort for the rest of the morning. He resolved there fore, rather than disturb himself, to write a new duet altogether, and, having forgotten exactly how the first one went, he invented an entirely new melody for the second. In this way the opera of "Il Turco in Italia" has two duets for one situation, and the singers can always chose the one they like best.

"The eccentricities of Liszt sprang not from laziness or bad habits, but from pure caprice or vanity. He was one of the vainest men alive, and the slave of a thousand caprices. He would only play the piano when he was in the mood, and if pressed to do so against his will often became grossly insulting to his entertainers, or even his concert manager.

"Once, at Rome, he had been invited to a large dinner party at the house of an American woman who prided herself on her musical taste and enthusiasm. After dinner, when several amateur performers had exhibited their skill, Liszt was very politely requested to play a morceau. But, not being in the humor, he refused. The hostess pressed. The composer became obstinate—then rude. At last he strode to the piano, and, dashing off one brilliant cascade of notes, hurried out of the room with the remark, 'There, madam, I have paid for my dinner.'

"The eccentricities of Schumann were numberless, and they were aided, moreover, by very a peculiar temperament and an unfortunate addiction to the bottle, to which in later life he gave way.

"In order to increase the power of his fingers for pianoforte playing he made a series of the strangest experiments with his digits. One of these was to fasten a long piece of string to a beam in the roof, at the lower end of which was a ring, which his middle finger went through. The object of the string and the ring was either to raise to undue heights or to strengthen the finger, we know not which. However, by a persistent application of this engine, the unfortunate composer contrived to maim his finger hopelessly and to unfit himself forever for concert playing—the very opposite result to that which he intended."

The Amende Honorable.

In a certain town of Western Massachusetts two of the most prominent citizens are a Methodist brother and a Presbyterian brother. These are neighbors, and for the most part, dwell on good terms, except when they try to effect an exchange of horses or to talk on religion.

On one occasion the two had traded horses, and although the outcome rankled in the breast of the Methodist, they had met and started a discussion on the subject of predestination. As usual, an altercation ensued, when the Methodist lost control of himself. With mixed emotions concerning horse trades and John Calvin in his mind, he suddenly exclaimed:

"You're a robber, a liar, and a Presbyterian!"

This proved too much for the Presbyterian, and a fight began, in which the Presbyterian got the best of it. As he sat upon his prostrate opponent, bumping his head against the ground, he said:

"Take it back, take it back, or I'll bump your foolish head off!"

"I'll take it back," gasped the vanquished Methodist, "on the first two counts; you're not a robber nor a liar, but you're a blamed old Presbyterian if I die for it!"—Harper's Weekly.

THE paper money in circulation in the United States is to a very large extent dirty, and as physicians and chemists have often shown, is loaded with microbes. No other great nation permits the use of such filthy paper money. In England a paper note is not allowed to be issued a second time, though it may have been very clean when returned to the bank for redemption. There should be some such provision in the United States. A bill is now pending in Congress providing for the destruction of all paper money that may come into the Treasury or any of its branches, and the issue of freshly printed bills. It is an old question. The evil is recognized, but nothing has yet been done to provide a remedy. Disease may be and probably is spread by dirty bank bills. They form a good place for the lodgment of disease germs. Bills are in circulation which are in appearance most objectionable to handle. The expense and trouble of issuing new bills in place of the old ones has been the objection offered to legislation providing for such a change. But that should not prevent action. There should at least be a limit to the use of paper money without renewal. Congress could not do a wiser thing than to provide for the destruction of all dirty bank bills, making their circulation in some way impossible.—Philadelphia Press.

CONSTIPATION

In the Grip of Environment

By HENRY WINTHROP

Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure

Jim Blakely, the clown, came dashing out of the ring into the dressing tent and stopped short. Nellie Cosgrove was sitting on top of the leaping pad, her usually merry eyes streaming with tears. Beside her stood a man looking exceedingly awkward and uncomfortable.

Circus folk are always resentful of the intrusion of the outside world into their domain, and the fact that this stranger wore a frock coat and an exceedingly shiny silk hat was all that was needed to convince Jim that he was the cause of Nellie's tearful eyes. He strode up wrathfully, his painted face in ludicrous contrast to the intense tones of his voice.

"See here," he said fiercely, "this isn't any place for an outsider, least of all for a bloomin' dude what comes in and insults one of our girls. If you don't get out of here quick you'll be sorry for it, and I won't have to call any 'Hey, Rube!' to do it."

Spangles, the Great Dane, that did a pad riding act as well as leading a troupe of trained dogs, pricked up her ears knowingly and rose to her feet. "Hey, Rube!" the circus war cry from time immemorial, was no new sound to her, and she looked affectionately at the left leg of the stranger's carefully creased trousers, deciding that a spot about four inches below the knee would be the strategic point for a grip.

"DON'T, JIM!" SHE SAID PLAINTIVELY.

Nellie raised a hand. "Don't, Jim!" she said plaintively. "He hasn't said anything to me. It's just that they want to take me away."

"Take you away!" he cried incredulously. "Why, you've been with the old show ever since you were a little kiddie, ever since your ma died of yellow fever in Rio, and we picked you up the next season. That was way back in 1892, and you were a little shrimp of twelve. Take you away! I'd like to see the man who'd try it!"

"It's the money," she explained despairingly. "I'm an heiress, and this gentleman is the lawyer. He wants me to go back to New York with him tonight."

For a single moment Blakely's frame grew rigid. The lawyer, a keen observer of men, followed clearly the mental strain the circus man was undergoing. He could see what the girl had never seen, that this man with the uncouth mask of zinc and carmine loved the little rider, and in the brief struggle he read the fight of an honest man with his own desires. In that short space Blakely made his fight. When he spoke his voice was cold and commonplace.

"We always said," he commented, "that your mother's people must be of the right sort. I'm glad of it. Work with the tents isn't for such as you." Then he turned, but more than the makeup came off on the towel as he hurriedly changed his face for the dog act.

As one in a daze he put his pets through their paces, and after the show was over and the concert audience was slowly filing into the show lot he still went about his work as though in a dream.

He had loved and watched over Nellie ever since that time in Rio Janeiro when, "way back in 1892," they had picked up the little slip of a girl, the sole survivor of a circus troupe which had played through South America the season before.

He had known Frank Cosgrove well, a fine, gentlemanly fellow, who had run off with an English girl when her parents had objected to her marrying the "riding master" of an English caravan.

They had come to America to escape memories, and she had taken up with circus life as willingly as though she had not been reared in luxury. It was Blakely who had persuaded Delmore to take the girl into the troupe, and it was he who had completed her education as a rider. Before a broken leg compelled him to take to clowning he had been a wonderful bareback somersaulter himself.

He had hoped some day to make her his wife when the nest egg in a city savings bank had grown large enough to warrant the purchase of a country place and assure a competence when they should have retired. Until then he had spoken no word of love, but rather had encouraged her to look upon him as her foster father.

Now he was to lose her and all that he had planned and worked and saved for. But it was best for her—that was enough for him.

He took no part in the ring bank chat after supper. He had no heart to sit there about the bank and hear the comment that would be made about the good fortune, and he went out back of the dressing tent, and, lighting the short stub of a pipe he carried, blew great clouds of smoke into the soft evening air, as he tried to think what the circus would be on the morrow, with no little Nell to make every one merry.

There in the soft light that came through the tent she found him. Out front all was life and movement. Here they were practically alone. She slipped down beside him on the overturned manger and slipped her hand into his. His horny palm closed over her tiny fingers, and he put away the pipe, but gave no other sign. It was she who opened the conversation.

"I feel like a dream girl tonight," she began confidingly. "Don't you remember how we used to plan that if we ever got money we would start a show of our own, and only have in the company people we really liked and make them do only one act apiece?"

He laughed shortly.

"It's funny what rot we think. Now you've got the money, you've got to go and live up to it. It would never do for an heiress to ride in the ring."

"I don't want to go a bit," she protested. "This is the life I know and love. I want to stay here and be myself, not another girl all dressed up, with servants and all that sort of thing."

He turned on her sharply.

"See here, Nell," he commanded. "Don't talk like that. It's hard work doing two acts twice a day. It's not for you, my girl. Make up your mind to that."

She turned up the turf with the toe of a dainty shoe. "I don't want to make up my mind to it," she protested. "I don't care for the old money. I want to be here with you and all the rest. You hurt me!" she broke off suddenly, releasing her hand from his grasp and rubbing it.

"I didn't mean to hurt you, child," he said sadly. "I was thinking." He could not tell her how that one sentence had torn at his heartstrings, already sore. He rose. "Well, I've got to go in and get Spangles ready. I'll say goodby after the show." He turned on his heel, and presently she could hear him calling to the dog. Then other sounds of preparation began, and presently she, too, went inside.

The "round top" was already packed in the wagons and on its way to the cars when Nellie emerged from the women's side of the dressing tent, where the lawyer waited impatiently for his charge. She went up to the boss property man. "Put my trunk in the wagon, Sam," she said. "I'm going on with the show."

The lawyer blustered and stormed, but she was adamant, and finally he appealed to Blakely.

"You can't go with us, Nell," said the clown, his face as white as though he had not removed his ring makeup. "There is no reason why you should stay on."

She made him a saucy courtesy. "There is every reason, good sir," she smiled. "In the first place, this is my life, the only one I know or want, and besides"—she went very close and whispered in his ear—"besides, I found out back of the tent there that—I—loved you."

And after that what could Blakely say?

The Difference.

Uncle Jared and Uncle Benjamin made a sorry pair. True there was blood on Uncle Benjamin's forehead, and he looked white and faint. But Uncle Jared, who tried to support him, walked with a very pronounced limp, displayed only one coat tail where two should have been and was rumpled and bedraggled generally in a way to suggest participation in a riot.

"What's happened to you two?" asked a townsman.

"That pesky colt of Benjamin's run away and throwed him just as I came along," Uncle Jared answered. "I'm giving him a lift along toward home."

"Look as though you needed one yourself," pronounced the inquisitor. "What's been happenin' to you?"

"Who? Me? Why, nothin' to speak of—just been to town to see the big procession. Got more or less hustled round and tromped on, but"— He stooped painfully to adjust a shoe which had been ripped open so that half of the upper flapped as he walked.

"Don't see much difference betwixt ye, judgin' by the display o' wreckage," the neighbor persisted.

"There's consider'ble difference. I take it," Uncle Jared answered, with conclusive dignity. "Benjamin's met with a accident, but I've been pleasurin'."—Youth's Companion.

The Rector's Blunder.

This is a verbatim report of a conversation that took place in an upper Broadway apartment one Thursday afternoon about six months ago:

"Is this Mrs. So-and-so?"

"It is."

"I am the assistant rector of the Jericho church."

"Oh, yes. Won't you come in?"

"Thank you. I saw your name in the registry and have been trying to find time to call on you ever since I came to the church, but somehow I could not get around to this neighborhood until today. But I think I know your children. Your son sings in the choir, does he not?"

"Yes."

"And your little girl is in Miss Anderson's Sunday school class, I believe?"

"Yes."

"How old are the children?"

"Willie is fourteen and Mamie is nine."

"Well, well, anybody would think your children were older than that."

And he doesn't know to this day why that woman has stopped going to church.—New York Herald.

Religion and the Apartment House

By Rev. Dr. WILLIAM S. RAINSFORD of New York

I FIND GREAT DIFFICULTY in reaching the people that are living in apartment houses—I mean apartments from $35 to $100 a month. For instance, last spring I mailed 6,000 letters to our neighbors, having with great difficulty secured an accurate mailing list. I know the majority of these reached their destination. Almost 8,000 of these letters were sent to apartment houses. I DID NOT RECEIVE THIRTY REPLIES, whereas letters sent to tenement houses resulted in a large proportion of replies. Account for it as you may, the immediate result of the apartment on the religious life of those dwelling there seems unsatisfactory. The apartment dweller doesn't seem to have much sense of responsibility. Dwellings are readily given up. There is constant change. I have tried every way I know. I CANNOT REACH THE PEOPLE IN THE APARTMENT HOUSES.

I notice all over the city that many people, moving away from one church to a neighborhood they do not know, find nothing to attract them in that neighborhood and go to the church they came from pretty frequently first, then less and less, AND GRADUALLY CEASE TO GO AT ALL. I have followed up a number of my people, and I find it a common experience that churchgoing families have been in a new neighborhood sometimes for as many as ten years without receiving ONE SINGLE CALL from a clergyman. The city of New York still has need of men who are prepared to work AS MISSIONARIES.

You cannot win a metropolitan population by waiting for it to come to the church. It is the old, plain, simple duty—THE CHURCH HAS TO GO TO IT, and I do not know any church that does this that doesn't succeed. On innumerable occasions, both in the church and out of it, I have tried to bring to the attention of every one who would listen to me that the way to prosecute modern missionary work in our great cities is to BEGIN WITH THE CHILDREN. There is no other way. If the children are reached by well trained and sympathetic Christian people the missionary success of the church so reaching them is assured. If, on the other hand, the children of the district are not influenced no PERMANENT work can be built up and the Sunday school work becomes increasingly difficult.

ONE OF THE REASONS FOR THIS IS THAT THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MUST COME INTO CONTRAST WITH THE PUBLIC SCHOOL.

Self Government Is Anarchy

By Rev. Dr. CHARLES H. PARKHURST of New York

OUR natural preference is for self government, which is a bombastic way of saying that WE PREFER TO DO AS WE PREFER TO DO. Self government, if you construe the term strictly, is simply ANOTHER NAME FOR ANARCHY. The men who are a moral failure, the nations that have perished, all of them owe their fall to the attempt to administer themselves by rules that are no quotation from that which is eternally right, no quotation from the law of God's own divine righteousness, but by rules that men and nations have legislated for themselves AT THE SUGGESTION OF MOMENTARY EXPEDIENCY, passion and ambition.

IT IS A BLEMISH UPON THE FAIR FACE OF THAT DOCUMENT SO DEAR TO THE HEART OF EVERY TRUE AMERICAN, THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE, THAT IT ASSERTS THAT GOVERNMENTS DERIVE THEIR JUST POWERS FROM THE CONSENT OF THE GOVERNED.

THAT IS FICTION. One of the very reasons that we have to have governments is that there are so many people who refuse their assent to government. That is why we have criminal courts and jails, and if ALL the people in this town who in one form or another are refusing their ASSENT TO GOVERNMENT were to be shut up the jails required would be so numerous as almost to crowd upon the residential portions.

WE LOVE LICENSE AND SPELL IT LIBERTY MERELY FOR THE SAKE OF COSSETING OUR SELF RESPECT.

The Dangers of Violent Athletic Exercise

By Professor WALTER DILL SCOTT, Northwestern University

I HAVE made tests in the psychological laboratory of young men who are prominent athletes and of others who are lacking in all athletic ability.

The first thing brought out in the tests was that ATHLETES ARE NOT STRONGER THAN OTHER HEALTHY YOUNG MEN. Many good football players are not particularly strong in tests of strength.

The second thing I discovered was that athletes are not particularly rapid in their movements. I frequently found that persons of no athletic ability surpassed the athletes in rapidity of movements and muscular strength.

The next thing which I found in my tests was that ATHLETES BECOME EXHAUSTED MORE QUICKLY THAN NON-ATHLETES when both are putting forth their best energy for a continuous period. In my tests to reach complete exhaustion I found that athletes would be exhausted within a few minutes or even in a few seconds, but persons of less athletic ability could not be exhausted in the same time.

My explanation is that an athlete is a man who has all his muscular energy under control AND IS ABLE TO TRY HARDER than others. He is thus able to exert himself in such an extreme manner that the tissues of the muscles and nerves are unable to recuperate as fast as they are torn down, AND EXHAUSTION RESULTS RAPIDLY as a natural consequence.

THE DAY OF HOPE.

The day of the Nativity is the day of hope—the day of hope to the struggling conscience of man; to the human nature which is uplifted in Christ and made partaker of God; to the families of men who believe that sacred human love is not given to perish with the earth, but in Christ is destined to some eternal purpose; to all who labor and pray for the coming of a kingdom where God shall reign in men, and men shall live in peace and good will, where

The war drum shall throb no longer and the battleflags be furl'd
In the parliament of men, the federation of world.

THE CHRIST CHILD'S CRADLE.

La sainte creche—the holy cradle—or the portion of it which is preserved, is in fact only a part of the grating that was placed across the stable trough in Bethlehem to hold the fodder for the animals that fed there. It became the cradle of the infant Saviour when he was laid within the rough trough by his mother and came in time to be regarded as one of the most sacred things on earth. This broken piece of the grating was taken from Bethlehem at the time of the Mussulman invasion in the year 642 and was carried to Rome, where Pope Theodosius took charge of it as one of the most precious of relics.

Whether or not the grating now shown is the true relic, it is certainly extremely old and is interesting for that reason and because of associations that have gathered about it since it became one of the mementos cherished in the Imperial City. It is one of the greatest treasures of the ancient Church of Santa Maria Maggiore.

It consists of five worn bars. These are of wood, worm eaten and gray, that looks as though it might be oak powdered with flour. The bars average about a yard in length, and the entire grating is suspended in a crystal case by silver ribbons.

This case is supported on carved gold and silver feet, and its full length is a meter, its height half a meter. It is surmounted by a beautiful enameled statue of the infant Jesus.

During the year this magnificent reliquary is inclosed in a golden case and disposed on one of the altars of the church. At Christmas time it is exposed to view, and the festival of the nativity terminates with an imposing procession in which the relic is carried, the solemn occasion being presided over by a cardinal.

THE TARIFF AND EXTRA SESSION.

It is now substantially settled, says the Philadelphia Press that the President will not call an extra session of the new Congress next Spring to deal with the tariff. If such a session is called at all it would be for October, just preceding the regular long session into which it will merge.

This determination grows out of a comparison of views at Washington, and is probably the best conclusion that could be reached. If the Ways and Means Committee of the House, in consultation with the Finance Committee of the Senate, could satisfactorily frame the politic corrective amendments to the tariff this Winter, and if Congress could promptly put them through in March or April and thus settle the matter, that would be the wisest course. But this is impracticable. More time is required to prepare the way.

There are two things to be kept specially in view. The first is to effect a substantial agreement in advance on the policy. The second is that whatever changes are made in the tariff should be made early enough not to run into the Congressional elections. If they come at the beginning and not at the end of the long session it will be all right. An extra session in October which should finish the work by December would meet the requirement.

Meanwhile the conservative and rational sentiment of the country and distinctively of the Republican party grows in favor of a moderate and reasonable readjustment of some schedules of the tariff. The action of the Union League of New York is significant. By an emphatic vote it has passed a resolution requesting Congress "to investigate the question of the conditions of manufactures as affected by the tariff with the view of making such changes in the present rates as will remedy unjust conditions, if any such exist." This resolution calls for inquiry, but it plainly contemplates amendments. The Union League is a Republican organization. It embraces a great body of representative business men. Its expression indicates that there is a powerful and widespread sentiment in the same direction.

Not less significant is the attitude of the Pittsburg Gazette. That conservative Republican journal, published in the very citadel and sanctuary of protection and intelligently reflecting both its interest and its feeling, recognizes that some of the schedules would be improved by a readjustment of rates, and that there can be no objection to it provided there be no unsettlement of general conditions. In an article the Gazette makes its position plain. Instead of declaring an unreasoning opposition to any change it accepts the wisdom of rational inquiry and of modifications which will rectify rates that have been outgrown. It opposes an extra session of Congress to take up the subject as calculated to create disturbance, but its objection probably does not apply to an extra session which would practically be a part of the regular session. Coming from the center of the iron and steel industry, its whole expression will carry much weight.

There is no abatement of the protective principle in any of these utterances. But Republicans are more and more coming to perceive that such corrections as will better fit the tariff to present conditions will make protection all the stronger for the future.

"The fact that the good roads has now thousands of earnest supporters in this State," says the Baltimore News in a recent editorial, "was demonstrated at Annapolis last winter when the legislature passed a bill proposing a Constitutional Amendment which gives the State authorities power to make appropriations to the several counties for good roads work, and the fact that a good start has been made on the improvement of Maryland's roads is one on which the State and the counties should be congratulated, even while they are being urged to spend more money on the public arteries of travel."

With the conclusion of work in Prince George's county, Anne Arundel county, Baltimore and Frederick counties, over twenty miles of road petitioned for under the provisions of the new State aid road law shall have been surveyed, and the specifications and estimates will be prepared this winter for the work next spring. Over 150 miles of State road have been petitioned for in all, more than twice enough to utilize the amount of State and county appropriation, and nine counties out of twenty: three in the State have filed petitions for these roads, all but one of these desiring to take up the total allotments.

Effort has been made by the counties to file their petitions before January 1, 1905, in order to obtain the road surveys, specifications, and estimates free of cost. Wherever this is not done, one half this cost must be borne by the county. Petitions have already been made for so much road that it will be impossible to have all these roads surveyed this year. Queen Anne's county heads the list with petitions for 50 miles; Baltimore county asks for 47 3-4 miles; Harford county 16 9-10 miles; Prince George's county 15 miles; Talbot county 10 miles; Allegany county 4 1-2 miles; Washington county 3 2-10 miles; Anne Arundel county 1 mile; and Frederick county 1 mile. Surveys have been completed for the Washington, Allegany and Harford county roads and six miles in Prince George's county are now in process of completion. Anne Arundel county road, part of the Baltimore county and Talbot county roads, and one mile in Frederick county will be the last to be surveyed until next spring.

Talbot, Anne Arundel and Frederick counties have been the last to take advantage of the law, and movements are now in progress in other counties throughout the State to act definitely upon the matter, notably Wicomico, Dorchester and Caroline counties, which within the past several week have decided in open mass-meetings of their tax-payers to take up their full appropriation.

The last petition was received December 5th from Talbot county, for the surveying of 10 miles from Easton to St. Michael's along the Bay Side road. The opportunity which the provisions of the petition from the Anne Arundel County Commissioners allow for the construction of a thoroughly modern road, irrespective of length and cost, is a source of satisfaction to the Highway Division of the Maryland Geological Survey, as the requirements of a good road may be fulfilled here by utilizing the best of material and construction and so securing a model road which will prove to be all that is claimed in its behalf as an invincible argument for scientific highways.

THROWN OUT BY THE THOUSANDS

What Reports to Chairman John B. Hanna of State Central Committee Show.

Chairman John B. Hanna, of the Republican State Central Committee has received reports from about 70 per cent of the election precincts of the city and state in response to his circular note sent prior to the election to Republican judges and watchers. The circular note was asked to state the number of Republican and Democratic ballots rejected and, as far as possible the reason for the rejection.

The returns show that ballots were rejected by the thousands and that both Republicans and Democrats suffered heavy losses, the Republican losses exceeding those of the Democrats in proportion of 8 to 5. The figures prove that if the intention of the voter had been taken into consideration, as was done under the former ballot law, Maryland would have given Mr. Roosevelt from 3,000 to 4,500 plurality over Judge Parker.

The exact losses suffered by the two parties cannot be ascertained, because in hundreds of cases the voter did not make sufficient marks to enable the watchers to determine whether he desired to vote for the Republican or Democratic candidates.

The reports show the practice of bribery in several sections of the state. The evidence is found in peculiar marks on the face and on the back of ballots. These marks conveyed the intelligence to the watchers that the goods had been delivered as bought.

The mistakes in marking the ballot, which led to the wholesale rejection, were due to the arrangement of the names on the ballot, an arrangement which was so devised that it was an aid to Democratic illiterates and a puzzle to Republican illiterates. A cross mark placed at the top of the column of names of electors for president voted the whole ticket of eight names. But the space for such cross marks was by inadvertence or design arranged immediately above those for marking any individual name. Many hundreds of voters in good faith believed that the proper place for marking the whole electorial ticket was the square space opposite the name of the first elector, and accordingly large numbers of votes were cast for but a single elector, instead of all eight. The returns show that this belief prevailed among Democrats as well as Republicans, as both Mr. Brown, the leading Democratic elector, and Mr. Bonaparte, the leading Republican, received much heavier votes than any of their colleagues on their respective tickets.

In commenting on the result in Maryland immediately after the election Chairman Hanna, of the Republican State Committee, said: "It is important to note that, had this election been close, turning in the final result upon the vote of the state of Maryland, the blunders of a few voters in this state might have given the decision to one side or the other. It would have been highly humiliating to the authors of the iniquitous ballot law in Maryland if Judge Parker had missed reaching the White House as a result of combined trickery and blundering for which they were responsible."

Mr. Mudd's majority in the Fifth district would have been larger if the ballots cast for him had been counted according to the intention of the voters. In his own home county (Charles) the proportion of rejected ballots was two to one against the Republicans.

In Anne Arundel county the rejected ballots exceeded 700. It was not discernible in most instances of rejected ballots which were Republican and which were Democratic. As far as the calculation can be made there were 450 Republicans and 250 Democratic ballots thrown out.

What is true of Anne Arundel is also true of St. Mary's and Calvert counties.

Six precincts of Howard county heard from give 69 Republican and 51 Democratic ballots as having been rejected.

It would be supposed that because of the comparatively small colored vote in the Sixth district the Republicans did not suffer heavy losses in that district because of rejected ballots. Such, however, was not the case. The amended ballot law abolishing the party designations opposite the names of candidates was operative in Frederick, Washington and Garrett counties. The absence of the party designation served to complicate the ballot and led to hundreds upon hundreds of mistakes in marking.

In Frederick county there were 278 Republican and 216 Democratic ballots rejected. There were probably 200 additional ballots rejected on which the intention of the voter could not be determined.

Washington county returns show that 200 Republican and 150 Democratic ballots were rejected. In the Twenty-first district of that county 60 Republican and only 14 Democratic ballots were rejected. Probably 200 other ballots were rejected.

In Garrett county the two parties suffered about equally because of rejected ballots. The total number of ballots rejected in the county did not exceed 100.

In Montgomery county, complete returns from which have not been received, about 350 Republican and 200 Democratic ballots were rejected.

In Allegany county 400 Republican and 600 Democratic votes were rejected.

Over 5,000 ballots were rejected in Baltimore city, of which, as far as can be ascertained, 3,000 were Republican and 2,000 were Democratic ballots. There were hundreds of other ballots which contained private marks, showing that bribers had gotten in their work.

THE KNOCKER.

He Is Bad Because He is a Moral Degenerate.

Perhaps the least specific business in the world is that of the habitual fault-finder. Not only does one addicted to this practice soon loose the good will and friendship of his associates, but he is sooner or later despised and shunned by all men.

Lowell Otus Reese writes as follows in the Submarine, published at Coachella, California:

"There's nothing on earth that I hate like a Knocker.

"A soft corn is a gentleman to him and beside him the meanest microbe is a pillar to the church.

"Give me my choice of a Knocker for companion or a violent death, and I'll say, start up the fireworks.

"And his name is Legion,

"Some people are bad because they don't know how to be good. But the Knocker is devilish because he is a moral degenerate who dosen't feel happy unless he is murdering a reputation or crucifying a sensitive heart.

"God created man in his own image and pronounced him good. But the Knocker crawled in under the fence.

"If I had my way about it, I would clothe the Knocker in barbed wire and make him eat red-hot shingle nails forever and evermore.

"I'd give a lot to know whether they will put the Knocker in the hereafter. It's a cinch he won't fly any, and if the devil is half the shrewd gent I fancy he is he won't let him get within hailing distance of the Styx. If I had old Charon's job, I'd sink the boat and drown the Knocker in the darkest place about the ferry. And then I'd wade ashore and go on strike until the whole Knocker family was put on the black list.

"That's me!

"The Knocker is a human rattlesnake with the rattles off. He never lets you know he is going to strike until he shoots a bunch of venom into you, and then he crawls off and lets the poison work.

"Man born of women is of few days but full of trouble. But the Knocker is a pestilence, and death passes him far too often.

Don't forget the old man with the fish on his back.

For nearly thirty years he has been traveling around the world, and is still traveling, bringing health and comfort wherever he goes.

To the consumptive he brings the strength and flesh he so much needs.

To all weak and sickly children he gives rich and strengthening food.

To thin and pale persons he gives new firm flesh and rich red blood.

Children who first saw the old man with the fish are now grown up and have children of their own.

He stands for Scott's Emulsion of pure cod liver oil—a delightful food and a natural tonic for children, for old folks and for all who need flesh and strength.

A SUDDEN DEATH.

Dennis Friend, Aged 22 years, Succumbs to Heart Disease.

Dennis Friend, a son of Stephen Friend, aged about twenty-two years, and living at Goss' lumber camp, several miles north of Oakland, died on last Thursday evening, presumably from heart disease.

The young man had been to Oakland and drove home in a sled to which two horses were attached. Within sight of the house where he resided he was seen by some of the inmates to rise up and then fall over on his face. The horses kept on to the house and when the young man failed to get out of the sled some of the people in the house went to his help when they made the discovery that he was breathing his last. He was carried into the house and restoratives administered to him but he failed to rally.

His funeral took place on Sunday morning.

Seventh Annual Meeting to be Held Next Week at College Park.

Mr. W. McCulloh Brown, the county vice president of the Maryland Agricultural Society, left at this office yesterday some literature relative to the annual meeting of the Society which will take place at the Maryland Agricultural College on next Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 28th and 29th, at which Mr. Brown expects to be present.

The circular announcing the meeting says "everyone interested in fruit, flowers or vegetables is invited to attend. Also by cooperation in the business affairs of the Society, the members may be able to obtain valuable information and aids to their trade in transportation, markets, legislation, etc.

One of the features of the Society meeting this year will be the awarding of prizes for the best selection of apples and vegetables. Parties making shipment of exhibits should address the same to the Baltimore Refrigerating Company, 408 S. Eutaw street, Baltimore. SUNNYSIDE.

H. G. Sanders, Esq, recently returned to his home from an extended visit among the W Va Hills. It is said that "Uncle Henry" is very much impressed with the people of Braxton county.

It is said that Miss Bertha Sanders will soon change her present residence after she changes her name. Oakland is the place she will likely reside.

We learn there is a move on foot by the Red House congregation to purchase a pipe organ after the new church building is completed.

Rev. Rose, of Gettysburg, Pa., preached a very instructive sermon last Sunday morning to a large and appreciative audience at St. John's Lutheran church. Rev. Rose will be with us till the first of January, after which time Revs. Yeagley and Hopkins of Fairmont and Parkersburg respectively, will minister to our people.

This place recently organized a literary society with Prof. Hauser as president. We learn that the attendance is large, the order good and the conductors very instructive.

St. John's Lutheran church at Red House will give an entertainment on Xmas eve. Arrangements have been perfected for the musical Sanders family to furnish the music on that occasion.

Mr. Hervey has discovered that coming among us on horse back to see the object of his love wont win. Better come in a jolt wagon next time.

Mr. Young Lohr was a pleasant visitor in this community on last Sunday. He came up from Oakland in a sleigh, not on horse back, nor in a jolt wagon, took one of our fairest young ladies to church at Red House and returning to Mrs. Brenninger's spent the afternoon and evening most pleasantly.

Wishing the editor and his staff a merry Xmas and a profitable 1905, will stop to go again.

A Christmas Game.

A Yuletide version of the donkey party is played thus: On a sheet sketch or paste a design of a Christmas tree. Have each branch of the tree terminate in a circle containing a number, using the numbers from one to ten or one to twenty-five, according to the size of the tree. Each person playing is blindfolded in turn and is given a rosette with which he must "decorate the tree." Each person aims to pin his or her rosette on or near the highest number of the tree. Each competitor has three trials, three numbers to which he pins nearest being written down to his credit by the hostess, who keeps tally. The one whose three numbers added together gives the largest sum total wins the first prize.

W. J. Durst, an aged man, without home or friends, was brought to Oakland last Friday from a point near Swanton and placed in the jail as a county charge.

In the Presbyterian church the Sunday school children will receive their Christmas treat Sunday evening. No special program has been prepared for the occasion.

Paul Naylor, who was at Morgantown attending the University during the fall term, returned to Oakland Monday to spend the Holidays with his parents.

Messrs. Stewart Hamill and A. T. Mathews, who were in Baltimore during the fall finishing up their law course, have returned to Oakland to remain during the Holidays with relatives.

Mr. W. McCulloh Brown, of near Bayard, was in Oakland Tuesday and yesterday on business. He will leave this county for Baltimore some time next week where he will remain during the winter.

Coasters in various parts of town are having fine sport these nights. So far no serious accidents have befallen those taking part in coasting but there is plenty of time yet for that if present weather conditions continue to exist.

Mr. Ernest Bush, of Eglon, was in Oakland yesterday making some Holiday purchases.

Attorney William R. Offutt was confined to his home several days last week with an attack of the grip.

Mrs. Norman S. Heindel and children left Oakland Tuesday morning for Baltimore, where they will be guests of relatives and friends during the Holidays.

The Methodist brethren are very much elated with the success attending the installation of the new pipe organ in their church in Oakland. This organ is the only instrument of its kind in the county. It cost about $1500.

Rev. W. H. Faust, Baptist minister at Deer Park, announces that he will preach at Deer Park on Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. Prayer-meeting service will be held Wednesday evening at 7.30, to which all are cordially invited.

Rev. J. E. Weigle, pastor of the Cranesville M. E. church is holding a revival at Herrington school house in which an unusual interest is being manifested. He was assisted Tuesday night by Rev. Workman, of St. Paul's M. E. church.

Prof. Ed. A. Browning, county superintendent of schools, is in Cumberland this week attending the Teachers' Institute of Allegany county, where on Tuesday afternoon he delivered a lecture entitled, "The Beauties of Literature and How to Find Them."

Rev. J. L. B. Jones, on his way from Cameron to Rowlesburg last Saturnay evening, became very sick on the train and came on here to receive attention. He had so far recovered Sunday evening as to be able to return home.—Terra Alta Republican.

The annual rush at the local express office is now on. The forces are kept busy through long hours, collecting, distributing and dispatching the numerous packages that come and go. The real congestion will not begin, however, for a day or two.

Rev. Weigle is conducting a very successful revival in the Herrington Manor school house, and was in Oakland yesterday, having come here to procure legal advice concerning a disturbance which took place at the meeting the night before, which was brought about by a malcontent.

"Who is the richest man in the world?" asks an exchange, and begins measuring millions against millions. All wrong. The richest man in the world is the one that gets the greatest amount of happiness out of what he has, whatever it is. It is an old truth, but it was never truer than it is today.

Mr. Charles S. Friend, of Swanton, who entered the employ of the Wildell Lumber Company as manager of the store owned by the corporation, has resigned his position and is now employed as a traveling salesman for Armour & Co. of Chicago. Mr. Friend's headquarters will be at Piedmont, W. Va.

The Christmas services of the Methodist Sunday school will be held in the church auditorium on Monday night instead of Saturday night as was stated in these columns last week. The Lutheran school will celebrate Christmas on Saturday evening when the announced program will be carried out in full.

The tannery of the Hide and Leather Company at Bayard, which has been idle for three years, will start up in a few days, very likely this week with a full force of men. The tannery handles upper leather, is the property of an independent company, employs about sixty men and is the most important industry in Bayard. Last week workmen were engaged in putting the plant in order, so that a start can be made this week.

WATER FAMINE CONTINUES

Drought Continues and There is No Relief In Sight.

Unless rain falls within a very few days the water famine will prove even more disastrous than it has so far. With the heavy fall of snow and prevailing cold, freezing weather what little water moving in the small streams has been frozen solid, thus cutting off the supply in that direction.

Wells and springs never before known to go dry have been drained to the last drop for weeks. Farmers as well as many people in the town are compelled to melt snow and ice for domestic use and to keep cattle alive. The water works in many towns have been doling out water to the consumers and have forbidden the use of bathtubs and other luxuries. This condition is general throughout Western Maryland, West Virginia, Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio. Many large mills and factories have been compelled to close down for lack of water.

FILE MORTGAGE FOR $1.500.000.

The Amount to Be Expended for Completion of Morgantown and Kingwood Road.

Arrangements have been completed for filing the million and a half dollar mortgage of the Morgantown & Kingwood Railroad Company on January 1, 1905, to the West Virginia Trust Company of Elkins, W. Va.

This mortgage is being given to the West Virginia Trust Company as trustee to secure the sale of a million and a half dollars worth of the first mortgage five per cent gold bearing bonds of the Morgantown & Kingwood railroad and are payable semi-annually.

The issuing of these bonds is taken to mean that an enormous amount of work is to be done by the M. & K. company and that they will extend the road east from Reedsville through Kingwood to Rowlesburg and west from Morgantown to Rowlesburg to connect with the Wabash road.

The road has been surveyed and located both east and west and there is no reason to doubt but that building operations will begin soon at either end of the road.

The M. & K. road promises to be of the greatest advantage to that section as it will ultimately give an outlet to the vast natural wealth both in the Deckers creek valley and the western portion of Monongalia county Senator Elkins has been promoting the road.

Up in Fairmont a goat strayed into a neighbor's yard and was shot and killed. A great lawsuit is now on to determine the right to butt in.

The extent of the smallpox outbreak at Fairmont is causing lots of mental anguish to the people of that town. The health officer has issued a statement including every case in the town or vicinity, but many people refuse to believe it. Needless to say the report is an exact statement of conditions.

The Messrs. Cohen, of Somerset, Pa., who have been in Oakland two months or more where they conducted a clothing store, will vacate the room they are occupying on Saturday of this week and ship their goods to the above town. These gentlemen have made many friends during their brief stay in Oakland and have conducted their business in a straightforward manner.

Mr. Lewis Gortner, Second street, has as his guest his nephew, Mr. Otto Gortner, of Seigen, Westphalia, Germany, who arrived here Monday evening to remain his guest indefinitely. Mr. Gortner's purpose in visiting this country is to acquire a knowledge of the English language as "she is spoke" here. He expects to remain in this country about eighteen monthe and then return to his native land.

N. B. Browning and wife, E. W. Forman and George Forman and wife left Tuesday evening for Gainesville, Fla. E. W. Forman and George Forman and wife will locate at Gainesville in the bottling business and Mr. and Mrs. Browning contemplate staying in the state all winter. We are sorry to lose the Messrs. Forman but hope their business quest will be successful. —Terra Alta Republican.

Mr. D. A. C. Porter, who recently moved his family from Oakland, Md. to this city, is spending a few days at home. Mr. Porter is at present employed by the Philippi Suspender Company as traveling salesman. Although having been away from this city for many years, he still has a tender spot in his heart for Grafton, having been born here. At the time of his birth his father, Mr. W. A. Porter now deceased, was agent for the Baltimore and Ohio railroad in this city, and will be quite well remembered by all of Grafton's oldest citizens. Mr. Porter has taken up his residence at No. 447 West Main street, and expects to make this city his permanent home. Graftonians will accord him and his estimable family a hearty welcome to citizenship.—Grafton Sentinel.

Christmas With the Bedouins

By
Frederick A. Ober

Copyright, 1904, by Frederick A. Ober

MY guide's name was Mohammed, and he was a renegade. He wore the funniest of baggy breeches, which were always wabbling from side to side, a bob-tailed Turkish jacket, slippers with their heels chopped off and a red fez perched upon the top of his head, which was as bald as the end of an egg. He had a wicked smirk on his face and a malicious twinkle in his eyes, but for all that he served me faithfully and cheated me only to the extent of 20 per cent. That was his limit, self set, on all the purchases he made for me and the bills of whatever sort he contracted. If he didn't get it out of me he took it out of the Jewish merchants, who added it to the next purchase, so I made nothing by trying to buy at cut rates when Mohammed was not around.

I picked him up at the Bab el Sok, the great market place of Tangier, while haggling for a matchlock with a barrel eight feet long and a snickersnee, or hand forged knife, with blade two feet in length adorned with inlay of arabesques. I wanted them both, but the prices were way out of reach, so I was about to leave them there when Mohammed appeared on the scene. He had been eying me from a corner of the great wall the while, biding his time.

"You want gun, want knife?" he asked me. "Bueno, I get um half price. That do?" I nodded "Yes," and get them he did with a celerity that won my regard at once, and from that moment he was my self constituted bodyguard during my stay in Morocco.

He came to me one day in a state of excitement with the information that a caravan from the interior had arrived at the Sok that morning, and as the leader was a friend of his he could easily secure me a passage. I had expressed a great desire to go on a caravan journey, but had changed my mind on account of hearing that the Bedouins of the Atlas mountains were prowling around the foothills and gathering in every stranger in sight.

"Yes, that right," admitted the truthful Mohammed, "but bandit don't touch this caravan because it protected."

"Why not?" I asked. "It can't be much of a show if it isn't worth while for the robbers to 'touch' it, seems to me. Don't think I care to go."

Mohammed placed his lips close to my ear after looking around to see that there were no listeners and said, 'Robber don't want to do something to this caravan, 'cause he leader a bandit himself!"

"Oh, ho! And yet you say he is a good friend of yours?"

"Very good friend. When I get money 'nough I join he band."

Mohammed [illegible] himself proudly erect and slapped his breast. He evidently expected applause. But he only grinned and showed his big white teeth when I remarked in a manner that was intended to be sarcastic that he seemed to be doing pretty well as a bandit within the walls.

"Yes," he admitted, "plentee money, p'raps, but no excitement! But come see caravan man; no time to lose; start this afternoon."

The caravan man was, if possible, more rascally looking than Mohammed, but the promise of a new sort of adventure appealed to me, and we soon closed a bargain. He agreed to furnish a mule for each of us and to keep us as long as we cared to stay, sending us back to Tangier by the first escort of soldiers that should appear. As a Bedouin born and bred he at first insisted upon my riding a camel, but "once bitten twice shy" is true of that evil beast, and I refused point blank. Then he offered a donkey, but we finally compromised on the hybrid, and late that afternoon, having arranged with the United States consul to send out a search party if I did not return on time, I started on my first caravan journey in Morocco.

It was then three days to Christmas, and I had promised the consul that I would try to be back to take a bite of turkey with him, but as it turned out I was several days late and passed perforce that day of days in the Bedouin camp. But I had my Christmas dinner just the same, as I will now proceed to relate. Being in doubt as to the good intentions of my Bedouin friends, I carried a revolver of heavy caliber snuggled close to one hip, but had no occasion to use it during the journey, which covered two days out and as many back, with three days in camp.

There were some sixty of the Arabs, all men and boys, with not a woman around, which fact was in itself suspicious, as the Bedouins generally travel with their families, including babies in arms and patriarchal head of the clan. By their having divested themselves of their women and children and being stripped to nothing "more than the law allows" they proclaimed that they meant to do some rapid riding and perhaps some illegal plundering. It was none of my business, of course, as they treated me well enough, but I soon learned that they were actually engaged in a "razzia," or robber raid, among the shepherding Arabs of the foothills and that the pretense they had made of going to Fez was to throw the sultan's soldiers off their guard.

All went well, however, during the time I was with them, and when on the morning of the fourth day a detachment of our men came in from an all night raid, driving before them a flock of several hundred sheep, I said nothing, but there was no doubt as to how the rascals got those sheep. We were then encamped in a grove of cocoa palms that adorned an oasis within a small valley surrounded with high hills, upon the crests of which our sentinels were posted.

As my robber friends had taken good care to select for their "razzia" a defenseless community that could not make reprisals in short order, it was in peace and quietude that they prepared to celebrate the outcome of their raid and at the same time, as it chanced, the advent of Christmas day. This latter was not, of course, the result of intention, but it happened that the natal day of the Nazarene fell due coincidently with the Mohammedan festival of Jebraiel, the archangel, and the pious villains "laid themselves out" for the biggest kind of festivity.

Within our "douar," or camp, composed of black and shaggy camel's hair tents there was no turkey or goose or fowl of any sort, but there were sheep galore. These the Bedouins slaughtered by dozens and brought the gory carcasses to the campfires, where they were taken in hand by the cooks and pitchforked on long poles as spits by patient Arabs, who were bent over almost double for hours at a time. Wrapped in their "haiks" and burnooses, with the pointed hoods hanging down their backs, they appeared like a lot of old women pottering over the fires, but through it all they maintained an air of dignity, and if any one had questioned their capacities they would have whipped out their long knives and have carved up an argument with neatness and dispatch.

There was no table, and we were seated around the fire in a large circle—first the chief men of the tribe, including their guest, then the inferior members, and lastly several concentric circles of lean and mangy curs, which were snarling and fighting all the time over the bones we threw to them. The Bedouins' finger nails were curved and sharp as scimiters, so they had no trouble in rending the ribs of sheep apart and tearing off huge mouthfuls, which disappeared as if by magic. Besides the meat we had big dishes of "cuscussa," or "kusskuss," into which the Arabs all dipped their hands, scooping out the rice and gravy and conveying the stuff to their mouths.

Observing that I was somewhat hesitant in following their example, the old chief pawed out some of the choice bits and, before I knew what he was about, crammed them into my mouth. As this was considered the highest honor an Arab could bestow upon a guest I made a pretense of liking it, but never experienced a happier moment than when at last a slave came around with a basin of water with which to lave our hands and beards, proclaiming that the feast was over.

"Now we go see powder play!" exclaimed Mohammed as every adult Arab took up his ever present musket, with barrel of iron or brass several feet longer than himself, and mounted his fiery, untamed steed, which had stood all the while saddled and bridled close by. The powder play, or "lab-el-barada," is a superb exhibition of horsemanship to the accompaniment of a rattling musketry fire and demoniac yells from half crazed men. In reality it is a sham battle, and when the Bedouins, having galloped off to the edge of the oasis, came charging back in a whirlwind of dust and with the thunder of 200 hoofs, yelling like fiends and firing off their guns promiscuously at the sky, at the ground and in every direction around them, I certainly thought the men of the foothills had descended in a body for revenge.

I sought a tree at once. Mohammed declared I shinned up it, but he got me down before any of the Bedouins saw me, fortunately, they were so drunk with excitement.

"Allah 'l Allah; el hamadu, l'illah Allah," they shouted in grand chorus—"God, O God; praised be the God of heaven"—but even with these pious ejaculations on their lips the mad Bedouins looked less like saints than devils let loose from the nether regions. They were black with powder smoke; their gallant steeds, [illegible] them some of Araby's best [illegible] incalculable value, were flecked with foam and blood, but the "play" was kept up for an hour, during all the time of which an old Ethiopian from Timbuktu sat quietly beneath a palm and sawed away at an aboriginal violin.

At last, spent and quivering, the horses were reined up on their haunches in front of the camp, but scarcely had their masters dismounted than there was a great outcry: "They come, they come to avenge the razzia! Mount and meet them, men!" Before they had mounted, however, it was discovered that those approaching were the soldiers from Fez, by whom I was to be escorted. They were about 100 in number and had been out collecting the sultan's taxes.

"How much did they get?" I asked Mohammed after we had arranged for returning with them to Tangier.

"How much? Oh, you mean how many? Well, not many; 'bout fifteen," answered Mohammed carelessly.

"What, dollars?"

"No, heads. There they are in that heap. They bad men—tax dodgers." There they were, sure enough, three packs, containing five heads each, which were to be taken to the city and nailed up above the gates as a warning to tax dodgers throughout Morocco.

COOKING THE CHRISTMAS DINNER.

Marjorie and Mistletoe

Marjorie and mistletoe!
Rarer combination
Never stirred man's heart, I trow,
With sweeter expectation!
Shining spray of mistletoe,
Snowy beads a-cluster,
Lips that lure and eyes that glow
With a June day luster!

Marjorie and mistletoe,
Both suggesting kisses!
Craven be who dares forego
Such supernal blisses;
Craven be, a dullard slow,
Needing small condolence;
Wise the wight, where kisses grow,
Who plucks them nolens volens!

Sleet may beat and swirling snow
Blur the darkened window;
Crooning winds, now high, now low,
Chant a shrill crescendo;
What reck I, where dark eyes glow,
Of starless skies and stormy?
Marjorie and mistletoe
Make endless summer for me!

How We Bought Our Christmas Presents

By ELLERY NYLE

[Copyright, 1904, by C. B. Etherington.]

JOHN and I were married and went to housekeeping just after Christmas. John didn't earn very big wages then, and, although our needs were not as many as they are now, still they were needs and had to be paid for, so we decided to begin in a small way.

We rented only one room, but in Chicago the rent for one room was as much as for a whole house in the little country village where I came from. How we did enjoy furnishing that room! It was a large room, and one corner of it, where my cupboard and my oil stove were, I curtained off for the kitchen, and there was plenty of space left for the folding bed and the few chairs which we had.

Our walls looked bare. I had only one picture, a branch of lilacs, and they looked so natural you could almost smell them.

"We must buy some pictures," said John.

"Not just yet," said I. "Wait a little. We can't get everything at once." And the next day when John came home from his work he stopped in the door in surprise and delight. I had tacked here and there on the wall clusters of bright colored autumn leaves which I had gathered and pressed the fall before.

"Don't you think now we can wait till next year for pictures, John?" I asked.

"Why, it's ten times prettier than pictures, Susie," he exclaimed as he caught me in his arms.

"And it cost only 5 cents for the tacks," said I.

It is surprising how little can please us when we have but little. I do believe we enjoyed those bright leaves better than $15 worth of pictures.

Well, we got along swimmingly. By thinking a little before we bought we made John's wages cover everything. We agreed together that we would not buy a single article till we had the money to pay for it. Sometimes we had to go without things we wanted for several weeks, but waiting for them made them worth all the more.

After John had gone to his work and my home tasks were all done I would sit at my sewing alone and keep thinking. I kept thinking ahead quite a way, as far ahead as next Christmas. John and I had never had a Christmas together. There were some things that I wanted to get, and wouldn't it make a merry Christmas if I could get them then? How could I manage it? And I kept on thinking about it day after day.

John was in the habit of getting up early and going to market for me while I got breakfast, and he would often bring home twice as much as I knew what to do with.

"Why, John, we can't eat all that! Why did you get so much?" I would say.

"Oh, it looked so good it made me hungry! Yes, we can eat it all. I'm as hungry as a bear."

One evening I told John that if he would give me $3.50 a week I would furnish the table with that and do the marketing myself.

"Why, it costs us more than that now, Susie! Three dollars and a half is only enough for one person's board!" exclaimed John.

"Well, we are one, aren't we, John?"

"Yes, but we have two mouths."

"Well, I'll agree to fill them both with $3.50."

"Then here it is," said John, "and you may begin tomorrow morning," and he handed me out $3.50, but he looked incredulous.

I spent 25 cents out of it the next day and less than that the day following, and at the end of the week I had 50 cents left.

"How does it hold out?" asked John when he handed me the next $3.50.

"I have not got in debt," I answered.

How I did hold on to that $3.50 each week! Sometimes I saved more and sometimes less, and on one or two occasions I spent more than the $3.50 when we had company, but nearly every week I managed to keep some of it and put it in the savings bank. We had enough to eat too. Did I have everything I wanted? Of course I didn't. There was many a nice thing that I liked that I didn't get, but you know you can't eat your cake and have it too. We have to deny ourselves in order to accomplish our ends in anything, and I was none the worse off for doing without.

One evening as John lighted his cigar and began to read his paper I said:

"John, we've been learning how to live better since we've known each other, and I've been wondering if—if I dared to ask—why you smoke?"

"Because I'm a fool, Susie," blurted out John and threw his cigar into the grate. I was frightened at what I had done, and John went on:

"I know smoking is no earthly benefit to me. I know it makes me disgusting to you. Don't deny it. I've seen you wipe your mouth on the sly after I've kissed you."

"BECAUSE I'M A FOOL, SUSIE."

I slipped my hand into his. "John," said I, "you have one cigar left in your pocket. Give that to me. Promise me that this cigar shall be the first one you smoke, and when you want to smoke and can't do without any longer come to me, and you shall have it."

"I'll do it," said John, and he handed me the cigar, with glistening eyes. "Susie, you can save a man if anything can." And we clasped hands on it and sealed it still closer than that.

I have that cigar yet, and six years have passed.

We talked it over further, and I proposed that John should hand me the amount he had been in the habit of spending for cigars each day as long as he could go without, and he agreed to do it. I did not tell him what I wanted to do with it.

So every day he gave me 10 cents, and I put it sacredly away, and whenever it amounted to a dollar I put it in the savings bank.

Well, the months went by till December, and the Saturday before Christmas I went to the bank and drew out my small deposits. I had kept two accounts—the cigar fund and the table fund, I called them. The cigar fund was just $29.40, and my table fund was $21.32. Could I believe my own eyes! It fairly made me dizzy. Over $50 to spend for Christmas! This was what I had been dreaming about ever since last February!

My feet scarcely touched the pavement on the way home. I sang all the while I was getting supper. Would John never come? At last I heard his step. How his feet dragged! What could be the matter?

"Do you know next Monday is Christmas?" asked John gloomily.

"I do," I replied in so jubilant a voice that he turned and looked at me.

"Susie, I wish I were rich."

"Why, John, aren't we comfortable, and isn't it better to enjoy what we have than to mourn over what we have not?"

John still looked gloomily into the grate. "Brown stopped me tonight to show me a Christmas present he has bought for his wife, a beautiful gold watch. He has been saving up money for it for a year. Susie, you deserve a Christmas present if anybody does, but see how much I have to buy one with," and he bitterly tossed his scant purse into my lap, "not quite $1.50."

"But, John!" and I laughed in his face. I couldn't hold back any longer. I threw myself into his arms and showed him both my hands full of money. "This, John, is what you did not smoke, and this is what we did not eat. We are rich, John! We don't owe a cent. We have a month's rent and coal paid for in advance, and we have the whole of $50.72 to spend for Christmas!"

John looked at the money, then at me. He couldn't speak for a minute; then he said, "Susie, you're a brick!"

I don't believe there was ever a happier couple walked the streets of Chicago than John and I were that evening when we went out to buy our Christmas presents. Nor was there ever a merrier Christmas in one room than there was in ours. How far a little money will go when one spends it carefully! We were surprised at the things it bought. There were some books for John that he had been wishing for—he had taken to studying a little evenings of late—and there was a little rocking chair for me to sit in at my sewing, and there were a new dress and a pair of gloves for me and a set of silver teaspoons, and there were an overcoat for John and a pair of slippers and a big easy chair, and there was a fine big chicken for the Christmas dinner, with celery and everything to go with it, and a few candies and nuts to make it seem like a holiday. And after everything was bought that we had been needing we still had $8.50 left.

After our Christmas dinner was over and we sat before the grate close together John said to me:

"Susie, how did you save so much out of the $3.50 a week for the table? You always had enough and just the right thing. I believe you could make a feast out of nothing."

"It is all due to a little management and economy, John," I said.

"I think for the coming year I would better give you $4 a week, so you can save still more."

"That will make $25 more saved," I laughed. Then I asked, "John, are you sorry you gave up smoking last winter?"

John drew me close to him as he answered, "Susie, you have made this Christmas worth a thousand times more to me than a year's smoking."

"Not I, John. I couldn't have done it if you hadn't quit smoking."

"And I couldn't have quit smoking if I hadn't had you."

An Interrupted Soliloquy

By KEITH GORDON

Copyright, 1904, by Frances Wilson

"Ugh!" breathed Louise Rainor in disgust as she rubbed away viciously at the glove on her shapely hand. "How I loathe and despise poverty! I actually believe I shed the odor of gasoline just as Madge Carr does the odor of violets!"

"Economy! Economy! Economy!" she continued, punctuating her words with a pull at the fingers of the glove which she was now fastening upon a line where several others dangled in pathetic helplessness. "How I hate the word!"

Talking to oneself has always the advantage of affording relief to pent-up feelings without encountering opposition. So it may have been as much on account of the explosive quality of her thoughts as of the fluid she was using that Louise had selected the far end of the back lawn for her operations that morning.

The fence was high and almost concealed by a network of spring greenery. For a moment the girl forgot herself, lost in admiration of the scene about her—the great old trees under which three generations of Rainors had played and the velvety sward upon which a robin was hopping about in a businesslike search for food.

Then she sighed again, two ominous lines appearing on her smooth forehead.

A silk waist was plunged into its gasoline bath with an energy born of rebellion at things as they were.

"If I had a son," she burst out, carried far beyond the proper scope of maidenly meditations by the strength of her feelings, "I'd teach him from his youth up that money was the greatest thing in the world."

She paused in her work and glanced defiantly about. She ached to have somebody hear the shocking sentiment she was voicing, but the only living thing in sight was the robin, and he was intent upon his own affairs.

"I would!" she affirmed, as if her remark had met with protest. "It's all very well to talk about honor and nobility and all that, but the only thing that the world pays any attention to is money.

SHE CALLED SOFTLY, "JACK!"

"Look at the Rainors! They've been honorable men and true for generations, and the result is that mamma and I haven't money enough to get the roof mended and that the last of the name has to clean her gloves and gowns herself or wear them soiled!

"There's that Seymour girl, just as ordinary as she can be! But nobody cares how 'nouveau' the money is, so long as it is there. I wouldn't have thought, though, that Jack"—

Her nostrils quivered and she dabbed away at the waist in her hands ratherly blindly. During the period of silence that followed, the collar of a light silk waist was subjected to a long and exhaustive friction. One would almost have thought that she had forgotten where she was and what she was doing from the automatic way in which she worked and the unseeing expression of her eyes.

"I don't care in the least"—her voice was really beautifully cool and indifferent—"but it's painful to see people toady so to money—people at least that you care—that is, that you've known a long time.

"She's the very type of a girl that I've heard him laugh at a hundred times, but just the same he danced with her three times at the Willoughbys', was out riding with her yesterday and is probably decorating that gaudy veranda of theirs at this moment."

A careful examination of the waist as she pinned it on the line beside the gloves absorbed her for the next few minutes. Whatever a Rainor did had of necessity to be well done, and no professional cleaner could have eyed his work more critically and minutely than she did hers.

"I suppose the glitter of the millions she will have dazzles him!" she observed scornfully. "Money makes any one fascinating. Too much nonsense has been written about love. Somebody ought to write a great big, stirring epic about money. Properly done, it would make the 'Niebelungen Ring' read like a nursery tale! Don't men and women sell their souls for it?"

Her head went up, and she waited, with a waist suspended dramatically above the gasoline, as if challenging some unseen auditor to contradict her statement.

"I don't blame him a bit!" were her next words, by which the reader will glean that she had made a long stride in tolerance. "I'd do the same thing myself. I'm going to, in fact. Old Mr. Masham's heart and money are mine for the taking, and I'll write him this very morning. What glorious times mamma and I will have when I'm mistress of that fortune—only I wish the poor old man would—

"It doesn't make any difference. I hate poverty, and I'll never marry a poor man. Never!"

Such was her absorption that she failed to notice a tall youth who was coming across the lawn toward her. Seeing that he was unobserved, he came up behind her softly, just in time to catch her vehement declaration. His face reddened, and the surprise that he planned seemed suddenly unadvisable.

"Nobody asked you to, miss, he said," was his mocking retort. And Louise turned toward him with a start. "Odd habit of yours—talking to yourself," he added, somewhat sourly.

"It lightens one's domestic duties," was the lofty rejoinder. "Why didn't Miss Seymour run over with you?" she continued sweetly. "It would have given her a chance to see how 'the other half lives,' you know!"

"Hang Miss Seymour!" crossly.

"From the way you've been dancing attendance upon her"—

Lifted brows and a shrug completed the sentence, but it was apparent that Miss Rainor was highly scandalized. Then she became serious and sisterly.

"Really, Jack, you ought to think about the future—about posterity, you know. Think how important money is and what a golden opportunity you have!"

As she spoke his face became more and more gloomy. Strangely enough, her spirits seemed to rise as his sank.

"Hang posterity!" he growled.

"Mercy, what a vision you call up! Nothing but gibbets and dangling figures as far as the eye can see!" she laughed merrily. "But, seriously, you ought to think of my advice. Money is a very important thing."

There was a brief silence, during which he glared at her in moody indignation.

"Has old Masham spoken?" he asked at last with biting sarcasm. "Oh, I have sense enough to see that I'm not wanted here," he continued without waiting for a reply. "I came to tell you something, but it scarcely seems worth while. I was answered before I had a chance to ask."

He jumped up and started off across the lawn with great strides. The girl watched him with wicked, exultant delight. Suddenly a swift change came over her face, and she called softly, "Jack!"

He turned and regarded her uncertainly, while she looked hurt and amazed. Then he slowly retraced his steps.

"I fancied you had something to tell me," she observed innocently.

"It wouldn't be worth while. You see, I am a poor man."

She clasped her hands behind her and looked him over speculatively, then she shook her head.

"No, I don't call you a poor man. You're big and strong and rather nice. Besides, you have the kind of blue eyes that I like"—

She stopped for a moment, and then she finished softly:

"Old Mr. Masham is my idea of a poor man."

The "Born Fixer" at Work.

"Our clock stopped the other day," said a woman. "When I wound it the pendulum refused to swing. William told me to let it alone until he had time to fix it.

"One evening after dinner William took down the clock. He told the servant to bring him the kerosene oil can. He poured half the contents of the can down the back of the clock. Incidentally he ruined the tablecloth and his trousers. But I didn't mind that. It never pays to interfere with a born fixer when he's fixing something.

"After William had tinkered with the timepiece for an hour he decided to wait until the next night. When he had gone downtown next morning I took it to a clockmaker.

"'Jimminy,' he exclaimed, 'who's been monkeying with this? To remedy the original trouble would have cost you 40 cents. Now you'll want a new face, since this one is soaked with oil. You're in for $4.50 all right.'

"I had the clock in its usual place when William came home to dinner. But he never seemed to notice it. Said he was going to a neighbor's that evening to help him fix his automobile."—New York Press.

Benny on the Kangaroo.

The kangaroo is an animal with four legs, but it only uses half of them at one time. This is because its front legs ain't of much account. What it does not have in front legs it makes up in hind legs. The reason why the kangaroo stands up straight like a man is that its tail is too heavy for it and kind of pulls its head up in the air. I have heard it said that if you cut off a kangaroo's tail the tail will grow another kangaroo, but the kangaroo cannot grow another tail. Once there was a man who drew a kangaroo in a lottery. When he found he could not ride the animal he traded it for a bicycle, which is far more useful, and you do not have to feed it. Let us learn from this not to be cast down when obstacles rise before us on our pathway through life, and if we are good and obedient to our teachers we will succeed. The kangaroo does not walk, like a bird or a human being, but jumps. I would rather be a grizzly bear, which is content with peanuts and raw meat and sleeps through the long, dreary hours.—Chicago Tribune.

"You can fix this hat over the way my wife asked you to," said Standish explosively. "She wants the feather put on the other side, that bow moved to the front, and she wants the rim to bulge a little more over the temples.

"She says you've refused to make any alterations on the ground that the addition or subtraction of another stitch is bound to ruin it, but I tell you that's all nonsense. My wife knows how she wants her hat to look, and if she can't stand up for her rights I'll do it for her. She is coming around this afternoon to try the hat on again. If it isn't ready by that time there'll be no end of a row."

The proprietor twirled the black hat on his forefinger and looked from it to the head saleswoman lugubriously.

"I remember," he said, "that the lady who ordered this hat did bring it back yesterday to be remodeled. Perhaps it will be possible to make the alterations suggested, after all."

The manager's humility made Standish feel very proud of himself. "That's the only way to deal with those fellows," he said when he left the shop. "You've got to meet them on their own level. It takes a man to do that. No wonder women get cheated out of their very eyeteeth. They haven't got sand enough to say the things that have to be said to secure their rights." Throughout the day Standish continued to revel in self congratulations, and he actually went home half an hour ahead of time to see if his wife's hat had been metamorphosed into the thing of beauty he had suggested.

"Well," said he jubilantly, "was the hat all right?"

"All right?" said Mrs. Standish. "They hadn't even touched it. How could you expect it to be all right when you didn't stop in to see about it?"

"But I did stop," protested Standish. "I saw everybody about the place and laid the whole establishment out in great shape. Here's their card. I picked it up as I was passing out."

Mrs. Standish took up the card and read the name aloud.

"O-o-o-o-oh!" she cried. "Is that where you went? Why, you got into the wrong place. What on earth will that manager think? He must think you are crazy."

"I don't care if he does," said Standish limply, "but I would like to know what the owner of that black hat will say if they make it over according to my directions."—New York Press.

Finish Fight at Nashville

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

December 16, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

THE battle of Nashville was not ended with the capture of Shy's hill by Thomas' troops on Dec. 16, for that event destroyed the Confederate left only. The Confederate commander, General J. B. Hood had planted his line to defend Shy's hill on the left and Overton's hill, where the right of his army rested in the position taken up during the night. General Thomas had been so far satisfied with the results of the fighting on the 15th, by which the Confederates were driven back at all points, that he made no new disposition of his troops, but decided to let them complete the work so well begun the first day.

After the fall of Shy's hall and the destruction of the enemy's left Thomas turned his mind toward a flanking movement to be made by General J. H. Wilson's cavalry in rear of Hood's disrupted left flank. Meanwhile the Federal skirmishers in front of Overton's hill pushed forward and reconnoitered the Confederate works at close view. One of the brigade commanders in the line confronting Overton's hill, Colonel Post, thought an assault on the hill, though costly, would carry the point. He was permitted to make the attempt, and General J. B. Steedman's second colored brigade, troops never before under fire, was ordered to advance on an opposite face of the work and make a feint in support of Post. Post's men moved at a run, but when within twenty paces of the parapet a concentrated fire of musketry and grape checked them. Colonel Post fell severely wounded, and the power of impact was lost by the scattering of the ranks. Thompson's colored soldiers became excited when the canister struck them and turned the feint into a headlong charge up to the parapet, where they, too, were hurled back. This was the failure of the day on the Federal side, and half the losses of the whole field occurred there.

As soon as Shy's hill had been conquered and the lines adjoining gave way General Wood's men marched up Overton's hill unopposed, and the Confederate army from left to right dropped away in a state of wild disorder, soon ending in a stampede.

In covering the retreat Chalmer's division of Forrest's cavalry corps maintained their fighting reputation. General E. W. Rucker's brigade planted itself squarely across the Franklin pike, the main avenue of retreat, where Wilson's advance, led by Hatch, thundered down in pursuit soon after night came on. Rucker rode up and down the line outside the barricades to direct and inspire his men. Turning back hastily to avoid some obstruction, he ran into the Tenth Tennessee (Federal), not discovering the mistake until surrounded. Colonel Spalding of the Tenth demanded his sword, which Rucker offered him savagely, point first. Spalding parried and knocked the weapon out of Rucker's hand, who quickly wrenched away that of his antagonist. Spalding picked up Rucker's blade, but before the two could resume the duel Rucker's men began to shoot from behind the barricade, receiving an answer from Hatch's carbineers. Rucker's elbow was shattered by a ball, and he surrendered to Spalding. Meanwhile Forrest's other brigade had galloped back to seize bridges and crossroads on the routes of retreat. With their usual spirit his men held them until the infantry columns had recrossed the Tennessee, not, however, as an army, but as a mob which had yielded up the glories earned in three years of fighting to Thomas on the heights of Nashville. And it cost but 400 Federal lives to save the city and destroy Hood.

Night was falling on the 16th when Thomas' victory over Hood was seen to be complete. A drenching rain set in and, with the darkness, added to the confusion in the Federal lines which were converging as the troops pressed forward upon the two roads by which the Confederates were retreating. These roads were about two miles apart. Wilson's cavalry in carrying out the flank movement directed by Thomas earlier in the day had covered the westerly road on Hood's left with his guns, and this turned the mass of retreating Confederates over to the Franklin pike on the east. Forrest's Confederate cavalry, acting as a rear guard for Hood, skillfully delayed the advance of Wilson's troopers toward the Franklin pike and by this means enabled the larger part of the retreating army to escape capture. There was barely a semblance of organization among the Confederates until they crossed the Harpeth river at Franklin, where they had suffered a bloody repulse on Nov. 30, and where, in fact, as Thomas declared, the fate of Nashville was really decided.

When it was all over Hood confessed that he ought never to have advanced on Nashville after the experience at Franklin. He felt that it would be fatal to the morals of his army to retreat southward from Franklin in the face of defeat. He knew that Thomas was getting re-enforcements and that he would be outnumbered at Nashville, but thought his own men would be better satisfied with total defeat if it came on the heels of a second trial.

At Franklin Hood made dispositions to buffet the pursuing enemy, but a Federal division under General Johnson crossed the Harpeth below the town, turning Hood's flank and forcing him to speed his march southward and abandon his hospital at Franklin, with over 2,000 of his wounded who were unable to march. Fortunately for Hood, the Federals were not able to make rapid pursuit south of the Harpeth. Wilson's cavalry was entirely out of rations. The densely wooded hills, muddy roads, the soft plowed fields rendered quite impassable by recent rains and above all the rapidly rising streams made it impossible for flanking columns to dash across country and overtake the retreating foe.

Hood, of course, destroyed all the bridges behind him, making new difficulties for his pursuers. The country had often been marched over by both armies and was denuded of supplies for both men and horses. The forage bags and haversacks were empty, and the march could not continue until the supply trains came forward from Nashville. A heavy rain which set in on the second night of the pursuit turned to a violent snowstorm on the next night, and General Thomas ordered the cavalry corps to remain in bivouac. The experience proved how difficult it is to really wipe out an army even after it has been defeated by overwhelming numbers unless it is actually surrounded.

The delay of Wilson's corps was a godsend to Hood, who marched steadily on and put his army across Duck river at Columbia, three days' good march from Nashville. The bridges at Columbia, which Thomas had refrained from destroying a month before, thinking that he would need them in the pursuit of Hood, to which he had looked forward confidently, Hood used for the transit of his army and wagons and then destroyed, making a second check upon Federal pursuit. Furthermore, he reorganized his shattered infantry into brigades to be in a condition to fight if pressed too close. As each of the reorganized brigades mustered only 500 men, half the maximum size for a single regiment, it was evident that the once proud Army of the Tennessee was about as badly battered as an army can well be and yet keep a front turned against the enemy.

At the crossing of the Tennessee river, the next great obstacle in the way of Hood's retreat, another Federal oversight played into the hands of the Confederates. A Federal pontoon bridge had been left at Decatur, on the river above Hood's point of crossing, when the post was evacuated by Thomas' order in November. Swollen by the constant rains, the tide tore the bridge loose and carried it downstream, where Hood picked it up and laid it before the arrival of his own train, which was delayed by the terrible condition of the roads between the Tennessee and Duck rivers.

Even this bridge was disputed before Hood had crossed his men over, for a couple of Federal gunboats which chanced to be cruising in the vicinity steamed toward it and would have riddled the frail structure with all its human load, but Hood happened to have at hand a battery of light guns, and the gunboats backed away after a few shots had been fired at them. This was the last shot of the army under General Hood. GEORGE L. KILMER.

Ells and Barleycorns.

There are two or three standards of measurement which appear in the tables, but which comparatively few people understand. The hairbreadth, the barleycorn and the ell are the most common stumbling blocks and need explanation. The table of measures says that three barleycorns make one inch, and so they do. When the standards of measure were first established three barleycorns, well dried, were taken and laid end to end, three being understood to make an inch in length. The hairbreadth, now used indefinitely and conventionally for infinitesimal space, was a regular measure, sixteen hairs laid side by side equaling one barleycorn. The ell was the exact length of the forearm of Edward III., who established, or rather revised, the system of weights and measures in use in his time.

GOOD-ROADS LAW VALID

State Appropriation Held To Be Constitutional.

Judge Burke, sitting in the Circuit Court at Towson, decided this morning that there is nothing in the Constitution of the state to prohibit the Legislature appropriating a sum of money annually for the purpose of aiding the various counties in building good-roads. Notice of an appeal from Judge Burke's decision to the Court of Appeals was immediately entered, and the case will be taken up at once.

As the result of a long crusade in favor of better highways the Legislature last winter passed a bill appropriating $200,000 annually for good roads, the money to be divided among the counties in proportion to the mileage of their road systems whenever such counties by proper action decide that they would bear one-half the cost of improving the roads. The State Geological Survey Commission was authorized to survey the roads to be improved and to have general supervision of the work. Over 150 miles of good roadways have so for been petitioned for.

Baltimore county was among the first counties to apply for part of the appropriation, which does not become available until January 1, 1905, and already surveys have been made of 47½ miles, the county's limit under the bill. Mr. Frank Bonsal recently filed suit in the Circuit Court for injunction to prevent the County Commissioners, acting as highway commissioners, from accepting and using any of the State appropriation on the ground that the Legislative act was unconstitutional.

Mr. Redmond C. Stewart argued the case this morning, for Mr. Bonsal, basing his plea as to the unconstitutionality of the act entirely on the section of the Constitution of 1867 which prohibits the lending of the State's credit to private individuals or the appropriating of money for works of internal improvement. Judge Burke, in deciding against Mr. Stewart's contention, took the ground that the prohibition was intended to apply to appropriations for such purposes as railroad and canal construction work, and not to road word. He denied the injunction without even asking Messrs. John J. Donaldson and Osborne I. Yellot, who represented the County Commissioners to make their arguments.

Because of a doubt that existed last winter as to the constitutionality of direct appropriations for good roads, the Legislature passed a constitutional amendment submitting the good-roads question to the people. This, like the Poe disfranchising amendment, was not signed by Governor Warfield, and the question whether or not these two amendments shall go on the official ballots next fall is now before the Anne Arundel county court. Should the Court of Appeals sustain Judge Burke's decision, there will then be no necessity for the adoption of the good-roads constitutional amendment, but if the same court holds that the amendment was legally passed without the Governor's signature, the amendment will have to go on the ballots anyhow, and be voted upon.—Baltimore News.

Coal Bin Economy.

Moisture in a room in winter saves fuel. This tip is not given by the coal dealers but has been published in the weekly bulletins of the health departments. And it is perfectly consistent too. Scientific tests, moreover, have amply proved that a percentage of moisture of about 50 with a temperature of 65 yields the best heat and comfort. With a temperature of 74 and a relative humidity of 30, as compared with a room heated to 68 degrees and a relative humidity of 60, the latter has been found to be the most comfortable.

Estray Notice.

This is to give notice that about June, 1904, there came to my place a yearling steer without mark, red in color; also three two-year old heifers, which came in the early part of October, all three being red and white, marked with end off left ear and underbit out of right ear. The bill states, that the plaintiff and defendant were married by the Rev. W. E. George at Deer Park, in the year 1894, and that they resided together at Garrett county aforesaid until about the month of April 1897; that the conduct of the plaintiff towards the defendant has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, and without any just cause or reason, the defendant abandoned and deserted the plaintiff, and has declared her intention to live with him no longer, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for more than three years, to-wit since the month of April, 1897, and is deliberate and final and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation; that one child, George W. The bill then prays for a decree divorcing the plaintiff and defendent a vinculo matrimonii and for general relief and an order of publication against the absent defendant.

It is thereupon this 25th day of November, 1904, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, ordered that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 20th day of December, 1904, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning her to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 17th day of January next, to show cause, if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

DISAGREEABLE WEATHER COMING

Heavy Storms of Snow, Sleet and Wind May be Looked For.

Rev. Irl R. Hicks makes these predictions for the month of January:

First storm period, reactionary, is central on the 4th and 5th. The indications are that the storm period reaching into January from December, 1904, will cause unsettled weather up to this reactionary period. The causes at this period will be at a minimum, the secondary Vulcan influence and the Moon in conjunction with Sun being the main factors.

By the 4th changes to warmer will be the order in western parts, a corresponding fall of the barometer will attend the rising temperatures, and rain and snow will visit wide extremes reaching north and south; as the general storm conditions advance eastwardly to the Atlantic about the 4th to 6th. A prompt change to rising barometer, northwesterly winds and much colder will set in behind the storm areas the west side of storms to Atlantic.

The second storm period, regular, includes the 9th to 13th, being central on the 17th. The regular Vulcan period, with Moon on the equator, in apogee, and at first quarter, are the causes at this time.

Decided change to warmer, winds shifting to southerly and falling barometer, will appear to the westward about the 10th. During the 11th, 12th and 13th rains will visit Southern and Central states, turning to snow in the north and as storms reach sections east of Mississippi River. One the 11th, winter lightning and thunder are likely toward the south. Blizzardous conditions and very cold will appear with rising barometer out of the northwest progressively behind these storms. If barometer is low in the south at this time, severe cold will be induced possible to the gulf. Watch barometer and indications.

Third storm period, reactionary, is central on the 16th, 17th, and 18th, and is almost sure to bring in a spell of threatening, stormy weather that will run into the storm period following.

The fourth storm period, regular, is central on the 22nd, extending from the 20th to the 25th. The cause disturbing this period are the regular Vulcan influence, the Mercury equinox central on the same day with the Vulcan period, with full Moon on the 21st, in perigee on the 23rd, and on the equator on the 25th.

In all reasonable probability this period will bring the worst storms and weather of the month. It will come in with rising temperature, falling barometer, quickly causing general cloudiness and rains. The barometer will fall phenomenally low, generally the rain will turn to destructive sleet over vast regions, and the culmination of the perion will bring dangerous blizzards out of the northwest, attended by rising barometer and extreme cold wave. Let nothing divert your attention from the possibilities of this period, and the very great cold to follow. This is one of the times when severe cold will penetrate far into the South and East.

The fifth storm period, reactionary is central on the 28th and 29th. The Mercury purturbation continues into this period, there being only one other cause of disturbance—the Vulcan reactionary.

Cloudy, stormy, blizzardous conditions will leap up to this period; about the 28th and 29th, the general cold will relax, the barometer fall and renewed storms of rain and snow return to most parts. The month promises to go out with high barometer and clearing, cold weather in most parts.

HIGH SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENT

And Social Gathering Held at the School Building Last Friday After noon.

On last Friday afternoon the Oakland High School, assisted by other members of the public school, rendered a very interesting and enjoyable entertainment, consisting of addresses, recitations, songs, readings, etc., at which was present a number of invited guests.

The opening address was made by the Prof. J. Frank McBee, A. M., the principal of the school. His scholarly address was full of meaning and to the point in modern and up-to-date educational work.

He said with emphasis parents and friends of the school were always welcome. He was anxious to have the earnest cooperation and support of the parents in assisting the children to lay a solid and substantial foundation for an education which would serve them and help them through life.

The programrendered was as follows:

Song, "Christmas Welcome,"—by school.
"Recitation," Paul Workman.
Song.
Recitation, May McCrobie.
Song, "Massa."
Reading, Miss Leary.
Song, "The Christmas Sleighride"—school.
Recitation, Reta Fraley.
Solo, Olivette Shartzer.
Recitation, Clara Shrout.
Gems, Two young ladies.
Recitation, Katie Wolf.
Song, "Dixie", school.
Recitation, Miss Workman.
Solo, Grace Falkenstine.
Merry Christmas.

Rev. J. B. Workman addressed the school and urged the parents to lend a helping hand by uniting their efforts with the teachers of the several grades thereby encouraging teacher and assisting the child.

Mr. Daniel Hinebaugh, trustee, made a very encouraging and complimentary address. He was followed by trustee J. E. Harned who made a few remarks expressing his satisfaction and appreciation of the work being done by the teachers and the educational interest manifest throughout the school.

A number of visitors were present and all enjoyed the inspiring songs and recitations. When the entertainment was over the High School and visitors adjourned to a room across the hall where a feast of refreshments consisting of ice cream, cakes, fruit and candies of the most delicious sort were served by the ladies of the high school, adding to the happiness of all present. A vote of thanks was tendered the school for heir splendid entertainment in its entirety.

Prof. McBee was presented by the ladies of the high school with a very handsome fountain pen as an expression of appreciation of his earnest efforts in their behalf. The entertainment was novel and thoroughly appreciated by all in attendance.

HUTTON

The storm of Sunday did much damage to fruit trees, telephone lines and telegraph wires.

Mr. Biggs, night operator here, has moved into one of the Connell houses.

Mr. and Mrs. Sluss, of Cumberland, are visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Canty.

The greatest Christmas blessing to this section this year was the replenishing of springs and wells by the abundant fall of rain and snow.

This village ought to be well versed in current events. We have three newsboys selling 20 to 25 papers daily.

The "Hutton Switchers" are curious to know what can be the attraction that takes the tall, handsome B. & O. telegraph operator down to the tannery so many evenings a week,

CHRISTMAS QUIETLY OBSERVED IN OAKLAND

Aside From Services in the Various Churches Nothing of Moment Occurred.

THE WEATHER UNFAVORABLE

Observances of the Day in the Churches—Business Suspended On Monday—Ice and Rain Interferred With Business.

This has been an extremely happy and pleasant Christmas season to the people of Oakland and surrounding country, notwithstanding the weather conditions, which on Friday and Saturday last were as bad as the they well could be when a driving rain and sleet storm set in covering the entire country, trees, houses, fences and everything exposed to the furies of the elements with ice upwards of half an inch in thickness and entirely dissipating the snow which up to that time had covered the ground to a depth of several inches, making the the sleighing the best we have had in this community for years, and consequently paralyzing business so far as its coming from the country was concerned.

In the Lutheran church the holiday was celebrated Saturday night by the children of the Sabbath school when a well laden tree was filled with gifts and candy for the little ones who assembled in large numbers to participate in the rendition of the specially prepared program for the occasion and to receive from the hands of the Sunday school officials their annual treat of good things.

In the Presbyterian church is simple service consisting of devotional exercises and the distribution of gifts for the children of the Sunday school took place on Sunday evening.

The holiday was celebrated on a somewhat broader scale in the Methodist church Monday evening when the scholars were treated to gifts and candy from the school and their teachers. The church was very prettily decorated for the occasion. The literary entertainment which was rendered by the little tots reflected great credit upon those who selected the program and expended their energies in perfecting the participants in performing their several parts.

Christmas coming on Sunday, the day was generally observed by the business men the following day, Monday. Nearly all business was suspended by those engaged in commercial pursuits who enjoyed the day at their firesides, the weather being of such a nature as to keep everyone within doors.

BITTINGER.

The bountiful rain fall that came last Saturday and took away the snow disappointed the young people who were planning for Christmas sleighing parties, but it delighted the good old farmers whose springs and wells were dry. So the farmers are over the drougth and the young folks will get over the disappointment.

Two daughters of Mr. Amos Bittinger, of near Oakland, are visiting their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel J. Brenneman, at this place.

Mr. G. W. Engle, of Baltimore, came home yesterday, to spend the holiday season with his family here.

Mr. Fred Snyder, who has been employed at Davis, W. Va., for some months past, came here to spend Christmas with his son Master Clark.

Messrs. T. B. Wiley and Amos Reckner went to Lonaconing last week with produce for market. While there the snow left and they were forced to sled it home in the mud.

Miss Fannie Witsel, of Avilton, came to this place last Sunday and was accompanied home by her son George who has been attending school here.

Miss Annie Buckle who is employed at Grantsville, spent Christmas with her parents at this place.

Congressman Pearre Home.

Congressman and Mrs. George A. Pearre arrived in this city from Washington Saturday and are guests of Col. Pearre's sister, Mrs. Merwin McKaig, Baltimore street. Col. Pearre was at his office Tuesday and greeted many of his friends, who called to extend the compliments of the season. The Congressman is in excellent spirits and seems to have regained his former good health.—Cumberland News.

CHRISTMAS IN ANDERSON CHAPEL

The Festival Season Appropriately Observed.

Saturday evening, December 24th, the night before Christmas 1904, will be memorable among the local happenings of many church people of this community,. Even before the early hour of this short-day season when

"Nature had let her sable curtain down
And pinned it with a star," residents of Swanton and its out lying sections, were gathering in the Protestant Episcopal Chapel in anticipation of the Sunday school Christmas observances previously advertised.

While the weather of the outside was chill and trying to an extraordinary extremity, all was cheerful and glowing within the walls of the brightly illumined building. The interior of the church had been dressed and beautified by lavish trimmings and adornments, and at the chapel rail was a spacious table laden with choice fruits and confections for juvenile members and prizes and presents for those of riper years. An admirably chosen programme of music and recitations captured and held in willing bondage attention from beginning to end. Participants in several of the renditions acquitted themselves with such taste of manner and grace of expression as to merit more elaborate mention than space for this article permits us to indulge.

As an agonizing prelude to the distribution of the sweets to the young and gifts to others, the Superintendent briefly addressed the audience, pointing the contrast between the "Peace and good will" dwelling in our borders and the fierce and sanguinary war now raging in the Eastern Hemisphere as not only to menace a dismemberment of mighty power but as to jeopardize existing diplomatic commercial relations of the world.

Referring to Sunday school advancement and propagation in general, he stated that at a World's Convention of Sunday Schools last April in the ancient city of Jerusalem it was statistically shown that the Sunday schools of the United States now number more than one half of all the Sunday schools of the whole world. If that assertion is correct we should carry it in the transparencies and bear it upon the banners in the march of American progress.

That the occasion was enjovable and the performances entertianing to the respectable audience assembled, was convincingly attested by such orderly attention and deferential behavior as reflected credit upon the visitors and won the gratitude of the school.

RELLIM.

SLEET STORM KNOCKS OUT TELEPHONE LINES

A Strenuous Time Experience By The Local Company Monday.

WIRES DOWN IN ALL DIRECTIONS.

Repairs Made Tuesday and Yesterday—The Service Again Established and Giving Good Satisfaction.

The sleet storm which set in here on last Saturnay evening and continued throughout Sunday and Monday and up to a late hour Monday night had the effect to cover everything exposed to it with a thick coating of ice, breaking down telephone and telegraph wires, stripping trees of their limbs and branches and in many instances the weight of the ice was so great that immense trees which had withstood the storms of many generations were entirely uprooted.

The local telephone lines were a mass of entangled and broken wires, paralyzing the service for two days notwithstanding the fact that men were at work from the outset of the storm making need repairs, but the ice congeated so quickly that as fast as one break would be mended another would occur. The repairs to the lines were completed yesterday and this morning the service through the country and to Cumberland has been re-established and is giving excellent satisfaction.

The telegraph companies suffered largely also. Wires were not working hardly at all on Sunday and Monday. It was barely possible to keep the train wires in repair and thus keep traffic on the move.

From an artistic standpoint the sight of the ice covering all nature was a most magnificent one, especially so when the glint of the sun's rays struck the ice which gave back myriads of scintillating sparks.

When Lovers Disagree

By Mrs. FRANK LESLIE

WHO shall decide when lovers disagree?

For disagree they are sure to, as they have done since time began, whence the oft quoted aphorism about the much accidented course of true love. Considering how universal a concern love is, what a tremendous part it plays in our lives from the first moment we have anything to do with it, and to what infinite vicissitudes it is exposed, OFTEN FROM THE MOST TRIVIAL CAUSES, it seems deplorable that counsel and aid in such a portentous matter should be administered in such a desultory and empirical fashion as at present. There are no regular tribunals of sentiment, no qualified counselors of love, no Cupid's advocates in regular practice. THE SPIRIT OF ANARCHY is rife in the domain of the heart no less than in the world of society.

There was a time, without going back to pagan antiquity, when the sentimental code was AS PRECISE AND AS FIRM as the criminal one—a great deal more so, in fact—and when its provisions bore all the weight of SPIRITUAL and chivalric laws.

It was in the time and in the land of chivalry, in old Provence, when the popes were at Avignon and the troubadours in the chateaux, ere love had been superseded by formal "gallantry," that the courts of love flourished.

Although it was not a question of "woman's rights" in those ingenuous days, the Provencal courts were INVARIABLY composed of women, all, of course, beautiful and young, though "expertes en galanterie" and rose crowned graduates in the school of the heart. They held their deliberations, rendered judgments AND METED OUT PENALTIES OR PRAISE, sometimes in myrtle trellised pavilions beneath the shades of olives and pines, again (in winter) in stately halls, enriched with the armorial bearings of the fair and noble advocates enthroned in state. Here are some of their dicta, which hold as true today as when they were first formulated:

"Love ne'er lodged in the house of avarice."

"IT IS UNBECOMING TO MAKE LOVE TO ONE WHOM IT WOULD BE UNSEEMLY TO MARRY."

"You must learn to keep a discreet tongue before you can learn to love."

"FACILITY DEPRECIATES POSSESSION; DIFFICULTIES EXALT IT."

"No one can have two SINCERE loves at the same time."

"The gifts and pleasures of love must be voluntary AND MUTUAL."

"Love CANNOT rest stationary. It must continually either augment or diminish."

"WHEN LOVE BEGINS TO DIMINISH, THE END NECESSARILY IS NOT FAR OFF."

Unions and Trusts Are Expressions of the Socialistic Spirit

By Bishop THOMAS F. GAILOR of Tennessee

IN the presence of admitted dangers, of problems unanticipated and of TRUTHS HALF SEEN, the idea of the social man as the only true man, and of social obligations in the community, the state, the nation, is the great and fruitful and splendid idea of our time.

Socialism is in the air. Primarily it means organization, the combined efforts of the many FOR THE GOOD OF ALL.

The American trade union and the American trade trust are each in their way EXPRESSIONS of the socialistic spirit, and doubtless have their use and place in the progress of the world.

But when they forget their limitations, when they aspire to become ENTHRONED OLIGARCHIES and to dictate absolutely the industrial conditions to 80,000,000 of free people, they are inviting ruin, they are sowing the wind TO REAP THE WHIRLWIND.

The world's tendency today is toward union, organization, combination AND SOLIDARITY. Then let us encourage the individual, for there are some things, and they are the finest things in life, which only the INDIVIDUAL can furnish. Against the dominion of mere machinery we must set up the claims of art, literature, science and religion. Out of the dull routine of mere mechanical industry we must save manhood by creating, fostering, INDIVIDUAL TASTE AND CULTURE. Against the rule of the average and common we must strive to make our people recognize and approve the supremacy of that which is original and noble. This is our educational ideal.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY IS AMERICA'S MOST TREMENDOUS RESPONSIBILITY. THE GREATEST TRUST IN THE WORLD IS THE TRUST OF AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

The Broad View of Education

By CHARLES W. DABNEY, President Cincinnati University

MODERN democracy, realizing the menace of ignorance TO HER VERY EXISTENCE, has resolved that every child within her bounds, rich or poor, white or colored, shall have an opportunity to get all the education it can take. NOTHING LESS THAN THIS will meet the requirements and fulfill the ideals of a government "of the people, by the people and for the people."

Schoolhouses and schoolmasters are cheaper than jails and soldiers, but we do not found the public school on any such ground as this. Such arguments for free schools are little less than an insult TO A FREE PEOPLE. The democracy establishes its public schools to train new citizens and fit them for self government, and when it shall have done its FULL duty in this respect there will be no need of policemen and soldiers.

THERE IS NO CLASS, NO ARISTOCRACY, IN EDUCATION. EDUCATION IS FOR ALL.

The C. O. D. Man

He Tells How He Wrote Poetry and Lived High.

"THAT'S all O. K.," said the C. O. D. man, as he received and pocketed a coin of the last vintage. "The C. O. D. system, on which I have been doing business for the last five years, saves bookkeeping, banking and lots of other trouble. You get what you pay for, and I get the money, and neither of us has to send out a collector.

"As a dilapidated gentleman, making a tour of the country every year, I have no rating in the commercial agencies, and as an interviewer your checks might be marked 'N. G.' at the bank. Now, to proceed.

"Three years ago I was up in Connecticut on the wander, and as my old shoes, which, by the way, once belonged to a member of the legislature of that state and were run down at the heel, had blistered my feet, I looked for a place to lay up for three or four days and take things easy.

"You can understand by that I was willing to do light work for some farmer for a bed in the haymow and a few meals in the wood shed. That's the difference between a professional tramp and a dilapidated gentleman. The one won't work under any circumstances, while the other quits the road occasionally to take up the hoe.

"Along about sundown I came to a good looking farmhouse with a middle aged woman sitting on the piazza. I opened the gate to be told to go on about my business, and though I offered to work for my board the terms were refused. I was turning away when the woman suddenly changed her mind and called me back and said:

"'Perhaps you are not a regular tramp?'

"'No, ma'am, I'm not. I'm only a dilapidated gentleman making a farewell tour of Connecticut.'

"'What is a dilapidated gentleman?' she asked as she looked me over in a puzzled way.

"'It's an ex, ma'am—an ex-Harvard man, an ex-swell young fellow, an ex-son of a millionaire who wouldn't marry the parlor maid his father had picked out for him, an ex-member of society who has become disgusted with the world and taken to sauntering over the country. I can hoe corn or potatoes, cut grass, milk cows, repair fences, sing a song, feed the hogs, write poetry or most anything else.'

"'You say you can write poetry?'

"'I can, ma'am.'

"'Then you may stop tonight, and tomorrow I will talk to you further.'

"I had no idea what she was after in the poetic line," said the C. O. D. man, "but after a good supper, a good bed and a square breakfast she called me into the sitting room and explained that she was a widow. In fact, she was three widows in one. She had married three times and buried three husbands. I started out to sympathize with her, but she hinted that she was going to change her name soon for the fourth time and wasn't looking for condolence. She wanted poetry instead. She hadn't erected a gravestone for any of the three yet, but was going to give an order for the trio in a bunch, and she wanted something better than 'Sacred to the memory of ——,' etc. I got her idea of what she wanted, and she said she'd give me board and lodging for a week if I hit it. I took pencil and paper to the barn and sat down, and in about an hour I was ready to show her the following:

"I grieve for Thomas lying here—
In health I ne'er forsook him,
But held his hand until the last
And wept when death o'ertook him.

"Full kind and gentle Thomas was;
His nature it was cheerful.
And, though he died long years agone,
His widow still is tearful.

"That seemed to dispose of No. 1 all right," said the C. O. D. man, "and I sharpened my pencil and went after No. 2. It wasn't much of an effort to get off the following and add an extra verse for his being 'next:'

"For thirty days James Speedwell lay
Upon his bed a-dying,
And all this time the doctor, he
To save his life was trying.

"But death had marked him for his own—
A case it was of fever—
And, though he clung to his dear wife,
He had to die and leave her.

"Her love for him will always last;
His kindness she'll remember.
Her tears will ever fall for him
In May or in December.

"That brought me down to No. 3," said the poet, "and as I had lots of time I did the handsome thing by him as follows:

"And now we come to Henry Clay,
So wise and good and tender
That if he is an angel now
His neighbors needn't wonder.

"No unkind words e'er passed his lips,
No word but love was spoken;
He thought the world of his dear wife
Until his back was broken.

"One summer's day he hied him forth
Into the field for haying,
And one short hour had only passed
When he was found a-laying.

"His back was broken and his neck
Was also badly twisted,
And, though a doctor came at once,
On dying he insisted.

"He died at sunset, noble man,
And he was duly buried,
And ne'er will Henry be forgot,
Though oft his widow's married.

"When I submitted my humble effort for criticism," said the poet, "the widow kicked a bit over the last two lines of the last verse, but after thinking it over for a couple of hours she came to the conclusion that it was all right. For five days I had nothing to do but sleep, eat and lie in the shade, and when I at length jogged on she made up a suit of clothes for me out of what the three lamenteds had left and added a fifty cent piece and her blessing.

"That was the only time I ever entered the field against Longfellow, and I came out of the contest better than I hoped for." M. QUAD.

Left a Letter on the Desk.

Our little youngster, six years old, has just reached the "learning to write" stage in school. Sometimes his teacher has the children copy moral precepts from the blackboard into their copybooks. Among these was the statement, "Kind words are never lost." In Freddy's book, however, written clear across the paper to the other margin, this appeared: "Kind words are never los." When he was asked, "Where is the t, Freddy?" he replied: "Oh, there was no room on the paper for the t, so I left it on the desk. You can see it there if you go to the school."

The same youngster has a sister who was married recently. Being on a visit to her parents and happening to catch Freddy in some mischief, his sister reproved him. "Umph!" sniffed Freddy. "You needn't scold me. You don't belong in my family anyway."—St. Louis Republic.

He Was Ready.

"At a certain Swiss hotel," said an American tourist, "when I got ready to go I tipped everybody who had waited on me to the slightest extent and was ready to drive off when an individual appeared and asked if I had forgotten his existence.

"'And what did you do for me?' I asked.

"'I am the undertaker in the canton,' he replied.

"'But, thank heaven, I have not needed your services.'

"'That is not my fault, monsieur. For two weeks have I been ready to patch up your mangled remains and send them on to your friends with my condolence, and yet you have refused to go up on the mountain and meet with a fall. It is not for what I have done, but for what I should like to have done.'"

A Budding Diplomat.

She was exceedingly pretty, with soft blue eyes, a scarlet mouth and little wisps of gold blowing around her brow, for all the world like tendrils. But as she looked up from her desk and saw the troublesome boy whispering behind his book her eyes dilated, and two perpendicular lines between her eyebrows were plainly visible.

"Tommy! Tommy Taite!" she called sharply, with a tone of command in her silvery voice. "You are whispering again."

But Tommy was not only troublesome. He was clever as well.

"Please, ma'am," he said, putting down his book and looking at the young teacher sweetly, "I was just tellin' Billy Brown what nice things all the gentlemen say about you when you walk along the street."—New York Press.

CONSTIPATION

When Lovers Disagree

By Mrs. FRANK LESLIE

WHO shall decide when lovers disagree?

For disagree they are sure to, as they have done since time began, whence the oft quoted aphorism about the much accidented course of true love. Considering how universal a concern love is, what a tremendous part it plays in our lives from the first moment we have anything to do with it, and to what infinite vicissitudes it is exposed, OFTEN FROM THE MOST TRIVIAL CAUSES, it seems deplorable that counsel and aid in such a portentous matter should be administered in such a desultory and empirical fashion as at present. There are no regular tribunals of sentiment, no qualified counselors of love, no Cupid's advocates in regular practice. THE SPIRIT OF ANARCHY is rife in the domain of the heart no less than in the world of society.

There was a time, without going back to pagan antiquity, when the sentimental code was AS PRECISE AND AS FIRM as the criminal one—a great deal more so, in fact—and when its provisions bore all the weight of SPIRITUAL and chivalric laws.

It was in the time and in the land of chivalry, in old Provence, when the popes were at Avignon and the troubadours in the chateaux, ere love had been superseded by formal "gallantry," that the courts of love flourished.

Although it was not a question of "woman's rights" in those ingenuous days, the Provencal courts were INVARIABLY composed of women, all, of course, beautiful and young, though "expertes en galanterie" and rose crowned graduates in the school of the heart. They held their deliberations, rendered judgments AND METED OUT PENALTIES OR PRAISE, sometimes in myrtle trellised pavilions beneath the shades of olives and pines, again (in winter) in stately halls, enriched with the armorial bearings of the fair and noble advocates enthroned in state. Here are some of their dicta, which hold as true today as when they were first formulated:

"Love ne'er lodged in the house of avarice."

"IT IS UNBECOMING TO MAKE LOVE TO ONE WHOM IT WOULD BE UNSEEMLY TO MARRY."

"You must learn to keep a discreet tongue before you can learn to love."

"FACILITY DEPRECIATES POSSESSION; DIFFICULTIES EXALT IT."

"No one can have two SINCERE loves at the same time."

"The gifts and pleasures of love must be voluntary AND MUTUAL."

"Love CANNOT rest stationary. It must continually either augment or diminish."

"WHEN LOVE BEGINS TO DIMINISH, THE END NECESSARILY IS NOT FAR OFF."

Unions and Trusts Are Expressions of the Socialistic Spirit

By Bishop THOMAS F. GAILOR of Tennessee

IN the presence of admitted dangers, of problems unanticipated and of TRUTHS HALF SEEN, the idea of the social man as the only true man, and of social obligations in the community, the state, the nation, is the great and fruitful and splendid idea of our time.

Socialism is in the air. Primarily it means organization, the combined efforts of the many FOR THE GOOD OF ALL.

The American trade union and the American trade trust are each in their way EXPRESSIONS of the socialistic spirit, and doubtless have their use and place in the progress of the world.

But when they forget their limitations, when they aspire to become ENTHRONED OLIGARCHIES and to dictate absolutely the industrial conditions to 80,000,000 of free people, they are inviting ruin, they are sowing the wind TO REAP THE WHIRLWIND.

The world's tendency today is toward union, organization, combination AND SOLIDARITY. Then let us encourage the individual, for there are some things, and they are the finest things in life, which only the INDIVIDUAL can furnish. Against the dominion of mere machinery we must set up the claims of art, literature, science and religion. Out of the dull routine of mere mechanical industry we must save manhood by creating, fostering, INDIVIDUAL TASTE AND CULTURE. Against the rule of the average and common we must strive to make our people recognize and approve the supremacy of that which is original and noble. This is our educational ideal.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY IS AMERICA'S MOST TREMENDOUS RESPONSIBILITY. THE GREATEST TRUST IN THE WORLD IS THE TRUST OF AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

The Broad View of Education

By CHARLES W. DABNEY, President Cincinnati University

MODERN democracy, realizing the menace of ignorance TO HER VERY EXISTENCE, has resolved that every child within her bounds, rich or poor, white or colored, shall have an opportunity to get all the education it can take. NOTHING LESS THAN THIS will meet the requirements and fulfill the ideals of a government "of the people, by the people and for the people."

Schoolhouses and schoolmasters are cheaper than jails and soldiers, but we do not found the public school on any such ground as this. Such arguments for free schools are little less than an insult TO A FREE PEOPLE. The democracy establishes its public schools to train new citizens and fit them for self government, and when it shall have done its FULL duty in this respect there will be no need of policemen and soldiers.

THERE IS NO CLASS, NO ARISTOCRACY, IN EDUCATION. EDUCATION IS FOR ALL.

The C. O. D. Man

He Tells How He Wrote Poetry and Lived High.

"THAT'S all O. K.," said the C. O. D. man, as he received and pocketed a coin of the last vintage. "The C. O. D. system, on which I have been doing business for the last five years, saves bookkeeping, banking and lots of other trouble. You get what you pay for, and I get the money, and neither of us has to send out a collector.

"As a dilapidated gentleman, making a tour of the country every year, I have no rating in the commercial agencies, and as an interviewer your checks might be marked 'N. G.' at the bank. Now, to proceed.

"Three years ago I was up in Connecticut on the wander, and as my old shoes, which, by the way, once belonged to a member of the legislature of that state and were run down at the heel, had blistered my feet, I looked for a place to lay up for three or four days and take things easy.

"You can understand by that I was willing to do light work for some farmer for a bed in the haymow and a few meals in the wood shed. That's the difference between a professional tramp and a dilapidated gentleman. The one won't work under any circumstances, while the other quits the road occasionally to take up the hoe.

"Along about sundown I came to a good looking farmhouse with a middle aged woman sitting on the piazza. I opened the gate to be told to go on about my business, and though I offered to work for my board the terms were refused. I was turning away when the woman suddenly changed her mind and called me back and said:

"'Perhaps you are not a regular tramp?'

"'No, ma'am, I'm not. I'm only a dilapidated gentleman making a farewell tour of Connecticut.'

"'What is a dilapidated gentleman?' she asked as she looked me over in a puzzled way.

"'It's an ex, ma'am—an ex-Harvard man, an ex-swell young fellow, an ex-son of a millionaire who wouldn't marry the parlor maid his father had picked out for him, an ex-member of society who has become disgusted with the world and taken to sauntering over the country. I can hoe corn or potatoes, cut grass, milk cows, repair fences, sing a song, feed the hogs, write poetry or most anything else.'

"'You say you can write poetry?'

"'I can, ma'am.'

"'Then you may stop tonight, and tomorrow I will talk to you further.'

"I had no idea what she was after in the poetic line," said the C. O. D. man, "but after a good supper, a good bed and a square breakfast she called me into the sitting room and explained that she was a widow. In fact, she was three widows in one. She had married three times and buried three husbands. I started out to sympathize with her, but she hinted that she was going to change her name soon for the fourth time and wasn't looking for condolence. She wanted poetry instead. How Thomas Held Nashville

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

December 15-16, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

AT Nashville Dec. 15 and 16, 1864, Thomas gave the Confederates in the west their Waterloo. The scene was within 140 miles from the old battlefield of Mill Springs, where three years before he had inflicted upon them a Bull Run disaster. Thomas' victory at Mill Springs, Ky., Jan. 19, 1862, was the first clean and decisive Federal triumph of the war. Nashville wiped out for good a Confederate army which for 100 days in front of Atlanta had baffled Sherman, with his immense columns of battalions and squadrons. Only in these two battles did Thomas wield the supreme command. Both were fought to a finish, and what was more—a thing rare in this war—in both cases the enemy was thoroughly routed and his active capacities destroyed.

Hood's army was at a disadvantage before Nashville, it is true, but chance might play into the hands of that bold leader. Thomas closed every loophole against chance. He fortified the hills south of the city in a manner that would enable an improvised corps of noncombatants to hold it and prepared his active force to compass Hood's destruction. The Confederate leader drew up his lines on a range of hills corresponding to those fortified by Thomas and opposed redoubt by redoubt, Thomas had three corps besides Wilson's cavalry lying in this order from left to right: Woods, Smith, Schofield, Wilson. Hood also had three and Forrest's cavalry. Stewart's corps opposed Schofield, Lee's opposed Smith and Cheatham's Wood. The first stroke by Thomas was to launch Wilson and Schofield, whose lines adjoined, around Hood's left flank to envelop it. Simultaneously Steedman's division of colored troops on the Federal left charged upon Hood's right flank, breaking through the line. Wilson's and Schofield's men went on irresistibly, taking outworks and storming hill redoubts until they were close upon Stewart's main intrenchments. Moving south and then southeast, they formed a line at right angles with Smith, who pushed his line forward at the angle, carrying a heavy hill and earthwork and breaking in the salient of Hood's line, which turned sharply from a north facing to a west, the latter protected by a stone wall. Nightfall found the combatants standing with locked horns. Everything which Thomas' men had attempted had been carried with a rush, but they saw plenty to warn them from attempting too much, and the places stormed or taken were key points to sections of the Confederate line. Never more than two brigades assaulted together. McMillen's, Hubbard's and Hill's brigades of McArthur's division, Smith's corps and Coon's dismounted brigade of cavalry were the heroes of the right. They vaulted the barriers together, mingling their cheers and dividing the trophies of conquest without reckoning which got there first or struck the harder. Steedman's white brigade under Colonel Grosvenor and Colonel Morgan's colored troops did the same on the left, occupying the attention of Cheatham's entire corps throughout the day.

GENERAL THOMAS DIRECTING THE ATTACK ON HOOD'S LINES.

Hood formed a new line during the night of the 15th from a half mile to a mile in the rear of the first. His right rested on Overton's hill, his left on the height now called Shy's hill, with a sharp return south for 80 or 100 rods. There was every temptation for Thomas to order an attack all along the line, but he was not such a tyro in war. Acting on the principle that when salients and bastions are conquered all lying between must go, too, the blows were concentrated. He gave no new orders to his corps commanders for the second day, leaving them discretion in carrying out the orders of the day before—namely, to push the enemy. He rode from point to point, seeing for himself. Wilson's cavalry continued its march until it outflanked Hood's left, held by Cheatham's troops. In order to check Wilson, Cheatham drew men from Shy's hill in the angle just at the time when the Federal batteries were razing its walls. Bates' Tennesseans rushed down from the right to defend it, but at that moment McArthur saw the chance offered and sent McMillen's brigade to storm it. Two other Federal brigades followed McMillen, but strong as they came they had to reckon with the Twentieth Tennessee (Confederate) before seizing the prize. That regiment, led by Colonel W. W. Shy, disputed every inch of the soil. Shy was killed, and his men slowly gave ground without a single reserve to fall back upon. The angle was broken, and Smith's and Schofield's men advanced with comparative ease, although some of the Confederate redoubts only yielded to the logic of the bayonet. Briefly, the whole Confederate left was crushed in like an eggshell before the middle of the afternoon. Officers and men no longer thought of holding their line, but of reaching the roads leading south before Wilson's cavalry cut them off.

breastwork by breastwork. He was in position Dec. 3, and the Federal authorities at Washington, including Grant, assumed that Thomas was intending to stand siege. Almost hourly Thomas received from Washington or from Grant's headquarters impatient and nagging telegrams, with suggestions and appeals to do something to raise the siege, but Thomas' army was then an improvised one, made up of Smith's division from west of the Mississippi, Schofield's Twenty-third and Wood's Fourth corps, partly from Sherman's column and partly from garrison camps, with Wilson's cavalry, a new command, lacking horses and equipments as well as perfect organization and drill. It was upon this latter arm that Thomas counted for finishing blows when the time came. So while Hood was adding to his earthworks and parapets and vainly hoping for reenforcements, and urgent demands were made from Federal headquarters hundreds of miles away that Thomas should act, the Rock of Chickamauga said: "Let Hood fortify. Let Washington howl. I'll act when I am ready."

His plan of campaign had been settled upon by the 6th and orders given to move. Hood's operations, however, led to a brief delay in order to shift positions of Federal troops on the long lines and mass the strongest battalions on the right. The day fixed for attack opened with a storm of freezing sleet, which in time covered the earth with a crust of slippery frozen mud or ice. A campaign to the death was out of the question under such circumstances. Hood's troops and artillery could stand in their fixed firm tracks, while Thomas' would need to struggle and climb up the icy slopes and over glassy lakes in order to dislodge them. Thomas said again in answer to renewed demands from headquarters, "I will act when ready."

Grant wired that he must move against Hood or turn over his command to the next in rank. The grim old veteran replied that he would submit to removal and to the charge of disobedience to orders without a murmur, but move against Hood he would not until all was ready. A successor, General Logan, had been placed at call near by, and Grant himself started for Nashville. But the ice blockade gave way before melting weather on the 14th, and Thomas hastened to notify his chiefs that the enemy would be attacked at once.

The antagonists were about equal in numbers and aggregated 40,000 a side.

OVER THE HILLS

By Eugene Field

OVER the hills and far away
A little boy steals from his morning play,
And under the blossoming apple tree
He lies and dreams of the things to be:
Of battles fought and of victories won,
Of wrongs o'erthrown and of great deeds done—
Of the valor that he shall prove some day,
Over the hills and far away—
Over the hills and far away!

Over the hills and far away
It's O for the toil the livelong day!
But it mattered not to the soul aflame
With a love for riches and power and fame!
On, O man! while the sun is high—
On to the yonder joys that lie
Yonder where blazeth the noon of day!
Over the hills and far away—
Over the hills and far away!

Over the hills and far away,
An old man lingers at close of day;
Now that his journey is almost done,
His battles fought and his victories won—
The old-time honesty and truth,
The trustfulness and the friends of youth,
Home and mother—where are they?
Over the hills and far away?
Over the hills and far away!

IVAN THE CZAR

By Felicia Dorothea Hemans

HE sat in silence on the ground, the old and haughty Czar,
Lonely, though princes girt him round, and leaders of the war;
He had cast his jeweled saber, that many a field had won,
To the earth beside his youthful dead—his fair and first-born son.

With a robe of ermine for its bed was laid that form of clay,
Where the light a stormy sunset shed through the rich tent made a way;
And a sad and solemn beauty on the pallid face came down,
Which the lord of nations mutely watched—in the dust, with his renown.

Low tones at last, of woe and fear, from his full bosom broke—
A mournful thing it was to hear how then the proud man spoke!
The voice that through the combat had shouted far and high,
Came forth in strange, dull, hollow tones, burdened with agony.

"There is no crimson on thy cheek, and on thy lip no breath;
I call thee, and thou dost not speak—they tell me this is death!
And fearful things are whispering that I the deed have done;
For the honor of thy father's name, look up, look up, my son!

Well might I know death's hue and mien! but on thine aspect, boy,
What, till this moment, have I seen, save pride and tameless joy?
Swiftest thou wert to battle, and bravest there of all—
How could I think a warrior's frame thus like a flower should fall?

I will not bear that still, cold look—rise up, thou fierce and free!
Wake as the storm wakes! I will brook all, save this calm, from thee!
Lift brightly up, and proudly, once more thy kindling eyes!
Hath my word lost its power on earth? I say to thee, Arise!

Didst thou not know I loved thee well? Thou didst not! and art gone,
In bitterness of soul, to dwell where man must dwell alone.
Come back, young fiery spirit! if but one hour, to learn
The secrets of the folded heart that seemed to thee so stern.

Thou wert the first, the first fair child that in mine arms I pressed.
Thou wert the bright one that hast smiled like summer on my breast!
I reared thee as an eagle, to the chase thy steps I led,
I bore thee on my battle-horse, I look upon thee—dead!

Lay down my warlike banners here, never again to wave,
And bury my red sword and spear, Chiefs! in my first-born's grave!
And leave me!—I have conquered, I have slain—my work is done!
Whom have I slain? Ye answer not—thou too art mute, my son!"

And thus his wild lament was poured through the dark, resounding night,
He heard strange voices moaning in every wind that sighed;
From the searching stars of heaven he shrank—humbly the conqueror died.

WHAT IS LIFE?

By Isaac McLellan

ISAAC M'LELLAN, American poet (born 1806; died 1899), was known as a most devoted friend of outdoor recreation and field sports. His numerous poems on such subjects gained him the title of "the poet-sportsman," and, according to one authority, "he shared with Alfred B. Street the honors of laureate of the woods and waters. At the age of fourscore he was still able to divide his time between sports of the field and the literary work of the study."

WHAT is life?—a bubble dancing
On the sparkling fountain's brim,
Painted by the sunbeam glancing
O'er its evanescent rim.
Soon its soft reflected glories,
Images of colored skies,
Vanish—when the haze of evening
O'er the panorama dies.
Life, with all its bliss and troubles,
Melts like unsubstantial bubbles!

What are honors, what are riches,
What the haughty trump of fame?
Dazzling meteors, vain delusions,
Echoes of an empty name.
What the spangled robes of grandeur,
Jeweled scepter, gilded crown;
What the plaudits won by genius,
What the poet's wide renown!
What but vain and idle breath,
Frosted by the chills of death!

What is life?—a little journey,
Ending ere 'tis well begun;
'Tis a gay, disastrous tourney,
Where a mingled tilt is run;
And the head that wears a crown
'Neath the meanest lance goes down.
Walk, then, on life's pathway, mortal!
With a pure and steadfast heart;
So that through death's frowning portal
Peacefully thou mayst depart!

What is beauty but the image
Of the gay cloud in the stream,
Fading from its crystal mirror
With the evanescent beam?
What is pleasure but the phantom
Luring o'er the marshy waste?
The false mirage of the desert,
Fleeting with deceitful haste.
Trust not life above Life's sod;
Trust in Heaven's smile—trust in God!

KILLING IDEALS IN CHILD LIFE

There are two agencies at work, one seeking to destroy the ideals of child life and the other to preserve them, with special reference to the existence of Santa Claus, says the Wheeling Telegrayh. Of late it has become popular for super-sensitive preachers and hair splitting writers to declaim and argue that it is wrong to lie to children about their patron saint, St Nicholas. Can it truly be called a deception? Is it not more in the line of handing down a pleasing legend? Take away the delighttul fiction of Santa Claus from childhood and what is left of? The adults of this age are becoming more matter-of fact and materialistic every day, but let us try to save the child from hardening of heart so as to preserve to the man or woman of the future some sweet remembrance of life.

Where is the good to be accomplished by robbing childhood of the fancies that belong to it and depriving it of its real happiness? A strictly matter-of-fact child is the most pitiful thing on earth, and a life lived out along those lines is as mournful as a funeral procession and as unfruitful as a cemetery.

Those who would discount Santa Claus utterly underestimate the value of Christmas and the character of its patron saint.

Santa Claus is illogical, of course. He exists only as Uncle Sam and John Bull exists, but in far greater reality to millions who look to him for remembrances and favors. He enriches us by impoverishing us. He takes our money, but he gives us back lots of things that money cannot buy—good fellowship, love of family, the smiles of children, toleration, good cheer, good humor, good living.

He destroys all the laws of science by taking the sunshine into homes which the sunshine cannot enter. He pust upon death itself the smile of life and he starts the year with freshened hearts and finer ambitions.

To deny the existence of the usefulness of such a saint is to commit a crime against the most precious joys of life, to draw clouds over childhood and to rob the unfortunate of the only pleasures that come to them in the dreary years.

It may be illogical to believe in Santa Claus, but let us hold to the belief and all its precious results as long as we can.

REPUBLICANS MUST LEAD THE FIGHT.

Senator Gorman, it is said, expects the Court of Appeals to decide against Governor Warfield in refusing to proclaim the Poe Constitutional Amendment restricting the suffrage. Notwithstanding the great opposition that has developed in his own party Mr. Gorman is in favor of forcing the issue and take his chances at the polls. The Republicans are a unit against tne amendment and will be supported by large numbers of men in other parties in their opposition to its adoption.

The Republican State Committee has established permanent headquarters at 741-743 Calvert Building, Baltimore, and will commence at once to prepare for the contest, Maryland must not be given over permanently to the Democratic bosses and the Republican party must lead the fight to prevent it.

IS IT YOUR DAUGHTER?

Fathers and Mothers: If you have a young daughter this picture—which is no fancy one—is for you. It is long after curfew. The "mashers" lean on the sidewalk railings and wait at street corners. There they come down the street arm in arm—two young girls with fresh, rosy faces. Abundant braids of hair fall down their backs. Natty little gowns come to the shoe-top. They are school girls and in their early teens.

There is no chaperon and no escort. The girls are out alone and the hour is rather late. A couple of smart young men—"knowing" young men—follow the girls. Young men and young women are strangers to one another, and yet there is some sort of freemasonery between them. The glances of the young men are bold. The eyes of the girls are not timid as they turn them backward with the hint of a smile. Flippant words are exchanged.

But what can one do? If their natural guardians are not there to protect, what right have you to interfere? Here and there may be found a brave spirit whom a great pity will move to stay and warn, and take the risk, but such good Samaritans are few. And so young girls—infant women with fine passions and powers of womanhood—thinking to tread the primrose path of dalliance go to ruin.

Whose fault is it? Is it the fault of the girls? Who sent them out into the night or permitted them to go unprotected? Who failed or neglected to warn them of temptation? Who supposed when they had dressed their girls as well as the neighbor girls their duty is done?

There is only one answer to these questions—Father and Mother.

THE POE AMENDMENT.

The Circuit Court of Anne Arundel County has decided in favor of the contention of Chairman Murray Vandiver that the Poe amennment relating to the right of suffrage is entitled to be placed upon the official ballot at the next general election, in spite of the fact that it was not submitted to the Governor for his approval and signature. The question will now go to the Court of Appeals, upon appeal by Attorney General Bryan. If that court shall affirm the decision of the court below, Governor Warfield will of course take the usunl steps for plasing the amendment before the people; if the Court of Appeals should reverse the dectsion made yesterday by the Anne Arundel court, that will end the matter.

We observe that it is stated that close friends of the Governor say that, no matter what the decision of the court, it will not affect the attirude of the Governor toward the amendment, and that his objectionsare not so much as to the manner in which the amendment was passed without being submitted to him as to the nature of the measure itself." As to the last part of this remark there can be no question whatsoever, as a moment's thought recalling the circumstances in the case will be sufficient to show. The amendment was not kept from the Governor on account of any desire to assert the right of the Legislature to pass it without his signature. Nothing of the kind was thought of until after the Governor had made known his determined opposition to the bill providing for the amendment. It was only then that a departure from the regular Maryland practice was thought of. The witholding of the bill wgs caused by the Governor's opposition, not the Governor's opposition by the withholding of the bill. There is not the slightest reason to suppose that the objections to it which both Governor Warfield and Attorney General Bryan held to be so serious when it was under discussion in the Legitlature—and before this legal question had come up at all—will be looked upon bp them in any different way now.

A REVIEW

[Lessons of the next six months are in the Gospel and Revelations of St. John.]

John, the divine, is a bundle of paradoxes. A fisherman, yet having social access to the high priest's palace; a Galilean, yet intimately more familiar with Judea; of none of the schools, yet penning the noblest thing in literature; so gentle that sacred art has pictured him as effeminate, yet a son of thunder and showing fiery temper on occasion; spreading his hands one day in benediction and saying, "Little children, love one another," yet the next seeing a heretic in the bath, running from it, and crying, "Flv lest the house fall upon us, for Cerinthus, enemy of the truth, is within!" It would be an interesting study in psychology to find how these antagonisms might contribute to the making of an ideal character.

But all curious incidents fade when compared with John's immortal achievement. At the age of one hundred years he seems to be standing upon a narrow neck between time and eternity. St. Paul had already made his last missionary journev and written his last epistle. Jerusalem had fallen thirty years before. The "Benjamin of the apostles" is the only one alive. The elders of Ephesus are urging him to put in writing the oral gospel they had so often heard from his lips. A restatement of apostolic doctrine seems necessary subsequent to the complete severance from Judaism and the close of the old dispensation. John's pen is the last with apostolic authority. He yields. He writes.

The supplement of the other evangelists, often referred to, is a mere incident if not an accident. It is true John omitted many important matters, probably because they had been told by the others. But it was far from his purpose to merely "bring up the rear and glean what they passed by." Instead of intending a minute biographical monograph, writing is an argument. He states a proposition and addresses himself to the maintainance of it. His noble motif is that the reader may believe that Jesus is the Christ, and that believing, he may have life. His method is to take scenic incidents and typical persons and report Jesus' words in connection with them so that there may be a reciprocal illuminatien. He calls the reader to a halt that he may reflect; he gives the argument in epitome, shows what follows, makes application, and rarely fails to swing the censer of praise.

John and his Gospel defy criticism. The soul intuitively exclaims, "This is Divine!" "It is from God!" His His writings have been called the gospel of eternity, the spiritual gospel, the gospel of the world. He himself has been called the seraphic apostle. The early Church did well to select the eagle as his emblem. He soars high! He sees far!

Bird of God! with boundless flight
Soaring far beyond the height
Of the bards or prophets old;
Truth fulfilled and truth to be—
Never purer mystery
Did a purer tongue unfold.
—Adam of St. Victor, Latin poet, 1192 A. D.

Christ The Life And Light of Men

There is not in literature a finer example of adaption of style to subject. The noblest and profoundest thought is here clothed in language ample and royal. What the Sistine frescoes are in art, this paragraph is in written speech. Yet with all this stateliness there is aninherent simplicity. . . . This similiarity between the opening of the Book of Genesis and the opening of John's Gospel will be readily recognized. The prologue is in the form of Hebrew poetry, which consists largely of the recurrence to previously expressed thoughts, with altered phrase and added meaning. . . . It may be paraphrased as follows: As the articulate word drops from the lip of speaker on ear of hearer, so the Messiah comes from God to man. He is the vehicle of a meaning. Not, however, an unconscious and involuntary vehicle. For the Word had an eternal existence with God. He was God from the beginning. So far from being a mere wave of air, as an articulated word is, He is a Person; one possessing, too, infinite power and intelligence; for all things were made by Him, and apart from Him not even one thing came into being. This Logos is source of life and light for men. He kept shining by various means into the moral darkness of humanity, but it could not apprehend Him. It was like a lamp trying to penetrate a fog. . . . In the fullness of time, however, there came a herald—John Baptist—in all respects worthy of his transcendent office. His mission was to announce the coming of the Light who had already imparted something of Himself to men, one by one, as they had come into the world. For He was all the while imminent in the world which He had made, although unrecognized. Now, at length, in the incarnation, He came visibly in a form most easily recognizable to a people prepared to apprehend Him by long-continued and gracious dispensations. As far as the mass was concerned, however, it was a failure. In their obduracy of heart they received Him not. . . . But to such as did "take of Him," appropriating Him by faith as a Savior, He gave the right to become inheritors of the Divine nature. Such as are begotten of God, not merely of a race (literally bloods) supposed to be privileged above others, or human nature in general (flesh), or of some particular father (man). . . . Now comes the climax. It is a logical conclusion, transfused, with a doxology. The glorious Person whom the evangelist had described in metaphor as a word spoken by God to man, condescends to a human birth, in order that He may thus utter His Father's message. He sojourns. He tents awhile (thirty-three) with humanity. We are eye-witnesses of this manifestation of the Divine glory, a glory, a fullness of grace and truth becoming in all respects to God's only Sons.

The Teacher's Lantern.

John's method of presenting the life of Christ is most remarkable. It is as if, for example, one should take a series of scenes from the career of Savonarola like his denial of absolution to Lorenzo the Magnificent, his "burning the vanities," or his martyrdom. John attempts no biography, yet incidentally he gives us the best chronology. He does not relate the birth of Christ, yet as has been said, eternal Christmas pervades his soul.

John takes great scenic events, six miracles (or signs, as he significantly calls them), and three parables. He gives the setting and background of each, and then interprets, or better, makes the Lord his own interpreter by recording His sayings in the connection. Thus by a series of clusters of savings, deeds, and events, he makes what Origin did not hesitate to call "the main gospel."

No part of the Bible has been more highly praised. Thus: "The gospel of the Son of Thunder opens with a peal."—Cambridge Bible. "The heart of Christ."—Ernesti. "The diamond among the Gospels, most fully penetrated by the light of life."—Lange. "Written by the hand of an angel."—Herder. "The unique, tender, genuine, leading Gospel."—Luther. "The most important part of the New Testament."—Lessing. "John excels in the depths of Divine mysteries."—Jerome. "John poured forth the water of life he himself had drunk in."—Augustine. "Other Gospels describe Christ's body, this His soul."—Calvin.

In the stately and triumphant strains of the prologue there is a minor note of deepest sadness. It rises from John's sympathetic appreciation of Jesus and the world's neglect and hostility. The darkness did not comprehend the light. His own received Him not.

It is the highest compliment to John the Baptist that John the Evangelist seems to think it necessary to differentiate him from the Messiah. He was not the Light, but he bore witness to the Light. He was a night watchman, answering to those who asked, "What of the night?" "The morning cometh." He was a friend of the bridegroom, not the bridegroom: a star to guide, but not the sun; not a false light, but as compared with Jesus, a small light.

When John talks of light, he does not go into a cosmogony. He deals with a self-evident fact. Light is. So when he names the moral condition of the race under the figure of darkness, he does not go into a theological disquisition on sin, its origin, etc. He deals with a self-evident fact. Sin is. There are necessary antagonisms between light and darkness, and so between holiness and sin. Darkness and sin do not comprehend, and are inveterately hostile to light and holiness. But light and holiness are to be ultimately triumphant.

Don't forget the old man with the fish on his back.

For nearly thirty years he has been traveling around the world, and is still traveling, bringing health and comfort wherever he goes.

To the consumptive he brings the strength and flesh he so much needs.

To all weak and sickly children he gives rich and strengthening food.

To thin and pale persons he gives new firm flesh and rich red blood.

Children who first saw the old man with the fish are now grown up and have children of their own.

He stands for Scott's Emulsion of pure cod liver oil—a delightful food and a natural tonic for children, for old folks and for all who need flesh and strength.

His parents conduct the National House at Grantsville, a most excellent hostelrie, and they are large as well as large-hearted people. An editor going away left his paper in charge of a minister. During the minister's stay in the sanctum the following letter came from a subscriber: "You know very well that I paid my subscription to your paper the last time I was in town. If I get any more such letters from you as I received last week I will come and maul the devil out of you." The minister answered: "I have been trying to get that thing out of the editor for ten years past, and if you will really come down and maul it out of him, then, my dear sir, I have 20 members of the church I will get you to operate on."

WHITE—FLOWERS.—A very pretty home wedding was solemnized at six o'clock last evening at the residence of the bride's parents, No. 10 East Main street, when Miss Blanch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Emory E. Flowers, was joined in holy wedlock to Mr. Orlando M. White, son of Mr. and Mrs. White, of Mountain Lake Park, Maryland. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. L. Directly after the ceremony the happy couple proceeded to the B. & O. passenger station, where they boardered No. 12 for Mountain Lake Park, where they will spend several days at the home of the groom's parents. They will then return to this city, where they will make their home for the present. The bride until recently resided with her parents at Mountain Lake Park, where she was a favorite among her associates. She is quite a charming and refined young lady. The groom is a popular young man and is employed in the painting department of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad in this section. PRINCE WILLIAM ACADEMY.

Unique Plan by Which the School's Library was Enlarged.

Mr. J. D. Miller, of Grantsville, a student in Prince William Academy, Brentsville, Va., furnishes the following relative to an entertainment given by the students of that school in an effort to enlarge the library:

It may be of interest to some of the readers of THE REPUBLICAN to learn of the plans of the faculty and students of Prince William Academy, at Brentsville, Va., to enlarge their library and lift it to a more important place in the life and usefulness of the Academy. Invitations were sent out to all the patrons and friends of the institution, and also to prominent educators of the state, requesting that they be present on the evening of Dec. 3d, at the Nicol Literary Hall, at an entertainment given by the faculty and students of the school. They were requested to kindly bring with them a volume to be presented to the library.

The entertainment was a complete success. The verdict was that it was the best ever given in Brentsville by the Academy. The reception was for the upbuilding of the library, and now we are glad to announce that on that occasion at least 150 volumes were added to its shelves, as well as many hearts enlisted in its earnest support. The school and faculty presenting 30 volumes. The books were generally of a very high grade. Most of the friends who came brought books with them, and friends from a distance represented their interest in the school by sending a volume to the library.

The evening was a very disagreeable one, but still the house was nearly full of very appreciative people, which was very gratifying to the performers.

The literary factors of the evening wese especially good and entertaining. The addsess by Mr. Truman S. Vance was very edifying and encouraging to friends of education. The entire program was under the general supervision of Prof. Layman, principal of the Academy. The stage arrangement was in charge of J. D. Miller and G. E. Yoder, of the faculty.

The following program was rendered:

Instrumental Music—Miss McMical.

Recitation—"The Little Cripple"—Miss Houchins.

Male Quartet—"Freedom's Banner"—Messrs. Layman, Hooker, Folk and Yoder.

Recitation—"Gone with a Handsomer Man"—Miss Heddings.

Personation—"Taking the Census"—Miss Mooney.

Male Quartet—"Medley,—White"—Messrs. Layman, Hooker, Folk and Yoder.

Address—"The Boy and his Book—Prof. Layman.

Anthem—"Praise Ye the Lord"—Vocal Class.

Pantomine—"Nearer My God, to Thee"—Miss Mooney.

Tableau—"Joan of Arc at the Stake"—Miss Houchins.

Tableau—"The Three Fates"—Misses Heddings, Mooney and Houchins.

Address—"The School and its Library"—Truman S. Vance.

Knights of Pythias Entertained.

The members of the Knights of Pythias lodge of Oakland were entertained last Monday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lauer at a turkey and oyster roast, at which quite a large number of the Knights were present.

The turkey, an eighteen-pound bird, was served, and also two barrels of oysters in the shell.

Where Japan Gets War Fund.

Japan has 47 postal savings banks, in which, on May 31 last, there was 458,995,645 yen ($229,497,922) on deposit. Since the war began these deposits have increased by 5,302,504 yen ($1,651,252), deposited by 543,264 persons. This vast deposit by the general run of Japan's population would seem to explain the ease with which each war loan is subscribed many times over when it is offered for home subscription. Between April, 1903, and September, 1904, the number of depositors increased from 2,934,388 to 4,181,293. This is a practical demonstration of the proverbial Japanese thrift.—New York Sun.

Time To Swear Off.

From time immemorial it has been the practice of "booze histers" to swear off taking observation of electric lights through the bottom of beer glasses and studying astromony through a whiskey flask on New Year's day.

Never was there a more auspicious time than the present for Oakland "boozerines" to swear off.

It is to be hoped that about two hundred "pizen" victims here will "swear off" for keeps on New Year's day or sooner.

O! yes, there are 200 and more of them. The boozerines who do their drinking in public and are seen on the streets compose only a very small portion of the tail end of the Boozerine Club which has a large and flourishing memberahip right in this man's town.

Addison Township Oil and Gas.

There are many citizens of Somerset county, who would like to know how Addison's oil and gas wells are developing, and whether it is a reality or a "mare's nest." Many throughout the county on account of Addison township being both a Democratic and Insurgent stronghold, will, like the Jews of old, say that "nothing good can come out of Nazareth" and while they will all admit that there is plenty of gas on top of the ground, they are still doubtful of anything being underneath.

Last Thursday a representative of The Commercial started out to investigate the gas and oil well, and first visited the B. & O. station at Confluence where he found a car load of machinery being unloaded and its contents consigned to these wells. These contents consisted of engine, boiler, and other machinery used in boring wells. On reaching the well which is located about three miles from Confluence and the same distance from Addison village, there was a large derrick, with a boiler house and several smaller buildings completed. The typography of the country here is a most peculiar one, going in a southern direction from Confluence at a distance of one mile and one half near the residence of John Ringer, a natural basin forms, and through this basin the Youghiogheny winds its way. The bottom of the basin is almost level and not much higher than the surface of the river at highwater, while the surrounding hills tower above from 400 to 600 feet of an elevation, and some of their sides are almost vertical. More than half of this basin is on the east or Addison side of the river and the remainder on the west or Fayette county side. This basin at its widest part is not more than two miles across and while its sides are irregular from any point it appears almost circular. The river forms a horse shoe, and while around the bend is almost two miles on the Addison side, in a direct line across the neck of land on the Fayette county side the distance cannot be much over half a mile. At the southeast corner of this bend in the river and a half mile up on this ravine is where the well is located. The ravine is about 400 feet wide where it leaves the basin and gradually narrows until its width at the well is less than 200 feet. While this conformation of the land appears peculiar, nevertheless, those persons who have ever traveled through Cattaraugus county, N. Y., or McKean county, Pa., will be forcibly struck with the resemblance in the formation and surroundings of th land where oil and gas wells are located in the above mentioned counties and those in Addison.—Meyersdale Commercial.

The Christmas business was simply astounding—it far surpassed our most sanguine expectations. In thus extending you our thanks we but mildly express a feeling of intensely enthusiastic gratitude for your unbounded generosity and appreciation. When we started this business we determined that we would give Oakland a store of which the people might well be proud. We have done that—and more. We have given you better store service, wider varieties of goods in better grades than prevailed before. We started and our methods have bettered the whole commercial community. It is our intention to improve the store system and service wherever possible. Having secured the foremost position in the retail community we propose not only to maintain it, but to increase the lead. We want you to feel that this is your store—that it is here solely for your convenience and benefit. We want you to understand distinctly that we are ever ready to correct any error of omission or commission that may occur, and do it cheerfully. BY A. W. FERRIN

PROBABLY few persons in the crowds which surge through the streets of city and village on New Year's eve, armed with horns and rattles with which to add to the din of stentorian voices, screeching whistles and jangling bells on the stroke of 12, know just how the exact moment when the old year dies and the new year is born is determined, or how, from the United States naval observatory in Washington, the time signal is flashed to the four quarters of the globe, announcing to white, black, brown and yellow men that it is 12 o'clock and that the birth of another year is officially registered in Uncle Sam's bureau of vital statistics.

There have always been New Year's days, and doubtless the New Year celebrators of former days have had some way of knowing approximately when to start the festivities, but it is well to be accurate, and but for the lynx eyed star gazers in Washington some of us might be beginning our new year at 10 p. m. or 3 a. m.

The system by which the government looks after this important duty requires master minds and intricate machinery, though to the unthinking it may seem to mean no more than the dropping of time balls and the blowing of whistles.

In the first place, the time must be taken from the sky, for the sun is the real giver of time as well as of light and heat. And here is where the telescope comes into play. The twenty-six inch equatorial telescope, which is sometimes used in the determination of time, was at the time of its erection in the old naval observatory in 1873 the largest in the world. Since then five or six others, notably the Lick telescope, have surpassed it in size. When the telescope was removed to its new site in Georgetown ten years ago improvements were made in the mounting, and it still ranks as one of the best instruments in the world. With this telescope Professor Asaph Hall discovered the two small moons of Mars, and it has other important discoveries to its credit.

The smaller telescope, which is usually employed in time determination at the observatory, is a fixed transit instrument of brass, mounted so that it swings easily on a pivot. When it is pointed heavenward a turn of a mysterious wheel causes the observatory roof to part from the center and reveal a wide slice of sky studded with stars. The astronomer reclines comfortably in a big leather chair and glues his eye to the small end of the big tube. In his hand is a little thing he calls a key, to which are attached insulated wires leading into the next room, where the standard and transmitting clocks are located. The glass is so aimed that when any standard star reaches the meridian it crosses a hair arranged in the telescope's field of view. At that instant the astronomer presses the key, which sends the information to the standard clock. Connected with this clock is the curious chronograph which ceaselessly draws red lines on a cylinder of white paper by means of an electrically controlled pen. The pen makes a break in its line, making the meridian, and the necessary correction to the big clock is easily made therefrom.

Every day just before noon the transmitting clock is compared with the standard clock, is synchronized and then put into electrical connection with the whole system of the Western Union Telegraph company. The clock ticks away, and at precisely 12 the officer in charge closes the circuit. The final tick of the clock spells noon to thousands of waiting telegraphers, and hundreds of automatic clocks are instantaneously corrected to agree with the transmitter in Washington.

By this same process is sent out the signal which divides two years, only on New Year's night the final tick of the transmitter is awaited even more intently than the daily sign. Observatories in other countries are interested in knowing how their clocks agree with those in Washington, and news which may change the history of the world must wait until the time signal has been received.

How quickly this signal flies over the land and under the sea was shown to the visiting delegates to the recent international geographical congress when Secretary Morton of the navy at midnight touched the time button in the presence of a distinguished gathering. Replies came in at once in French, Spanish and all the other modern languages. The City of Mexico reported that it received the signal [illegible] ty-six one-hundredths of a second after it had started from Washington. San Francisco got it within thirty-two one-hundredths of a second. The signal was sent out in two directions, over the Pacific cable from San Francisco and under the Atlantic, through the Mediterranean, Suez and India. The messages met at Adelaide, Australia.

The New Year In Wall Street.

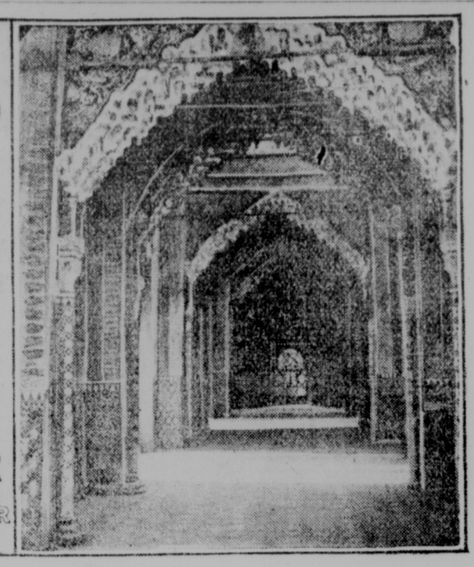
The last day of the old year on the Stock Exchange, in Wall street, that fateful place where fortunes are made and lost from minute to minute and where money is supposed to be the only thought, is the gayest day of all the 365, and the brokers celebrate it with an abandon in which everything but fun is forgotten. Tin horns, flutes, toy trumpets and drums shrill and rattle, while from the galleries, crowded with women, confetti and paper streamers are thrown on the heads of the hilarious bulls and bears, and even the well fleeced lambs gambol in glee. Silk hats become footballs, and scrimmages turn the floor of the exchange into a great gridiron. A tug of war is one of the features of the day, with toys as prizes, and the oldest financiers struggle valiantly for victory. The excitement ends with a grand cakewalk and promenade, headed by a band playing "Auld Lang Syne."

NEW YEAR'S IN THE ALHAMBRA

BY

FREDERICK A. OBER

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY FREDERICK A. OBER



FOR the privilege of eating a New Year's dinner within the walls of the Alhambra, that beautiful palace built by the Moors in Spain 600 years ago, I was indebted to my good friends Don and Donna Parreda, with whom I boarded. And for the privilege of boarding with them I was indebted to the fact that the noble don and his lovely spouse were very poor; otherwise I might never have seen the interior of the palace under such favorable conditions or have become a member of a very interesting Spanish household.

The real head of that household, let it be mentioned sub rosa, was the charming Donna Carmen, but she, again, was dominated by her little daughter Carmencita, a maiden of nine or ten summers, without any mention of winters, if you please, for they were summers of the south of Spain, each one ten months long and full of sunshine, which, somehow or other, always seemed to irradiate her face. If I could do so without mixing my metaphors, I should say that Carmencita resembled a butterfly about as much as a little human being could, but when she skipped about in the garden of the Gran Capitan she seemed also the fairest blossom among a million or more of others.

This garden of the Gran Capitan, or the Great Captain, lay within the fortification walls that inclose the hilltop on which the Alhambra palace is built, that most glorious monument of the Moors in Spain and their last refuge ere they were driven back to Africa. But it lay aslant the western slope of the "Hill of the Sun," while the Alhambra adorned the eastern and more precipitous side, though only a short distance away, beyond a valley filled with elm trees in which the nightingales sang.

Carmencita and her ardent admirer—myself—usually occupied a wistaria bower perched upon an escarpment of the terrace, whence a view was outspread which included half the horizon line. There was generally no concern as to the weather, for it was nearly always fine, but on the day preceding the 1st of January there had been a slight fall of snow, and the air was too sharp for sitting out of doors, so we passed the morning within the house, much to Carmencita's displeasure.

As the 1st of January was a legal holiday, one of about 200 which adorn the calendar in Spain, Don Nicolas was at home moping around the house and getting in the way of his goodwife, the tall and stately Donna Carmen, who, I'm afraid, did not always bear in mind the Spanish proverb to "have honey in the mouth" when addressing her liege lord. In order to escape her sharp tongue Don Nicolas betook himself outdoors, but in half an hour or so returned with a smile hovering around the cigarette which he always carried between his lips and announced that inasmuch as it was New Year's day and a festive event he had arranged for an appropriate "fiesta" in honor of the occasion and of the guest within their walls.

"Oh, a cockfight or bull ring affair; anyway some sort of gambling arrangement probably," snapped Donna Carmen, with a contemptuous pucker of her rosy lips and a flash of her big black eyes. "Did you ever, Sir Nicolas, keep a peso (dollar) in your pocket overnight?"

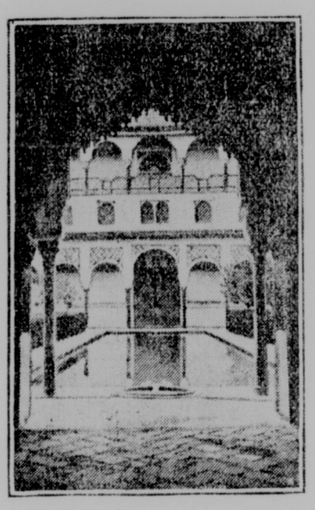
"Not if my esposa (wife) could find where I hung my pantaloons," retorted Don Nicolas good naturedly, though he winced visibly when her black eyes flashed at this home thrust. "But wait, querida (dearest)," he went on in great haste lest she get a shot in that should disable him. "It is this—I have just seen our good friend, Senor Sanchez, director of the Alhambra, and he has invited us over to dine with him within the palace walls. His wife is away, and he feels lonely—so he says—and desires company."

"Pouf!" pouted Donna Carmen. "These old men always have something up when their wives are away." But I noticed her eyes did not flash this time. In fact, they were, if anything, more liquid in their expression than ever. Behind her back Don Nicolas beckoned me to come out to the patio, where he filled a couple of glasses, and we sat down at a table to discuss their contents.

"Will Donna Carmen go?" I asked my host. I wanted to say, "Will she allow you to go?" but thought the other form more diplomatic.

"Will she?" chuckled Don Nicolas, shaking with inward laughter so that he could hardly carry the glass to his lips. "Couldn't keep her away. She's just dying to go. But wait a minute and hear what she says."

"Nicolas," came a voice from the apartment we had just left, "I have decided not to go. The old palace is too cold and damp, and Carmencita cannot go at all events."



POOL WHERE MANY SULTANAS WERE DROWNED.

"Very well, my love. Then the senor and I must go alone."

"But I've got such a nice menu for a dinner at home. It's too bad."

"So it is, dearest. Then we had better stay at home, of course."

"I really would like to go," I murmured to Don Nicolas under my breath. "Can't we arrange it somehow? I never dined in a palace in my life, and it would be so delightful, seems to me."

"So it would, and you shall," replied the don, still shaking with laughter he dared not let out for the life of him. I was also reassured by the little daughter, who, evidently used to the vagaries of her maternal parent, was calmly making preparations for departure. She put her doll into her traveling garments, threw a silken mantilla over her head and then came and took my hand, all without a word.

"But your mamma?" I asked in a whisper.

"If you don't hurry she will be there before us," exclaimed the spoiled child, with a stamp of her little foot. "Dear me, what stupid things men are, especially American men!"

We went without further words, and when in going through the elm grove I cast a glance over my shoulder I saw the donna marching behind us with stately steps and Don Nicolas ambling after.

We passed through the Gate of Justice, crossed the Place of the Cisterns and then entered the palace proper through the gateway leading into the Patio of the Myrtles, where is the great marble tank in which, Carmencita fearsomely told me, many a sultana had been drowned by the Moorish lords of the harems. Then we went into the Ambassador's hall, where we found Senor Sanchez awaiting us with a welcome abounding in honeyed words and high flown phrases. He at once took possession of Donna Carmen, of whom, her husband told me when at a safe distance, he was once an ardent admirer.

"In fact," he added, with a shrug, "I think he is now, but my wife has such a pearl beyond all price in myself and is so well convinced of it that he might as well go bay the moon!"

"For all the good it would do him," I remarked, and Don Nicolas was delighted. While he sat smoking innumerable cigarettes in a corner of the Lions' court his daughter and I prowled all about the palace, played at hide and seek among the alabaster pillars of Linderaja's bower, traced the reputed blood stains in the marbles of the Abencerrages' hall, where the Moorish guards were slain, and tried to decipher the Alcoranic verses in flowery arabesques on the walls of glittering stucco.

CORRIDOR OF THE ALHAMBRA

Only the empty shell now remains of what had once been a pearl of Moorish architecture, yet I found the Alhambra palace most fascinating even in decay. There was, as Donna Carmen said there would be, a chill in the air within the walls, and possibly a dinner there at midwinter was a risky thing to undertake. But the old director in charge of the ruin had lived there many years, and, though Don Nicolas more than intimated that he was in his dotage, he should have known whether there were risk or no.

According to his directions, we all gathered in the Hall of Justice, a long, tiled and arabesqued corridor which bounds one side of the Lions' court, and there found a table spread with all that the south of Spain could afford. There were wines from Xeres, and Malaga oranges, and olives from Seville, fish and oysters from Cadiz, pigeons, turkey and quail from Lonja, cakes and ices from Granada, while the demure damsels that waited on the table were Gitanos, or gypsies, from across the river Darro.

The feast had been spread, as the courteous old Spaniard expressed it, in the very corridor where Christopher Columbus had met Queen Isabella and King Ferdinand of Spain and signed the "capitulation" for that voyage of discovery which resulted in the finding of the way to America in 1492.

"In your honor I have given this dinner," Senor Sanchez graciously explained, "in order to commemorate that historic occurrence of more than 400 years ago, for here it was, in the month of January, 1492, that Don Christopher Columbus met the great king and queen who had expelled the Moors from Spain and entered upon those negotiations which resulted in the discovery of the country which you claim as the place of your birth. When I think of what the United States did to us in Cuba I cannot but feel that your country has been very ungrateful, but we will let that pass. Spain has entered upon a new career of progress, and after all I think it was best for her that she should have been driven out of America, for now we are devoting our energies to the development of our own country instead of sending our money and our soldiers away across the sea."

So it was with great cordiality that, after a toast to the bright eyes of Donna Carmen and her daughter, we drank to the future friendship of the United States and Spain. After the dinner was over we lingered awhile, and but for the increasing chill in the atmosphere might have stayed to inspect the palace by moonlight. As it was, the slant sunbeams lay across the Ambassadors' hall before we left the palace, for after their duties were over the gypsy girls gathered in the corridor outside and performed some of their fantastic dances to the music of rude instruments which they had brought over from the caves in which they and their families live in the Albaicin, beyond the Darro, the river of golden sands.

A Cold New Year's.

"Talkin' about New Y'ar's," said the old hunter as he knocked the ashes out of his corncob pipe, "reminds me of Janiwary 1st, 1872, when I sot all day in the top of a pine tree."

"Were you admiring the scenery of the country?" innocently asked the city chap.

"Waal, skassly, stranger, skassly," he chuckled. "I wuz squintin' right by all the scenery, hopin' to see my son Bill come along with his gun an' knock over a big grizzly that war sittin' below me."

"Treed by a bear, eh?"

"Ye've guessed it, stranger. 'Long about sundown it got so cold that it brought tears to my eyes, an' as them tears drapped they formed into an icicle that reached from whar I sot cl'ar down to the b'ar. That war all that saved my life, I reckon."

"Why, how did that icicle save your life?" the city chap wanted to know.

"It war this way," replied the old hunter as he winked at the others who were listening to the story. "The b'ar thought I war lettin' a ladder down to him an' begun to climb it, but when he war fifteen feet from the ground the icicle busted, an' he fell an' broke his neck. Ye don't want to git scart, sonny, when ye'r treed by a grizzly, but jest hold on tight an' leave the rest to Providence. If the icicle hadn't done the trick I'd have probably fell down on the b'ar purty soon an' killed him that way."

General Stanley at Franklin

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

November 30, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

GENERAL THOMAS said that the battle of Franklin saved Nashville and that the battle of Franklin itself was saved by Opdycke's brigade of Stanley's Fourth corps. Using the same course of reasoning, General Stanley saved the battle of Franklin by his activity and firmness during the preceding twenty-four hours.

The Federal forces engaged at Franklin, the Fourth and Twenty-third corps, belonged to the army of General Thomas, who was at Nashville. The two corps were acting as one body, and General Schofield, commander of the Twenty-third corps, was in command. Thomas had ordered Schofield to march in retrograde before Hood's army of Confederates from the banks of the Duck river along the Columbia pike, through Franklin and across the Harpeth river at that point, with all possible haste toward Nashville. But Hood nearly spoiled the game the evening before Franklin was fought by throwing Forrest's cavalry and the advance of two corps of infantry around Schofield's column on each flank and intercepting the retreat at Spring Hill, several hours' march south of Franklin.

Stanley and his corps had the lead of Schofield's column and drove Forrest away from Spring Hill, bluffed Hood's corps and division commanders and kept the Confederates at arm's length while Schofield's wagon trains and artillery and infantry of the Twenty-third corps marched through under cover of the darkness on the retreat toward Franklin. At daylight on the 30th Hood again pushed forward, and Stanley's troops, bringing up the rear, kept the Confederates in check all the way to Franklin.

Schofield had no intention of making a stand at Franklin, but in order to cover the crossing of Harpeth river stationed his own Twenty-third corps upon a line around the village from bank to bank on the south side.

He did not expect attack on the south bank, but thought that Hood would attempt to pass around the flanks as he had done before and cut the army off completely from Nashville. He took all the artillery of the Twenty-third corps with him to the north bank and a portion of the Fourth corps artillery. One of the three divisions of Stanley's corps, Wood's, was ordered by Schofield to cross to the north bank. Stanley, who was ill, accompanied Wood's corps.

The pike along which the army had marched from Spring Hill bisected the Twenty-third corps line of defense on the south bank, and where it passed through a gap was left for the movement of wagons and troops. At that point much of the Fourth corps artillery was massed. Wagner's division of Stanley's corps brought up the rear and took position two miles in front of Franklin. About 2:30 p. m., finding his flank turned by heavy columns of the enemy, Wagner decided to withdraw his command to a position about a third of a mile in front of the Twenty-third corps center—that is, where the pike passed through the fortified line. Opdycke's brigade passed inside the works as reserve to the Twenty-third corps line on the pike, 200 or 300 yards in rear.

The interest of the battle turns upon the action of Opdycke's brigade and of Conrad's and Lane's at the extreme front. The Confederate attack, when it came about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, was very sudden, and Wagner ordered Conrad and Lane to fight. This they did stubbornly, checking the advance of the Confederates. When at last, being overwhelmed in front, their right and left flanks turned, they did retreat, they were followed with a rush by the Confederates, who felt sure that Schofield's army was in a trap and that they would drive it into the river. The soldiers of Conrad and Lane reached the works with broken ranks. Nevertheless they had sufficient self control to rally and take part in the recovery of the line. This counterstroke was initiated by Opdycke and his brigade, Stanley having been anticipated by just so much time as it took for him to ride from the north bank of the river to the scene of danger.

There was no more brilliant episode in the whole war than the ride of Stanley from the north bank of the river to the scene of fighting on the south bank. He was distant from Wagner's exposed brigades when they began to fire upon the advancing Confederates about one mile. Leaping into his saddle, he galloped across the bridge, through the ranks of the stragglers, his face set in the direction of the battle. It was then 4 o'clock, and for more than four hours the officers and soldiers had been aware that the whole army was to cross to the north bank of the river at dark. Retreat and not battle was in the air.

But the ball was open, and the well known figure of Stanley was seen rushing to the front. Without waiting for orders Opdycke had set his brigade in motion to recover the guns and parapets abandoned to the Confederates. Spurring his horse forward and striking and shooting right and left, he set the example for his officers and soldiers. Two regiments were at his heels deployed; two were in the second line and three were in the rear line.

Just as the column was under way Stanley came up upon its left flank. Seeing that Opdycke, riding at the head of the center of his brigade, was charging to recover the lost works, he gave him no order, but rode forward with the third line. The melee that ensued between these seven regiments, joined by the stoutest hearted of Conrad's and Lane's soldiers, and the Confederates was close and deadly. Prisoners and flags were gathered in, the guns recovered and turned upon the Confederates, and the works were retaken and held. Stanley's horse was killed under him, and he himself, while swinging his hat to cheer on his men, received a most exasperating wound from a bullet which plowed a gash three inches in length across the nape of his neck close to the spine. Ignoring this painful, not to say dangerous, hurt, he remained on the ground until the line was reorganized, Opdycke's brigade and the rallied troops of Conrad and Lane in the recaptured works with the guns in their possession, confidence restored all along the line and victory in sight if not already complete. In fact, he did not relinquish active command of the Fourth corps until the troops reached their destination at Nashville next day.

Next to the personal bearing of Stanley and Opdycke and the conduct of Opdycke's regiments interest centers upon the action of the troops under Conrad and Lane after retiring from the extreme front to the Twenty-third corps breastworks. Historical narratives relating details of the battle, but more especially the official reports, are clear upon this point. In a history of Franklin put forth in 1886 by General J. D. Cox, commander of the Twenty-third corps in that battle, the author says:

"Our men, who had been driven back from the line, rallied by officers of all grades, returned to their posts. While rallying these men Stanley was wounded."

General Opdycke in a narrative printed in 1881 said:

"General Stanley added his effort to rally under a very heavy fire of musketry the scattered troops to the support of the men at the regained works."

STANLEY IN THE THICK OF THE FIGHT

General Thomas' official report of the battle says that Stanley was "severely wounded while engaged in rallying a portion of his command," and Schofield's states that the wounding took place while Stanley "was gallantly urging forward his troops to regain the lost works."

GEORGE L. KILMER.

A Confidence Dog.

A butcher narrated the other day a story illustrative of the intelligence of dogs.

"A patron of mine," he said, "had a collie that came to me one morning with a slip of paper in his mouth.

"'Hello, doggie!' said I, and the collie wagged his tail and dropped the paper on the floor at my feet. I opened it. It was a signed order from his master for a piece of sausage. I gave him the sausage. He ate it and went home.

"Time after time the collie came with these orders to me, and finally I stopped reading them. Each, I presumed, was for a sausage, and each procured a sausage. I suppose, all told, the dog got as many as twenty pounds of sausages from me in two months.

"But the master, when I presented my bill, kicked. He said he had only given the dog about a dozen orders, whereas I must have honored nearly a hundred.

"Well, the upshot was that the two of us got together and did a little detective work. We watched the dog. And do you know what we found? Why, we found that this cunning dog whenever a sausage hunger seized him would grab up a piece of white paper—any piece he could find—and bring it to me.

"I had been careless, you see, never looking at the paper, and through my carelessness the collie had fooled me for two months."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

LOVE'S BLACK SHADOW

By HARTLEY WILLARD

Copyright, 1904, by C. B. Lewis

"I tell yo', gal—I tell yo' I'd rather see yo' dead twice over than jined to Abe Taylor. Befo' I would see it cum about I'd kill one or t'other of yo' with my own hand. Whar's yo'r pride? Whar's yo'r shame? Whar's the respect yo' owe yo'r dead mother? If yo' was jined up to Abe Taylor d'ye reckon me an' yo'r brother Bill could hang around yere agin what folks would say? D'ye think we could look our nayburs in the face arter that?"

High up on the side of the grim old mountain father and daughter sat on the steps of a humble log cabin on a summer's afternoon. He was a man of fifty, loose jointed and a typical mountaineer; she was a girl of nineteen, with a face and form that had no equal for twenty miles around. He sat braced with his back to the jamb,

"POP, YO'VE KILLED A MAN, BUT IT'S YO'R OWN SON BILL."

while she leaned her elbows on her knees and her chin on her hands and kept her eyes on the ground.

"An' why?" she finally asked.

"An' why?" he fiercely repeated as his eyes flashed. "If yo' don't know why then yo' are no gal o' mine! Heven't I bin tellin' yo' why ever since yo' was able to understand things? Wasn't yo' ten y'ars old when I brung home the dead body of yo'r brother Jim? Wasn't yo' fo'teen when I cum crawlin' home with two bullets in my body? Wasn't yo' sixteen an' sittin' right yere on this spot when a bullet fired from the thicket over thar knocked my cap into yo'r face? Yo' remember all these things, Mary—yo' heven't forgot—an 'then yo' ask me why yo' an' Abe Taylor can't jine up. Lawd, gal, but I wouldn't be mo' astonished if yo' struck me a blow in the face!"

"See yere, pop," said the girl as she straightened up, clasped her hands over her knee and looked away into the laurels, "twenty years ago, befo' I was bo'n, yo' got up a fuss with the Taylors."

"They dun got up a fuss with me, gal."

"Well, there was a fuss. It was about a mewl or a hawg or sumthin'. The Taylors an' the Renfrews went to killin'. Yo' dun for the old man."

"Yes, I did."

"An' then one of his boys dun for our Jim."

"Shot our Jim down like a dawg an' never gin him no show!"

"An' then our Bill dun for one o' them."

"He did, an' I'm mighty proud o' him."

"An' then you git almost dun for."

"That's it, gal. One o' them varmints ambushed me an' put two bullets into my body, an' the lead's thar yit. I've been waitin' a hull y'ar to ambush a Taylor in return, but the durned cowards ar' as cunnin' as foxes. The chance will cum, though—it will shorely cum. Me an' Bill will never rest easy as long as thar's a Taylor left livin', an', thank God, thar's only two of 'em dodgin' aroun' on top the airth."

The girl was silent for a moment, rocking to and fro. Then in the same quiet, even voice she said:

"A quarrel lastin' twenty y'ars an three or fo' killin's bekase yo' an' the old man Taylor fell out like two boys! Yo've carried murder in yo'r heart all these y'ars, an' it's thar yit. It might hev bin so with the Taylors once, but yo' know they've wanted peace for five ya'rs past."

"Bekase they ar' cowards, gal!"

"Bekase they've got sense, pop. They can't see that the game is wuth the candle. A y'ar ago I met Abe Taylor over at Bridge Cove. I knowed him on sight, an' he knowed me. We knowed that we orter hate each other like pizun bekase of the quarrels an' killin's, but sumhow 'twas jest the other way. We seen each other ag'in an' ag'in, an' we liked each other better an' better every time. Abe has bin for makin' friends, an' so hev I. We uns didn't start the quarrel. We uns wasn't skassly bo'n then. We uns can't feel that these shootin's an' killin's is right. Bimeby me an' Abe falls in love an' would git married, but yo' an' Bill stand in the road. Yo' ar' my pop, an' Bill is my brother, but I'm tellin' yo' straight that Abe Taylor is as squar' an' white as either one of yo', an' he's got a heap less murder in his heart. I'm lovin' him, pop—lovin' him well nuff to be his wife an' do all a wife kin do, but when he wanted me to run away with him—wanted it bekase yo' stood ready for mo' killin's—I wouldn't agree. I said I'd come an' tell yo' all about it an' hear what yo' had to say. I've told yo', an' what answer hev I got?"

"You've got my answer that I'll shoot Abe Taylor on sight!" shouted the father in fierce tones. "Yes, gal, if yo' was his wife ten times over I'd shoot him down. I wasn't spectin' this treachery from yo', Mary. I've bin father an' mother to yo' these many y'ars, an' I'd never believed that yo' would throw yo'r own pop over an' side agin him. Yo' couldn't git Bill to do it—no, not if yo' would offer him all the land 'twixt yere an' the river."

"I can never make yo' understand," sighed the girl. "I love yo' as my pop, an' I'm grateful for all yo'r kindnesses, but don't yo' see that I can't pick up this old quarrel an' hate as yo' do an' feel yo'r feelin's for revenge? It's the same with Abe. He wants peace an' friendliness. Together we want a weddin' an' cabin home. I said Abe Taylor is a squar' man. If he wasn't would he dun agree to cum over yere this evenin' an' hold out his hand to yo' an' ask yo' to bury the past?"

"Abe Taylor comin' over yere?" asked the father in a voice hardly above a whisper.

"I'm lookin' for him every minit."

The father rose and entered the house and took down his loaded rifle, and when he sat down on the steps again the weapon lay across his knees.

"Is it for Abe?" asked the girl.

"For shore. I'll shoot him dead in his tracks!"

"Then yo' ar' a coward, an' I'm no kin to yo'!"

For a minute they looked into each other's eyes—his showing the darkest passions, hers revealing contempt—and then they turned their heads. Thus they sat for ten minutes without further speech, and the westering sun sunk to the hill tops and blazed full in their faces and half blinded them. A sudden step caught their ears and both turned their heads to the right.

"Abe!" gasped the girl.

"I'll kill him!" growled the man.

Some one turned the corner of the house and stood in the full blaze of sunset. The old man lifted his rifle and fired over the girl's shoulder before she could raise a hand to prevent. For a minute a smoke cloud hung low and obscured the body on the ground. Then the girl said quietly:

"Pop, yo've killed a man, but it's yo'r own son Bill!"

The old man staggered over and knelt beside the body, and as he knelt, his face drawn and haggard and his breath whistling in his throat, a young man turned in from the road and hailed close beside the girl.

"Pop thought it was yo'!" whispered the girl.

Abe nodded his head.

"Wait till I bundle my things an' we'll go."

Merry, but Not Wise.

The saying of Charles II., the king who, according to the severe yet just epitaph written upon him by the earl of Rochester,

> Never said a foolish thing
> And never did a wise one,

are so many as to show us plainly why he should be so beloved even by those who could not approve his actions. He was a merry monarch, and he was "good company."

His was an age of nicknames, and he was widely known as "Old Rowley," the name of an ill favored horse in the royal stables. One day a young lady at court was in her apartments singing a satirical ballad called "Old Rowley, the King," when Charles knocked at the door.

"Who is it?" she called.

"Old Rowley himself, madam," he returned good naturedly.

He could convey a reproof with wit and gentleness. When Penn stood before him with his hat on the king took off his own.

"Friend Charles," said the Quaker, "why dost thou not put on thy hat?"

"'Tis the custom of this place," returned the king, "that never above one person should be covered at a time."

Use of Lemons.

The uses of lemons are manifold, and the more we employ them the better we shall find ourselves. For all people, in sickness or in health, lemonade is not only a safe but a remarkably pleasant drink. It is a specific against worms and skin complaints. The pippins or seeds crushed may also be mixed with water and used as a drink. Lemon juice is the best antiscorbutic remedy known. It not only cures the disease; but, what is better than a cure, it is a preventive. Sailors make a daily use of it for that purpose. It is a good thing to rub the gums daily with lemon juice to keep them in a healthy condition. It prevents chilblains. Lemon used in intermittent fevers is mixed with strong, hot black tea or coffee without sugar. Neuralgia may be cured by rubbing the part afflicted with a lemon. It is valuable also to cure warts and to destroy dandruff on the head by rubbing the roots of the hair with it. Lemon juice and glycerin, equal parts, make an unequaled lotion for the hands to keep them soft, smooth and healthy. We think we have said enough to show how valuable, therefore, lemons are.—Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette.

A Sure Sign.

"Mose, how in de wo'ld kin you tell ef dese melons is ripe widout goin' inter de patch?"

"Easy, Lige. Easy 'nough. Ain' no melon patch ever watched wid shotguns en bulldogs onless de melons is des a-bustin' ter be ate."—Chicago Tribune.

SOME REASONS WHY PEOPLE ARE SETTLING IN MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA.

Because it is the best country known to the man of moderate means.
Because you will find a country of rich soil awaiting the settler.
Because there are uplands, prarieland, and alluvial river bottoms.
Because you can be certain of profitable returns from whatever you put into the soil.
Because the winter does not consume what the summer produces.
Because there are more and better opportunities for deversified farming than elsewhere.
Because the seasons are regular and no fear of crop failure.
Because the country is never scourged by cyclones and devastating storms and blizzards.
Because everything grown elsewhere can be produced here more abundantly.
Because truck farming is a success; products being early on the market obtain high prices.
Because no better fruit country is known, oranges, plums, peaches, pears, apples, grapes, strawberries, figs, pecans and other fully maturing.
Because there are more chances for profitable investment of capital than elsewhere in this country.
Because for healthfulness this section is unequailed on the face of the globe.
Because you have no long winter months to encounter, with no excessive dry heat in summer.
Because the climate is more uniform than elsewhere, no extremes of heat or cold.
Because you will find the as orderly communities as anywhere on this continent.
Because you will find the most open-hearted people on the globe.
Because education is paramount; public schools and churches of every denomiuation are to be found in all communities.
Because the railroad facilities of this section are unexcelled, a double tracked railroad traversing the entire length of both states.
Because really good lands are yet cheap.
Because the geographical location of these states gives them the best markets in the United States.

We secure land for home-seekers or for colonies. Write to-day for full particulars and letters from Northern farmers already located in the South.

THROWING THE LASSO.

The Manner In Which the Rope Is Handled by an Expert.

"A mistaken impression prevails in the mind of the public in regard to the manner in which a lasso is handled," says an expert. "The idea that the loop is always swung around the head before making a cast, especially when the roper is on foot, is erroneous. No man of experience ever makes a cast in this fashion from the ground in practical work. There are several reasons why he does not. One of them is that the movement is likely to frighten the stock, especially horses; another that he may have to wait some minutes before a favorable opportunity occurs for making a cast. He knows that better results are obtained by holding the rope as unobtrusively as possible, even keeping it concealed from the object of capture.

"On the contrary, however, when mounted and in pursuit it is absolutely necessary to swing the loop over and around the head, for the cast must be made with the greatest possible force in order to overcome not only the forward movement of the pursued, but also the action of the wind should that chance to be against you.

"As to the manner of casting, some 'ropers' cast with a quick, jerky movement of the hand, seeming to use the arm very little and the body not at all. Others employ body, arm and hand. Both methods are effective when perfected by practice."

Board With the Butler.

To avoid the trouble of housekeeping, many wealthy Parisians board with their butler, so to speak. Instead of ordering the food for the household from day to day, they pay a fixed sum per month to their butler or housekeeper, who contracts to supply them with the usual three meals per day, composed of the customary courses, says What to Eat. The price paid for this service varies in accordance with the style of living. If guests be invited to dinner or any sort of entertainment be given, an extra sum per head is paid. In this way the lady of the house avoids the annoyance of butchers' and bakers' bills, and if the butler does not keep his part of the contract it is easy enough to find another to replace him. Of course, the president's household is carried out on this plan on a large scale, and many of the big stores supply all their employees with daily meals in the same manner. The banks and other administrations of similar nature often furnish the noonday meal to their clerks by contract, the latter paying a trifling sum toward the cost.

The Manufacture of Pins.

In 1775 a prize was given to the colonist of Carolina who produced the first native pins and needles. During the war of 1812, when, owing to restrictions upon commerce, the price of pins rose to the enormous sum of $1 per paper, the manufacture was actually started in the United States, but does not seem to have met with success, as the enterprise was soon abandoned. The industry was not fairly started in this country until the year 1836.

The early pins in this country, as in England, were made with globular heads of fine twisted wire, made separately, and secured to the shank by compression from a falling block and die. These old pins had the misfortune of often parting with their heads. It was to overcome this difficulty that the attention of early inventors was directed. The solid headed pin, in common use today, took the place of the old form about 1840.

Couldn't "Kid" Him.

"Have you known what it is to be an orphan?" asks one of the characters in the "Pirates of Penzance," and another replies, "Often." The similarity between the two words causes almost a page of good Gilbertian fun. It would have been otherwise if either of the characters had happened to be an average London boy.

The tale is told of a London boy on his country holiday who was asked by a carter to hold one of his horses. "Which 'orse?" asked the lad. "The off 'un," said the driver. "Horphan," said the boy. "How d'ye think Hi knows which of 'em's a horphan? Garn, you don't kid me." And that closed the incident.—London News.

Out of Proportion.

Benham—I try to believe the Bible, but I find that story of the ten virgins, five of whom were wise and five foolish, a little perplexing.

Mrs. Benham—What's the matter with that?

Benham—Judging from the women I have known, the proportion of foolish ones was altogether too small.—New York Times.

As If It Were Possible.

Claribel—I wonder what that creature meant?

Laurie—What creature?

Claribel—Why, Tentworth, of course. When I told him everybody said I was improving in my singing, he said he was delighted to hear it. The idea!—Stray Stories.

Her Protest.

"Darling," said Edwin, "your eyes are like diamonds, your teeth like pearls, your lips resemble the most glorious rubies, and your hair"—

"Edwin," said Angelina sternly, "remember that you work in a jewelry warehouse and that it's disgusting to talk shop."

Election Promises.

Successful Candidate—I shan't forget the promises in virtue of which I have been elected.

Political Manager—That's right. Bear them in mind. With a little brushing up they'll probably elect you again.—Puck.

The Old and the New Courtship

By Mrs. FRANK LESLIE

CERTAINLY "the times have changed, and men change with them," for us as well as for Ulysses, and I say "men" advisedly, for I don't think women have changed as much. Most girls—that is, the dear, rosy, dimpled darlings who are papa's pet and mother's blessing and who do not insist upon becoming civil engineers or doctors of law, medicine or theology—these girls, pure and simple, are willing enough to marry IF SOME ONE WHOM THEY LOVE asks them to do so. But the men do not propose, and so the girls do not marry, and the good old methods are out of vogue and the times are out of joint.

* * *

Young men have extended their privileges and contracted their liabilities. Formerly if a young unmarried man paid particular attention to a girl or a young widow it was understood by all observers that he was a candidate for her hand if he could gain her reluctant consent to accept him. The girl's parents looked serenely on, conscious that THEIR DAUGHTER WAS MISTRESS OF THE SITUATION and needed neither assistance nor protection; conscious, too, that the young man would be a very fortunate fellow if he gained so desirable a wife, and they would not stand in his way, although they were sincerely sorry to lose the flower of their family.

And now all this is changed. Instead of placidly looking on to see her daughter hold a little court and select the one she means to favor from a crowd of eager aspirants, the mother must be, like the early bird, very early on the ground TO CAPTURE the biggest and richest worm before any other mother bird can grab him and carry him to drop him into her nestling's open mouth. No wonder she gets an anxious and eager look herself and worries and frets and twitters and chirps overmuch and keeps the home nest in a condition of turmoil, for the worm has grown very wary, and if in taking his early walks abroad he espies the flitting form of the mother bird or even hears her sweet if sharpened song of greeting HE IS APT TO PRECIPITATELY RETIRE to his burrow or hide beneath some stem or clump of weeds.

Worse than this, should the bachelor chance to be, instead of a mere worm of earth, a beautiful gold or silver fish disporting himself in the waters of matrimony, then mamma, instead of a bird, is seen as a fisher, A VERITABLE FISHER OF MEN, baiting her hook with her daughter's charms, her accomplishments, her virtues and her affectionate and submissive temperament; but, alas, the goldfish has grown as "gamy" as a brook trout, and worse, for he can often keep a most experienced angler "in play" for a whole season and at the end give a sprightly and humorous twist to his glittering tail and fly off at a tangent to be no more seen in those waters.

BUT WHY, I ASK—WHY SHOULD IT BE SO, AND WHY DO OUR YOUNG MEN NEED TO BE URGED TO MAKE THEMSELVES THE "HAPPIEST OF MEN?"

Of course I know that the question has been asked before and variously answered. But no answer that ever I have heard HAS MET THE REQUIREMENTS, and I almost fancy that it must remain one of the conundrums without reply which, like snags and bowlders, still obstruct the stream of time.

Civilization's Aim Should Be to Avoid War

By HENRY LABOUCHERE, Editor of Truth, London

I PREFER teaching our children that war is one of the DIREST CURSES that afflict this earth, and that, while all should be prepared, if needs be, to defend our independence, our persistent aim should be to avoid all wars, and, as was well said by Lord Percy, "nations should consider not how little they can concede to one another, but how far they can meet each other's views."

This is the spirit that now animates the workingmen of France, of Germany and of Italy. Their leaders are ever deprecating any recrudescence of the military spirit that has conduced so often to war in the past. It is the spirit that animates our own workingmen.

If we were attacked they would need NO MILITARY TOMFOOLERIES in national schools to induce them to fight for their country. But they know that peace is the best of policies for them, as never has there been a war which has not been harmful to those engaged in industry.

Napoleon infused a military spirit into Frenchmen. What did the workingmen of France gain by his conquests? What do our workers gain by our annexations of Uganda, of the Sudan and of the empire of Sokoto? What have they gained by our war in South Africa, except having to pay more for some of their necessaries and the knowledge that it has paved the way for the introduction of Chinese chattels to work in the Transvaal mines for the benefit of COSMOPOLITAN MILLIONAIRES?

A tribe of savages is always cultivating a military spirit. Its sole occupation is war, and the arts of peace are despised as contemptible to men of spirit. AMONG CIVILIZED MEN THERE OUGHT TO BE A HIGHER IDEAL, and there would be were it not that there are usually too many missionaries of strife among them ever appealing to the baser passions and trying to persuade their fellow countrymen that there is something noble and elevating in war and that a soldier is the noblest of human beings.

ARMIES ARE NECESSARY EVILS, BUT FOR MY PART I PREFER A PROCESSION OF TRADES UNIONISTS TO THE MARCHING BY OF ARMED REGIMENTS AND THE SIMPLE AND HOMELY GARB OF A WORKER TO THE TAWDRY TRAPPINGS OF MEN OF WAR. I RESPECT A MAN WHO HONORABLY FULFILLS HIS CALLING AS A SOLDIER, BUT HE IS NO BETTER IN MY EYES THAN THE MAN WHO HONESTLY LABORS IN OTHER AND MORE PEACEFUL VOCATIONS.

A FEARFUL HOLACAUST.

Fire Near Cumberland Caused Death of Entire Family.

A holacaust so blood-curdling in its character and fearful in its fatality as to have been a veritable hell, occurred in one of the Wabash camps, owned by J. Nuckels, a sub-contractor, at an early hour Monday morning, the scenes of the tradegy being located a mile and a half west of Oldtown, near Cumberland. The lives to be thus suddenly and horribly sacrificed were five in number, being Mack Namarack, Slav laborer, Mrs. Namarack, native of Russia, infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Namarack; Anna Cohl, Mrs. Namarack's sister; Massaua Cohl, Mrs. Namarack's sister. Between the hours of four and five o'clock Contractor Nuckels was awakened by his wife, who had previously been aroused from her slumber by shrieks that emanated from one of the cabins near by. Mrs. Nuckels saw the reflection of the fire from her bedroom window and realizing that the screams from without told of the enactment of a tradegy, she quickly gave the alarm. Contractor Nuckels without waiting to don other rainments than a pair of shoes ran to the burning cabin, but ere he could offer the least assistance the walls of the burning structure had fallen in.

Buford W. Woods vs. Lydia Woods.
No. 1306 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree, divorcing the plaintiff, a vinculo matrimonii, from the defendant.

The bill states, that the plaintiff and defendant were married by the Rev. W. E. George at Deer Park, in the year 1894, and that they resided together at Garrett county aforesaid until about the month of April 1897; that the conduct of the plaintiff towards the defendant has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, and without any just cause or reason, the defendant abandoned and deserted the plaintiff, and has declared her intention to live with him no longer, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for more than three years, to-wit since the month of April, 1897, and is deliberate and final and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation; that one child, George W. Woods has been born to the plaintiff and defendant from said marriage, and resides with his mother the defendant, that the said Lydia Woods is a non-resident of the State of Maryland

The bill then prays for a decree divorcing the plaintiff and defendent a vinculo matrimonii and for general relief and an order of publication against the absent defendant.

It is thereupon this 25th day of November, 1904, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, ordered that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in said Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 30th day of December, 1904, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning her to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 17th day of January next, to show cause, if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

TELEPHONE RATES ARE INCREASED.

Action Taken at Meeting of Recently Elected Board of Directors.

MR. MAFFETT RE-ELECTED PRES'T

With the Additional Duties of General Manager—Increase of Rates Necessary To Pay Expenses—The New Officers.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Garrett County Telephone Company of Garrett county was held at Hoyes on Monday of this week when a majority of the stock was represented either in person or by proxy.

The Board of Directors for last year was composed of Messrs. M. Mattingly, S. P. Specht, W. A. Maffett, P. P. McAndrews and D. S. Custer. The Board for the present year as elected on Monday is composed of Messrs. Maffett, Mattingly, Specht and Custer of the old board and C. C. Frankhouser, C. V. Guard and Madison Durst, new members, who secured their stock in the present corporation by the sale of the West Virginia line several months ago.

The Board of Directors held their meeting immediately after the adjournment of the meeting of the stockholders when Mr. W. A. Maffett was elected president and general manager; Horace R. DeWitt, vice president, and James W. Beeghly, secretary and treasurer.

The increase of rates which is published below, was made necessary to maintain the line andpay a reasonable profit on the investment. In very recent years the company has declared no dividend on the stock owing solely to the fact that the rates were so low as to make a dividend impossible. The new rates which go into effect immediately for the following months, are graduated and will create little or no opposition, the rates being upon a basis of twelve months' service, as follows:

On local or party lines for residences, $4.

Commercial lines, the basis being made upon the amount of license paid by merchants, etc., and the stock of goods carried, as follows: One thousand dollars or less, $6; $1000 to $2000, $8; $2000 to $4000, $10; $4000 to $6000, $12.

Private lines, $12.

These rates will be in effect for the next six months, as indicated above, at which time another arrangement may be made.

The service, by the increase in the rates, will be materially benefitted as the company will have more means at its disposal to make necessary improvements and to give adequate returns to the subscribers.

COURT HOUSE IMPROVEMENTS.

Walls Improved By Application of Paint and Paper.

The interior of the court house in Oakland, Garrett county's imposing temple of justice, has been greatly improved in its several departments by the application of paper, paint and calcimine to the walls and the installation of a handsome electric chandalier and drop lamp in the County Commissioner's office.

The walls of the offices of the Clerk of the Circuit Court, Register of Wills and County Treasurer have been papered while the office of the Commissioners has been calcimined. These rooms have also been painted and freshed up to a remarkable degree.

HERMANN UNDER INDICTMENT

Former Resident of Lonaconing Implicated in Oregon Land Frauds.

Binger Hermann, formerly of Lonaconing, this county, was jointly indicted with United States Senator John H. Mitchell and George Sorensen, formerly a deputy sheriff of Multnomah county, by the Federal grand jury at Portland, Oregon, in connection with land frauds.

The indictment alleges that John H. Mitchell and Binger Hermann did in January, 1902, unlawfully and feloniously conspire together and with S. A. Puter, Horace G. McKinley, N. W. Yarpley, Emma L. Watson, Salmon B. Ormsby, Clark E. Loomis, William H. Davis, and other to defraud the government of the United States out of a portion of its public lands, situated in Township 11 South, Range 7 East, by means of forged and false affidavits and fictitious persons, and that in the furtherance of such conspiracy S. A. Puter did on March 9, 1902, pay to John H. Mitchell the sum of $2,000 to secure his influence with Binger Hermann, then commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington.

The indictment also alleges that, acting upon the suggestion and the wish of Senator Mitchell, and influenced by him, knowing that the transactions were unlawful and felonious, Binger Hermann used his power as commissioner of the General Land Office to expedite twelve claims in Township 11-7 and had them passed to patent when he knew them illegal and not according to the requirements of the law.

Binger Hermann has made polital speeches in Oakland.

ST. MARK'S EV. LUTHERAN CHURCH REDUCED TO ASHES.

Beautiful Structure Along With Building Owned By Mr. G. H. Pritchard Destroyed By Fire This (Thursday) Afternoon —Two Other Buildings Damaged.

THE LOSS IS ESTIMATED AT $11,000 TO $12,000

Merchants and Others Move Their Goods From Buildings Threatened—Heroic Work Done By Valiant Firemen Notwithstanding Inense Heat and Smoke.

Fire, which broke out this afternoon about three o'clock in the photographic studio of Mr. G. H. Pritchard on Third street, destroyed that building and also St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, adjoining it on the north, badly damaged the residence of Mr. George F. Loughridge and the store building of Messrs. S. L. Townshend & Sons on Alder street.

The total loss as a result of the fire is variously estimated at $11,000 to $12,000, with insurance of $4000.

During the progress of the fire many persons were more or less seriously hurt by falling glass, slate from roofs, buckets, etc.

An heroic effort was made to save the church but the fire ate its way into the roof timbers where it could not be gotten to and the men were driven from the various points on the building by the ever increasing flames. Many deeds of daring were witnessed during the progress of the fire.

It was only by the bull-bog tenacity of a small body of daring firemen that the town was saved from the flames.

Household goods, merchandise, office furniture and all manner of property was removed from the buildings along the south side of Alder street by the owners fearing that the flames would get beyond control. These goods were scattered all over the streets and later carried back into the buildings or taken to other places and stored.

Oakland has again been visited by a disastrous conflagration which started this afternoon about three o'clock in the Pritchard photographic studio, caused by the explosion of a kerosene stove, which at one time threatened to destroy the greater portion of the town, but which was held in check after the Pritchard building and the Lutheran church had been entirely consumed.

The fire originated in the dark room of Mr. Pritchard's studio where he placed a stove for the purpose of doing some photographic work. Leaving it for a few moments he went to another part of the building and when he returned the room as well as an adjoining apartment was in flames and beyond control. This building was occupied on the second floor by Mr Pritchard as a residence as well as photograph gallery. On the lower floor resided Mr. J. E. Bird and family and Miss Alice Hessen, who conducted a dress making establishment. The household effects from this building were all saved and but slightly damaged.

To the south of the Pritchard building is located the residence of Mr. George F. Loughridge and separated from it by a narrow alley. The fire was quickly communicated to Mr. Loughridge's house but was held in check by the firemen. The siding was almost entirely burned away and the roof more or less damaged as well as the plastering on the interior.

On the north side of the Pritchard building was located the Lutheran church, which was erected about ten years ago at a cost of nearly $10,000, including furnishings.

The intense heat from the Pritchard building set the gables of the church on fire and notwithstanding the battle waged by the brave men who risked their lives to save the temple of worship from the devouring flames they were driven back by the ever increasing heat and smoke, retreating inch by inch as the fire gained headway and were at last forced to acknowledge defeat when they turned their attention to saving the store building of S. L. Townshend & Son, located at the rear of the church and facing Alder street.

It was only by the pluck and energy of the firemen that this last mentioned building was saved. It was separated from the church by an alley less than eight feet wide and was on fire hundreds of times but by the use of water, snow and the chemical engine the flames were always quenched before they had gained any foothold and thus the fire was gotten under control, saving probably the entire block bounded by Third, Alder, Railroad and Oak streets.

Persons residing in the vicinity of the fire and merchants having goods in buildings which were at one time threaten with destruction, hurriedly moved everything movable to other points. Much of the materials were badly damaged and it will require weeks of hard work to get things back to the normal conditions.

The losses, estimated are as follows:

Pritchard building, valued at $2500; insurance, $1000.

Loughridge building, damage fully covered.

Lutheran church, valued at $7000; insurance, $3000.

Townshend building, damage fully covered.

The furnishings of the Lutheran church were all carried out, thus saving about $1500 worth of property. The membership of the church, although not yet fully decided on the matter, will probably rebuild their edifice but upon another site.

During the progress of the fire many were more or less injured by falling glass, buckets, etc., besides being burned about the hands, faces and other parts of the body.

Especially mention is made of the heroic work of Messrs. D. E. Bolden, Jake Morrison, Joseph H. Smithman, Robert C. Townshend, Gene Baumgardner, Henry Lauer, Charley Bosley, Samuel Lawton and others who seemed to know just where they were needed and where their services would do the most good.

All glory to Oakland's fire fighters! There are none better the world over.

STATE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY

Garrett County Well Represented at the Meeting Last Week.

At the annual meeting of the Maryland Horticultural Society held at the Maryland Agricultural College last Thursday and Friday Garrett county had as her representatives Messrs. W. McCulloh Brown, vice president of the Society for this county, Mr. Chas. T. Sweet, of Swanton, and Messrs. William and Thomas Bishoff, of Hoyes.

The several sessions of the Society were extremely interesting. Speakers of National repute were present and made addresses of more than passing interest.

Among the prizes awarded for apples Garrett county got the first prize on the Fallowwater variety, it going to Mr. W. McCulloh Brown.

Several exhibits of fruit from this county failed to arrive at their destination among them being one shipped by Mr. Chas. T. Sweet, containing fifteen varieties of choicest apples. If this exhibit had arrived it is thought that Garrett would have received a number of other first prizes as among the varieties were the Baldwin, Blenheim, Ben Davis, York Imperial and York Stripe.

JAPANESE STRUCK BY ENGINE

Were Walking Along Track Near Piedmont Enroute to Washington.

While seven Japanese were walking down the Seventeen-Mile grade, near Everetts tunnel in Garrett county, on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad last Friday, they were run down by a helper engine and two were seriously injured. The men stepped off the west bound track to let a freight train pass and failed to observe the approach of the helper on the other track. Engineer Kirby, who was running the engine, failed to see the men until it was too late to stop. He picked up the men and took them to Piedmont, where they are now under the care of Dr. W. A. Shuey. The Japs had been working in the mine at Corinth, W. Va., and were on their way to Washington, intending to go there afoot. They claimed that on their arrival they would be sent to their native country free of charge by the government, it being their intention to enter the army and fight against Russia.

TURNED ON THE GAS.

Gilbert Baumgardner, of Mountain Lake, Died at Brownsville.

Gilbert Baumgardner, son of Rev. N. L. Baumgardner, formerly of Mountain Lake Park, was found dead in his room at Brownsville, Pa., on Thursday of last week. His body was lying near a gas stove with one hand on the key. It is supposed he was partially asphyxiated on awakening and had crawled to the stove, but instead of turning the gas off turned it on full force.

He was a student in the West Virginia University four or five years ago and left school to engage in teaching.

He was most highly respected by all who knew him. Rev. Baumgardner, father of the young man, was formerly presiding elder of the Oakland District, and with his family has the sympathy of all.

His funeral took place at Morgantown on Saturday.

TO PRODUCE BLUE CARNATION

Efforts of Flower Growers Fruitless Thus Far—Fortune for Lucky Man.

As people pass up and down the streets and look into the windows where flowers are sold few ever stop to consider how much care it takes to make them so beautiful, so fragrant, so brilliant in color and so graceful of stem and bud. It takes skill to produce such effects, and the most beautiful of them are not exactly as they would have been if they had grown loosely and unkept in the garden or elsewhere. They have been made pleasing to the eye as well as to the sense of smell by the careful and close guidance of an ever watchful flower grower. The brilliant colors in most of them are developed by the cross of two special kinds of flowers.

For instance, suppose the flower grower should desire to get a new color of carnation. He takes a deep red flower and, with a camel's hair brush, dusts the pollen of one flower on the pistal of another which, for example, of light pink color. Then the carnation is very carefully wrapped up so no insects can get to it, and is guarded until it goes to seed. The seed is put away until the next spring, when it is planted.

The florist may be anxious to see a dark red flower growth from the seed but he may be sadly disappointed, for there is no surety as to the color of a hybrid. On an average three plants will spring up from the seed, and each one have flowers of a different shade and not look like those from which they were produced. Often two dark carnations will yield perfectly white flowers.

Each year there are from 15,000 to 20,000 plants grown and thrown away on these experiments, for all the time carnation specialists are endeavoring to produce better flowers, larger ones, and those with deeper and richer colors.

So extensive has become the growing of carnations that the Carnation Society of America was organized. It is the duty of this organization to judge on the value of these experimental plants. For instance, should a grower secure a good looking flower after crossing two plants, it is sent to the society and judgment asked as to its strength and value as a flower from which to start a stock. The flowers are judged very carefully with reference to points, just like a race horse or blooded cattle. The country is divided into districts for the society, and Kansas City is in the district having Chicago for its headquarters.

The carnation enthusists have been satisfied in a degree with a shade of pink that has been produced, but are still clamoring for a more brilliant and deeper shade of red, and will not be content until perfect is reached. They are mixing all shades of carnations and making their experiments under all sorts of conditions in the hopes of getting the much coveted and desired results.

But probably the most intricate problem before the carnation growers is to get a blue carnation. Several times enthusiasts in different sections cried out in triumph that they had succeeded in triumph the much coveted flower, and all carnation raisers would be all anxiety to see the new creation. But just as often have they been disappointed, for never has this color been brought out clearly in a carnation. Still experienced florists hope to see a blue carnation some day, and the man who succeeds in producing it will have a fortune. For the old rule of like makes like holds good in the life of flowers, and the cuttings from that blue carnation would always produce blue flowers, just so long as the pollen was not mixed with that of another colored bloom.

There are freaks among carnations, and those are called "sports." A sport usually results from the work of a bee. These insects sometimes light on one color of flower, and when they go to another with a different shade they leave some of the pollen which has caught on their feet. When the seed of this flower produces a plant it has a shoot, which will have on it a bloom with a different color from that of the mother plant.

Warm Where He Is Now.

One of our exchanges thus bids fare well to a departed citizen: "He was a man of push. He played marbles for keeps, when a boy, and cheated his playmates out of alleys; he swapped a bladeless jacknife for a four-blader, sight unseen, sold it for 50 cents, bought a pound of sugar and made a barrel of lemonade, which he sold one circus day for $9; he started in business and sold bad meat for choice cut and made a fortune; when he got $1,000 he organized a company with $1,000,000 capital, mostly water, and sold the stock at par; when the company busted it was found out he had sold out some time before; when he died he was a millionaire and he left it all here. It is warm where he is now."

The Witness Of John The Baptist

The current average notion of the forerunner, as, indeed, of the other prophets, is probably too mechanical; to-wit, that at an exact period and fixed place he appeared, and having spoken certain prescribed words, moved off the stage again. That reduces to an automaton one of the freest beings who ever drew breath, and to a piece of acting one of the most genuine and fateful contests of history. John was intensely human. He had like passions with others. The glory of it is that with these he yet acted divinely in a great national crisis. And that not because irresistibly impelled by a power external to himself. His ascetic life was a rational protest to the voluptuousness of his age. His solitariness rebuked the self-interested combinations in Church and State. He sought the desert that he might think to a finish a patriotic course of conduct, and might fortify his soul with those matured convictions of truth which would inure him even to martrydom. When at length he felt that he was ready to speak and some at least ready to hear him, he went to the place where the most people would naturally congregate.

He was granted an immediate and astonishingly large auditory. It had been five hundred years since a prophet's voice had fallen upon Israels ear and the reading of the ancient prophets in the synagogue was perfunctory. It was uninterpreted by sympathetic accent, and so was spiritless and without effect. The conjunction of man and message in John was recognized instantly. In this sense he was a "man come from God." The Jews, with their social instincts hated the desert, but they recognized it as the birthplace of their deliverers. And John had come from the desert. That predisposed them in his favor. Again he was of priestly parentage, but of a parentage untainted with the vices incident to the hierarchy. Finally matters had come to such a pass through the haughty intolerance of the Roman governors and the low and cunning fawning of puppet priests that revolution was in the air. To some it seemed that darkest hour, which presages down. However, the Baptist avoided all political entanglements. He affiliated with no party. He was found to be solely a preacher of righteousness. He sought the regeneration of his nation. He made himself a father confessor. He called for words of repentance and deeds to match them. He made the Jews themselves submit to the sign which they enforced upon heathen proselytes to Judaism. He baptized them.

The ecclesiastical rulers at Jerusalem could no longer maintain their complacency. They could not ignore the incident. All Jerusalem and Judea, and later Perea, Samaria, and Galilee were going out to John's preaching and baptism. Who could tell what the end would be? The Sanhedrin suddenly asserts itself. It sits in Moses' seat to determine who are true and who false teachers. No one can teach without its authority. John is already in their view an usurper. At least they will now test his doctrine and demand his credentials. This is the meaning and intent of the sending of the delegation.

It is a psychological moment. Humanly speaking it is John's opportunity. He already has a vast and ever-increasing clientele. He has the sense of power. The acute condition of the national life would seem to justify an assertion of himself. If not tempted at this moment, he was more than human. On the dark background of that thought the whiteness of his pure soul stands in clear-cut outline. He brushes aside a scepter and diadem. He will serve God and man unselfishly. He is not the Messiah, not Elijah, no not even a prophet. He is only a herald's voice, announcing the King's approach, and demanding that a highway be built for Him. When challenged concerning his baptism, he sets no meritorious sacramental value upon it. The fluid element of nature is a paltry thing compared with the Holy Ghost. Water is a mere sign. Spirit is the energizing life of God. The forerunner baptizes with water. The Messiah with Spirit.

This unfavorable reception of John's testimony, this querulous and rasping catichism of the great preacher in the presence of his audience, by the highest authority of the Church, is the beginning of that inveterate and deadly opposition referred to in the prologue of this gospel. Darkness not only fails to comprehend the light; it resists it.

Mosaic from Commentaries.

And: Connecting what is to follow with statements in the prologue.—New Century Bible. Jews; Originally signified members of the tribe of Judah, but after captivity used to describe the nation. John uses it (seventy times) to describe the theocracy in opposition to Christ's claim.—Ibid. Record: Witness (martyr). John writing later, lets the shadow of his knowledge of the malignity fall back upon his narrative.—Camb. Bid. What then? The five questions of the priests represent a descending climax (the Messiah, Elijah, an anonymous prophet, why baptizeth thou?); the short, laconic answers of the Baptist, in striking conirast, lare rising from negation to affirmation, and turn the attention away from himself and towards Christ.—Schaff Lange. And he saith: Replies grow in abruptness. "I am not the Christ;" "I am not;" "No!"—Camb. Bid. Of the Pharises: Sect most opposed to Christ.—Ibid. Hostile to innovations. —New Century. John: Preacher of singular character, great power.—Abbot. Young preacher of singular indiyiduality and force; virile, terrible, untamable; all the harshness and grandeur of the desert had entered his blood.—Dawson. Behold the Lamb; Reference is to the paschal lamb, a typical sacrifice; also to the meekness and gentleness of Jesus.—New Century. After me: In order of manifestation. Before: In point of dignity.—Ibid. Witness: This verse gives the resultant testimony which it has been the great object of the Baptist's ministry to bear.

The Teacher's Lantern.

Who art thou?" The challenge is not to one, but to all. The call is to self-identification, the assertion of selfhood. Who are you? What do you stand for? Your ideal of life? One question answers another.

The marked tendency of the day, especially in organized industry, and social, and even Church life, is to the destruction of individuality. Men become machines. The social organization becomes a mechanism—almost automatic. The conservation of individualism is the persistent problem of current life.

"I am not worthy." That presents the rugged prophet from a new angle. The rabbis taught that the one thing too servile for the son of a prophet to do for his master was to unloose his sandals. He must leave that for some scullion. But John declares himself not worthy to perform even that menial office for the Messiah. This blending of modesty with conscious power is a fascinating trait in many historic characters.

Nazaritism was the antipode to extreme self-indulgence. It was no golden mean. By its extreme austerity it was designed to accentuate the wanton luxury of the day. It was not an ideal of life obligatory on all. A pretty world this, if Nazaritism were universal.

Our modern temperance societies are a Christian Nazaritism. They are a moral enterprise, aiming to raise the public practice to a standard of temperance by exhibiting an abstinence from even an otherwise innocent measure of indulgence.

There is no evidence that the Baptist ever went near the temple. He makes no allusion to existing forms except to reveal their emptiness. He asserts the impossibility of a religious life apart from an ethical one. The repentance which will not share its abundance of coats with a naked brother is of no account in John's eye.

With John there is a passing of an old idea that the kingdom of heaven is a deposit, which is simply to be received into waiting hearts. The kingdom is a spiritual and human work, which with infinite pain and incessant toil is to be carried to consummation. Up to John's day the kingdom was matter of expectation, but from his day onward the kingdom is taken, not received, and in the taking there is such moral earnestness as to have the appearance of violence.

The prophecy of Isaiah was the text-book of the Baptist. He had no use for Leviticus, with its infinite ceremonial, nor yet for Joshua, with its martial conquests, but Isaiah's vision of the spirituality of God and his call to service was his meat and drink.

PARDON TO BE ASKED FOR EVY.

Young Man Serving Twenty-One Years For Attempted Bank Robbery Broken in Health.

The mother of Alonzo Evy, of Keyser, W. Va., will ask Governor Warfield to pardon her son, who was convicted of attempted robbery of the German Saving Bank, Cumberland, at the April term of the Allegany county court, 1901, and sentenced to 21 years in the penitentiary. Evy and Moore were the only two convicted and in Evy's case the jury in finding him guilty recommended him to the court's mercy. Since his confinement Evy has broken down very much in health, and Warden Weyler states that what he at first thought was shamming weakness in Evy he now finds to be illness. It is understood that officials of the bank the men tried to rob, and four of the jurors who found him guilty, have signed a petition asking for Evy's pardon.

ADAM'S AND EVE'S APPLES.

Complicated Question as to How Many They 8.

How many apples did Adam and Eve eat? Some say Eve 8, and Adam 2—a total of 10 only. Now we figure the thing out far differently. Eve 8 and Adam 8 also—total 16.

Yet the above figures are wrong for if Eve 8 and Adam 8 2 certainly the total would be 90. Scientific men, however, on the strength of the theory that the antediluvians were a race of giants, reason something like this: Eve 8 1 and Adam 8 2—total 163. Wrong again; what would be clearer than if Eve 8 1 and Adam 8 1 2 the total was 893. If Eve 8 1 1st and Adam 8 1 2 would not the total be 1623?

We believe the following to be a fair solution. Eve 8 1 4 Adam, Adam 8 1 2 4 Eve—total 8,938. Still another calculation is as follows: If Eve 8 1 4 Adam, Adam 8 1 2 4 2 oblige Eve—total 82,056. We think this, however, not a sufficient quantity. For though we admit that Eve 8 1 4 Adam, Adam if he 8 0 8 1 2 4 2 keep Eve company—total 8,082,056.

All wrong. Eve, when she 8 1 8 1 2 many, and probably she felt sorry for it, but her companion in order to relieve her grief 8 1 2. Therefore when Adam 8 1 8 1 4 2 40fy Eve's depressed spirits they both had eaten 81,896,864.—The Obermayer Bulletin.

Spring's Fairy Wand

By KEITH GORDON

Copyright, 1904, by K. M. Whitehead

It was the English sparrows that put it into Mowbray's head, though perhaps the rhythmic beating of carpets and the sight of winter garments out for their last airing in the sunlight may have prepared his mind for the idea.

The world, so far as he could see it from the windows of his back room, had grown suddenly domestic. Every time he approached the window some new sign of household unheaval greeted him. Every one seemed distractingly busy putting his house in order, and, without realizing precisely what was the matter, Mowbray had a vague, injured sense of being out of it.

Then one morning there was a deafening clatter outside the window where on an adjacent wall the ivy leaves were already changing from russet to rich green and the plumes of the wisteria vine waved with languid elegance in the spring breeze. True to their nature, the sparrows were wrangling fiercely.

"Evidently fighting for the hand of the same lady or disagreeing about the advantages of a building site!" chuckled Mowbray as he eyed the reflection of his lathered face in the mirror and, puckering his mouth to the left, drew the razor skillfully across his right cheek and viewed the result with critical attention.

It was a homely moment for self revelation, but so it happened, and so it must be set down. An instant later he was thinking that it wouldn't be half bad to be one of those married fellows who at this season were receiving such injunctions as, "Now, John, don't forget to telephone the paper hanger," or "Just stop at the carpet cleaner's on your way to the station and hurry him up."

During the rest of his toilet Mowbray grinned at himself in the glass, more or less humorously. Up to the present moment the serious game of money making, with occasional gay hours, had seemed to him as satisfying an occupation as any man could desire. Now it had ceased to be all absorbing. He wanted to be consulted about the color of wall papers, the designs of rugs and the style of furniture. He wanted to hear some soft, feminine voice saying, "But do you think we can afford it this spring, dear?" and to answer grandly: "Certainly, madam. Do you suppose your husband is such a duffer that he can't pay for a few luxuries now and then?"

IN A MOMENT HE WAS BY HER SIDE.

Queerly enough, the eyes that looked into his as in fancy he made this speech were of a clear, lucid gray, with long, dark lashes and beautifully penciled brows. To be candid, they were the eyes of Elinor Grant, one of the few girls of his acquaintance whose society he had ever found as entertaining as business. It seemed a sort of miracle that they should appear at the particular juncture. Decidedly fate was giving him a tip.

When he called that afternoon Miss Grant was out, and he had a childish feeling that the bottom had dropped out of things. A dark suspicion that other men besides himself might have received tips from fate also haunted him, and the thought made him a trifle uneasy.

He wandered back downtown, feeling rather glum. There were other girls, of course, always, but he wanted to see her and no one else. Some way of all the girls he knew she was the only one he could think of in connection with the household details that had suddenly appealed to him with their homely charm. In imagination he could see her bustling about her little domain, one of those narrow brownstone houses huddled timidly between more pretentious ones on some side street, directing her maids and taking a lively interest in the affairs of her little household.

The fancy pleased him immensely, and he was going on to elaborate it when the gay colors of a display of wall paper in a window he was passing caught his eye. He slackened his pace, and then and not until then did he observe the figure of a trim young woman standing before it, absorbed in contemplation. In a moment he was at her side.

"One would think you had an establishment of your own and were getting ideas for having it done over," was his laughing salutation as he looked down at her with a pleased warmth in his eyes and enjoyed the startled glance she turned upon him.

It seemed the sweetest thing that he should have come upon her like this—as if some subtle influence had turned her thoughts into the same channel with his own. Decidedly, things were coming his way. He felt exhilarated, triumphant, boyish. Miss Grant laughed rather foolishly as she greeted him.

"I was playing a game that has been a favorite of mine since I was a small girl," she explained as they turned away from the window together, "a game of 'make believe,' in which I arrange everything in life to suit myself. Nettie and I—Nettie was my best friend, you know—used to spend hours describing our husbands, houses and children to each other. It was great fun, I can tell you, and we entered into details until it actually seemed real."

She paused and glanced up at him to see if he understood and then continued, "When you came up I was just furnishing a love of a house in thought, selecting the color scheme for my walls, you know."

Mowbray listened, almost too rapt to speak. There was something thrilling in the knowledge that her thoughts had been the very complement of his. A strange, strong happiness and certainty possessed him.

"Would you mind telling me whether the husband that you planned bore any resemblance to me?" he questioned daringly.

She regarded him critically, then shook her head. "Don't think me rude," she murmured; "but, to tell you the truth, he was always six feet tall and blond. Once I remember when we had reached the end of a game—that is, seen our daughters grow up and marry—we began all over again, and for a change I chose a dark, cold man who filled me with a delicious fear. But I was always forgetting and harking back to my favorite type, so at last I gave up."

"Too bad, too bad!" murmured her companion, but his tone implied that his pity was for her disappointment rather than his own. They walked along in silence for awhile, absorbed in their thoughts and the lively scene about them, yet strangely conscious of each other. At last Mowbray spoke.

"I don't see how the thing is coming out," he began, with feigned bewilderment, "for when the sights and sounds of early spring suddenly made me homesick for the thing I've never had—a home"—

His voice grew low, and he paused a second, as if the thought were too sacred to be mentioned lightly. Elinor's heart went out to him, though she stubbornly kept her glance fixed indifferently on the crowd about them.

"It was your face that rose before me instantly; your eyes that looked into mine; your dear presence that I felt in the house that I planned, like a benediction, a caress. You were the spirit of the place, its queen, the gracious woman to whom I fancied myself coming home each night with a deeper, fuller love."

A heedless pedestrian jostled them, all unconscious of the fact that in doing so he had rudely brushed against the sweetest thing in the world—a love story. They continued their way, almost in silence, until the bewildering greenery of the park turned by spring magic into fairyland confronted them.

In a flash Elinor seemed to see her life stretching away into the future, transformed into a beauty as matchless as that before her, by love.

She laid her hand upon Mowbray's arm and gazed at him for a moment with her soul in her eyes.

"After all," she said very softly, "I believe that you 'dreamed true!'"

Look For the Woman.

Where a community is blessed with good churches, look for the woman. Where the public schools have teachers of worth and the schools are of recognized standard, look for the woman.

Where good music is brought to a town or city through private enterprise, look for the woman.

Where there is a prevalence of good literature in a small town, look for the woman.

When a boy grows into an honest, upright, forcible man, look for the woman.

Where you find clean street cars and clean streets, look for the woman.

Where you find lectures brought to an eager public by private enterprise, look for the woman.

Where you find healthful, cheerful charities supported and encouraged, look for the woman.

It is woman who stands behind most of these blessings of the world. It is woman and woman's clubs that are to be credited with many of these good influences.

It is woman and her home missionary society, woman and her church fair, woman and her eagerness to help, that make possible many of these dearly bought luxuries.—Chicago News.

How Moles Work.

Moles are usually actively at work in the early morning or late in the afternoon. It is not difficult to kill them with a pitchfork when they are working, the animals being located by observing the movement of the ground above them. If water is allowed to run into the burrow and fill it the animal when present can be forced to come to the surface to avoid drowning and may be easily killed. The best remedy for the damage done to lawns and grass plots by moles is prompt rolling with a heavy roller. By continued repetition of this the moles will be driven away at least temporarily.

Moles have few natural enemies. Their food consists chiefly of worms and insects that live in the ground, and their presence in large numbers at any place is an evidence of the abundance of their food. There is no doubt that they do much good by destroying many noxious insects. If it were not for the injury done to lawns by their throwing up ridges of earth along which the grass dies, or to gardens by their loosening the roots of young plants, moles would be more beneficial than harmful.—New England Homestead.

THE OLD FLAG

By Henry Cuyler Bunner

"THE position which Henry Cuyler Bunner has come to occupy in the literary annals of our time strengthens as the years pass," says an eminent critic. "If the stream of his genius flowed in gentle rivulets, it traveled as far and spread its fruitful influence as wide as many a statelier river. If his place is not among the greatest of our time, he has produced a sufficient body of fine verse to rescue his name from oblivion."

OFF with your hat as the flag goes by!
And let the heart have its say;
You're man enough for a tear in your eye
That you will not wipe away.

You're man enough for a thrill that goes
To your very finger-tips—
Ay! the lump just then in your throat that rose
Spoke more than your parted lips.

Lift up the boy on your shoulder, high,
And show him the faded shred—
Those stripes would be red as the sunset sky
If Death could have dyed them red.

The man that bore it with Death has lain
These twenty years and more—
He died that the work should not be vain
Of the men who bore it before.

The man that bears it is bent and old,
And ragged his beard and gray—
But look at his eye-fire young and bold,
At the tune that he hears them play.

The old tune thunders through all the air,
And strikes right into the heart—
If ever it calls for you, boy, be there!
Be there, and ready to start.

Off with your hat as the flag goes by!
Uncover the youngster's head!
Teach him to hold it holy and high,
For the sake of its sacred dead.

MEASURING THE BABY

Author Unknown

WE measured the riotous baby
Against the cottage wall,
A lily grew at the threshold,
And the boy was just as tall!
A royal tiger lily,
With spots of purple and gold,
And a heart like a jeweled chalice,
The fragrant dew to hold.

Without the bluebirds whistled
High up in the old roof trees,
And to and fro at the window
The red rose rocked her bees;
And the wee pink fists of the baby
Were never a moment still,
Snatching at shine and shadow
That danced on the lattice sill!

His eyes were wide as bluebells—
His mouth like a flower unblown—
Two little bare feet, like funny white mice,
Peeped out from the snowy gown;
And we thought, with a thrill of rapture,
That yet had a touch of pain,
When June rolls around with her roses
We'll measure the boy again.

Ah, me! In a darkened chamber,
With the sunshine shut away,
Through tears that fell like a bitter rain,
We measured the boy today;
And the little bare feet were dimpled,
And sweet as a budding rose,
Lay side by side together
In the hush of a long repose!

Up from the dainty pillow,
White as the risen dawn,
The fair little face lay smiling,
With the light of heaven thereon—
And the dear little hands, like rose leaves
Dropped from a rose, lay still,
Never to catch at the sunshine
That crept to the shrouded sill!

We measured the sleeping baby
With ribbons white as snow,
For the shining rosewood casket
That awaited him below;
And out of the darkened chamber
We went with a childish moan—
To the height of the sinless angels
Our little one had grown!

RICH AND POOR

By Lord Houghton

WHEN God built up the dome of blue
And portioned earth's prolific floor,
The measure of his wisdom drew
A line between the rich and poor;
And till that vault of glory fall,
Or beauteous earth be scarred with flame,
Or saving love be all in all,
That rule of life will rest the same.

We know not why, we know not how,
Mankind are framed for weal or woe—
But to the eternal law we bow;
If such things are, they must be so.
Yet, let no cloudy dreams destroy
One truth outshining bright and clear,
That wealth is only hope and joy,
And poverty but pain and fear.

Behold our children as they play!
Blest creatures, fresh from nature's hand;
The peasant boy as great and gay
As the young heir to gold and land;
Their various toys of equal worth,
Their little needs of equal care,
And halls of marble, huts of earth,
All homes alike endeared and fair.

They know no better! Would that we Could keep our knowledge safe from worse;
So power should find and leave us free,
So pride be but the owner's curse;
So, without marking which was which,
Our hearts would tell, by instinct sure,
What paupers are the ambitious rich!
How wealthy the contented poor!

Grant us, O God, but health and heart,
And strength to keep desire at bay,
And ours must be the better part,
What ever else besets our way.
Each day may bring sufficient ill;
But we can meet and fight it through,
If hope sustains the hand of will,
And conscience is our captain too.

THURSDAY, JAN. 5, 1905.

AFTER the experience of Oakland this afternoon the man who opposes water works should be sent to some barren island to spend the balance of his days.

DUN'S Review for Saturday, Dec. 31, contained the following editorial reference to the year just closed: During the first half of 1904 business continued to pursue the reactionary course started in the preceding year, conservatism dominating all departments, and new enterprises were postponed pending the return of confidence. Failures were above the average, both as to number and amount of defaulted indebtedness, bank exchanges showed losses of about 15 per cent, as compared with the same months of 1903, and prices of commodities gradually declined to the lowest point of the year on July 1st, when Dun's index Number was $67.192 From that point to the close of 1904 improvement was perceptible, and of the steady nature that is the best guarantee of permanence. There was no inflation or abnormal expansion to threaten stability. A helpful factor of much potency was the profitable agricultural season. Farm products were of greater value than in any previous year, despite a reduced wheat yield, for which high prices fully neutralized the loss in quantity. Manufacturing plants steadily reduced the proportion of idle machinery until at the present time there is little cause for complaint, except in a few cases where low water supply retards activity. Labor disputes were comparatively few, changed conditions necessitating some reductions of wages, which were accepted with little friction, and, in many cases, the old scales have been restored. A vast amount of gold was sent to other countries that was in greater need, strengthening the international position of this nation, while commercial relations were improved, and the future of foreign trade made brighter by the purchase of the Panama Canal The total value of merchandise imports and exports largely exceeded those of any previous year, notwithstanding a heavy loss in shipments of breadstuffs, a temporary factor due to the smaller surplus of wheat. Money was abundant and easy throughout the year, no financial pressure occuring at any time, and the latest reports of mercantile collections indicate that payments are becoming satisfactorily prompt. The amount of business already booked, and the sentiment shown by plans for enlarged output in leading industries, point almost unmistakably to national prosperity in 1905.

THE FALL OF PORT ARTHUR.

The new year is ushered in with tidings of an event which marks the close of one of the most memorable and most remarkable sieges in the world's history. The tremendous task which has at last been completed by the Japanese has, during the past eight months, again and again been alternately pronounced impossible and on the eve of accomplishment. One need not be a military expert in order to feel justified in declaring that only the successive developments of the siege itself revealed to the world—even to the world of military experts, other than Russian—the astounding formidableness of the defenses of Port Arthur. That the Japanese, in the early stages of war, expected to take the place in a comparatively short time is evident. As to outside military opinion, when the indications pointed to the design on their part to capture Port Arthur by assault, it may, we think, be said that the general belief among experts was that this would prove impossible—that the Japanese would be compelled to reduce the garrison to capitulato by the slow pressure of starvation and misery. That this plan would have been the right one from the point of view of sound military policy was also the prevalent opinion, until it became evident that the destruction of the Russian fleet in Port Arthur harbor before the arrival of the Baltic Squadron in Asiatic waters was a prime necessity of the Japanese campaign. The Japanese themselves, however, have, from first to last, pursued, with a steadiness like that of fate itself, the grim purpose with which they set out when first they began landing troops on the Liaotung peninsula. The task grew upon their hands, doubtless beyond all anticipation, but their exertions and sacrifices grew with the growing needs of the terrific struggle. How much greater its difficulties were than was generally understood may best be realized when we recall some of the comments made by competent writers upon the wonderful storming of Nanshan Hill, 30 miles north of Port Arthur. That dazzling exhibition of military courage, persistence and prowess was the first thing that opened the eyes of the world to the full extent of the warlike potency of the Japanese forces; but the inference from that to the speedy capture of Port Arthur ignored the other side of the equation—the almost superhuman difficulties presented by the successive lines of Russian fortifications, difficulties which the bloody tale of month after month of desperate assaults and heroic resistance have only gradually opened up to the world's knowledge. All the heroism of Nanshan Hill, all the military science of an army which has astonished the world by its mastery of every modern phase of the art, and steady persistence in unstinted sacrifice of life to accomplish a great military object—all these have only now at last sufficed to bring about the surrender of Russia's great stronghold on the Pacific.

The heroic defense made by the Russians is only less impressive than the wonderful campaign of siege and assault carried on by the Japanese. That the quality of bravery and steadfastness in war is confined to no nation or race, and to no set of nations and races, is proved once more, as it has been proved so often before, by the record of the stubborn defense that has just come to an end. Indeed, it will perhaps be claimed for Stoessel's splendid resistance that it succeeded in reducing the Japanese, after all, to the necessity of obtaining their long-sought prize as the result of starvation and disease and not of successful assault; for, according to the accounts which come over the wires today, the condition of things within the walls of Port Arthur had reached the very verge of utter desperation. Such a claim, however, cannot be substantially established; for the possession by the Japanese of the forts which have fallen under their assaults within the past three or four days would have made a speedy surrender inevitable even though the garrison had been supplied with unlimited stores of food and been in a condition of entire comfort. If the capture of Port Arthur by assault was an impossibility, the Japanese have accomplished the impossible.

MR. OWENS' PLAN ANALYZED.

The result of the last election in Maryland has set some good Democrats to thinking. In spite of disfranchising legislation and the timeworn negro domination scare, the Republican party of Maryland cannot be kept down. The average man likes a square deal and when he sees the other fellow attempting to win by dishonest and unfair methods, he sometimes goes in to give the schemer a body-blow. Thus it has been that while our Democratic friends have schemed to prevent Republicans expressing their will at the ballot-box enough honest men have resented their tricks to still make the Republican party in Maryland a mighty factor in public affairs. Since the last election some of the regulars are very much dissatisfied with the state of affairs brought about by the extra session legislation of 1901 and of the session of 1904. In a speech delivered before a Democratic club in Baltimore, Tuesday night, State's Attorney Owens, of that city, a regular of regulars, declared:

"That the special session of the Legislature of 1901 and its work was of gigantic political blunder for which the Democratic party managers are responsible.

"That the amendment to the Constitution proposed by the last Legislature is not suited to the needs of our people and should never have been passed.

Mr. Owens also comes out and admits that the negro domination scare, so zealously worked for political purpeses for so many years by his party, has no real foundation. He says:

"The existing conditions in our State do not justify, even on the plea of necessity, wholesale negro disfranchisement, as there is no danger of negro domination here. Notwithstanding this, however, there has been much talk of negro domination and prejudice has been awakened and excited upon this question, and more than one election carried under momentary excitement. If, however, you will look at The Sun Almanac figures of 1903, you will find that there were 223,067 registered white voters in this state and 52,167 negro voters. Baltimore city had 90,885 white voters and 16,175 negro voters—more than five and one-half times as many white voters as black. Certainly there can be no negro domination in the city of Baltimore. The figures of the whole State show about four and one-half times as many white voters as black. How can there be negro domination in the State?"

Mr. Owens being greatly concerned for his party's welfare suggests an extra session of the Legislature and the repeal of the Poe amendment and the substitution therefore of another which confines the right to vote to those who can read the Constitution of the United States and the State of Maryland when printed in the English language, and who can write his own name in the English language. Mr. Owens then goes on to prove his party regularity by showing that his scheme would make the Eastern Shore and Southern Maryland solidly Democratic and would cut down the Western Maryland Republican majority if not entirely wipe it out. It does not matter to Mr. Owens that a large number of very respectable white men would be disfranchised. What appeals to him is that more negros than whites would be disfranchised and that the net result would be advantageous to the Democratic party. In other words the present open fraudulent practices have brought a storm of protest down upon the heads of the Democratic party managers. Therefore new and more respectable ways must be devised to accomplish the same result—i. e. keep Republicans from voting. Why cannot our Democratic friends approach this subject without calculating beforehand the net loss of Republican votes?

MARYLAND ELECTION LAW.

Representative Jackson of the first Maryland district has decided to contest the election held last month as the result of which his Democratic opponent, Thomas A. Smith, claims success. The grounds of the contest, according to reports, are:

"That the Democrats' latest election law, prepared and put through the legislature by the Gorman machine, was passed for the purpoee of disfranchising voters of the Republican party who were constitutionally qualified to vote. He contends that the extra session election law and the act of 1904, amending that law, are both unconstitutional, in that they are contrary to the provisions of the state constitution, and says that even if these laws are not invalid, the election officials, who were partisans of Smith, abused the powers conferred on them with the intent and to the extent of unfairly and unlawfully preventing the casting or the counting for Jackson the ballots of upwards of two thousand legally qualified and registered voters. Mr. Jackson further arraigns the Democratic election officials, charging that the votes of 887 duly qualified registered voters, who properly marked the ballots for him, were not counted for him."

In taking this step Mr. Jackson is performing a public service. The recent juggling with the suffrage in Maryland has been outrageous. It has had none other than a partisan object, and it has forwarded none other than partisan ends. The law which Mr. Gorman and his friends multilated was one of the best that had ever been on the Maryland statute books. Under it, when properly administered, the sentiment of the people had been, and could at any time be, fairly ascertained. The Democracy had scored repeatedly by its provisions and there was no reason whatever for any change in it so far as square dealing at the polls was concerned.

After the national election of 1893 the Democratic bosses found themselves discredited and shorn of much of their power in the state. The machine had failed to throw the state to Mr. Bryan, and Lloyd Lowndes was in office at Annapolis. Thousands of the best Democrats in Maryland had voted for McKinley, and were openly rejoicing in the Republican national success. As these men were not to be dragooned by the bosses, it was necessary if power was to be regained for the bosses to manipulate the suffrage in some way. Then followed under the humbugging cry of purifying the electorate, the schemes of disfranchisement and trick ballots, which have brought the elections in Maryland to their present disreputable basis.

Although the story has been told several times, the country generally is not familiar with it. As the next Congress is to take up the subject of the suffrage as affected by the high jinks that have been cut with the election laws in a number of the states in the name of an improved and intelligent electorate, the work of Mr. Gorman and his friends in Maryland should be presented in detail and in all of its unblushing partisanship and fairness. In some particulars "It takes the cake," as showing an unusual capacity for borrowing the lingo and forms of government to serve the devil in.—Washington Star.

WE must now write it 1905. May the New Year bring to all our readers happiness and prosperity. Should adversity or trial be your lot, may you have the sweet spirit of patience. Life is filled with sunshine and shadow. Pursue happiness and it is never reached. Do your duty to your God and to your fellows and be self-sacrificing and you will find your cup of joy running over.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mrs. Annie Kemp, of Frostburg, was a guest of relatives on Monday.

Messrs. Howard Brydon and Dorsey Pattison, students at St. John's College, Annapolis, and Miss Florence Howard of St. Mary's College, spent the holidays at home.

A very pretty home wedding occurred at 1 o'clock last Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 28th, at the bride's home at this place, when Miss Adah, daughter of the late Samuel Harshbarger, was joined in wedlock to Mr. James Green, of Baltimore. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Milsen Thomas, of the M. E. church, Mount Savage. Only a few immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties were present. After the ceremony a sumptuous wedding dinner was served, when the happy couple were conveyed to Piedmont and boarded No. 46 for Baltimore, their future home. The bride is a charming and refined young lady. Her connection with the public school system of Garrett as a teacher, has been marked by great ability and success. She was a great favorite among her associates and popular wherever known. The groom is also popular, well known and highly respected by this entire community. He is employed in the clerical department of the Wabash R. R. Co. in Baltimore.

Rev. J. O. Price, of the M. E. church, Swanton, accompanied by his wife, was a guest of his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Price, New Year's Day. While here he baptized his little granddaughter, only a few weeks old, Leona Margaret Price.

Born, unto Mr. and Mrs. West, living at Oss' Mill on the morning of Jan. 3rd, a fine large baby girl.

Rev. Howard is quite ill and has been confined to his bed for the past week or ten days.

Mr. Vernon Ours, of Cass, W. Va., and Miss Norah Fazenbaker, daughter of Mr. James Fazenbaker, of Hampshire Hill were married during the holidays.

Mrs. Missouri Notts, aged 40 years, died at the Hoffman hospital, Keyser, last Saturday evening. Mrs. Notts lived at Savage and has been sick for the past three weeks, and was taken to the hospital on Friday morning in expectation of an operation should her condition warrant it. She became rapidly worse and died suddenly. Her remains were buried in the Bloomington cemetery on Tuesday afternoon. She leaves a husband and 10 children.

Rev. H. H. Kight, of Piedmont, and Mr. N. M. Bond, of Bond, were holiday callers on friends on New Year's day.

Mr. Harvey Matthews, of the clerical department of the P. & L. E. R.R. Co. headquarters at Brownsville, Pa., spent Christmas with his mother, Mrs. Sallie Matthews, and attended the wedding of his aunt, Miss Adah Harshbarger.

Mr. Joseph Harvey will move this week to Seldom Seen, the house he vacates to be occupied by Mr. "Hol" Lanham, and the latter's place to be converted into a saloon to be opened on next Saturday morning by Freeland Tibbets. So the long-looked-for and much-talked-about license has at last been granted and saloon No. 2 is about to be a fact.

The remains of Mr. James L. Luke, manager and part owner of the extensive paper factory at Luke, who died at his home at the above named place from a severe attack of pneumonia, were taken to Wilmington, Del., on train No. 4 Wednesday morning for burial. The corpse and funeral party occupied two special coaches on the train. It is reported that Mr. Will Luke, present manager of the Davis plant, will succeed his brother in the management of the works at Luke.

Consumption

Salt pork is a famous old-fashioned remedy for consumption. "Eat plenty of pork," was the advice to the consumptive 50 and 100 years ago.

Salt pork is good if a man can stomach it. The idea behind it is that fat is the food the consumptive needs most.

Scott's Emulsion is the modern method of feeding fat to the consumptive. Pork is too rough for sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion is the most refined of fats, especially prepared for easy digestion.

Feeding him fat in this way, which is often the only way, is half the battle, but Scott's Emulsion does more than that. There is something about the combination of cod liver oil and hypophosphites in Scott's Emulsion that puts new life into the weak parts and has a special action on the diseased lungs.

A sample will be sent free upon request.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

HOYES.

School opened Tuesday, after one week's vacation, which we hope both teacher and pupils enjoyed and begin the New Year with renewed energy.

This community was saddened last Saturday evening by the news of the sudden death of Mr. Jeremiah Enlow, better known as "Uncle Jerry" Enlow, living near here. He was feeling well as usual until the morning previous to his death, when he arose suffering with neuralgia but later in the day was able to be out at his work.

When returning to the house in the evening he fell near the door unconscious. His wife and brother carried him in the house but before anyone could be summoned life was extinct.

The funeral took place Tuesday at 2 p. m. at Sang Run, and was largely attended. Our sympathy is with the bereaved, ones.

The Y. F. S. took advantage of the Holidays by having two socials in one week. Wednesday evening they were entertained at the home of Alvin Lowdermilk and Friday evening Misses Olia and Bernadette Mattingly entertained quite a number of their friends. Both evenings were spent very pleasantly.

Miss Florence DeWitt and Brother Porter of near Deer Park, spent several days the past week with relatives at this place, returning to their home Sunday afternoon.

Quite a number of persons from this neighborhood attended the funeral of Mrs. Aaron Boyer, at Accident, last Sunday morning.

NEW YEAR'S DAY SPRING-LIKE

Warmest First Day Experienced in this Section.

Sunday was the warmest New Year's Day ever experienced in this section of the country, or least so it is said by some of the "oldest inhabitants."

The winter of 1889-1890 was mild in comparison with later years. On New Year's Day of that year the buds on the lilac bushes were all but bursting, but many warm days prior to that had been experienced which brought out the buds.

The maximum temperature Sunday was in the neighborhood of 64 degrees, which was reached also on Monday, but that night a drop in the mercury took place bringing on snow which covered the ground to a depth of about two inches Tuesday morning.

JAMES L. LUKE DEAD

Member Of Wealthy Paper-Making Firm Victim of Pneumonia.

James L. Luke, of the Luke Brothers, millionaire paper manufacturers operating at Luke and at Covington, Va., died Monday morning after an illness of two weeks, from pneumonia. He was manager of the firm and about 40 years old. He leaves a family

The Lukes came from Delaware, and made a small start. Now they have one of the largest book paper-making plants in the world, furnishing many leading magazines. Recently improvements costing three-quarters of a million were made at the Luke mill. They own thousands of acres of timber. Mr. Luke was active in Republican politics.

THE OLD SUBSCRIBER.

God bless the old subscriber! We mean the old stand by who takes the home paper year after year through evil as well as through good report, and pays his subscription regularly just the same as he would any other honest debt. As a general thing the old subscriber is patient and slow of wrath. He will overlook many little slights from the editor—slights which the man who borrows his reading would not stand for a minute. If one of his calves gets its leg broken and the fact isn't memtioned in the next issue, he doesn't seem to feel the slight the least, or if half a dozen hens die with cholera morbus and the editor doesn't set out a $2 ad. in order to make room to herald the news to a waiting world, he just worries right along as though he hasn't been mistreated at all. He is always jolly—never fails to ask "how's tricks" when he drops into the office, says a word of praise for the paper upon taking his departure. We love him, and we sometimes slight him in order to give space to some saphead who isn't worthy to buckle his shoes, it is because we know that he is so broad-minded that he will never mind.—Exchange.

PIPE ORGAN RECITAL

Was Given in St. Paul's Church Last Saturday Evening.

The organ recital advertised to take place in St. Paul's M. E. church on last Friday evening was postponed until the following evening owing to the non-arrival of the organist who missed his train connection at Cumberland and consequently did not arrive until after eleven o'clock. It was deemed expedient to postpone the recital until the following evening when it took place.

Mr. Earl Byron Byers, of Allegany, was the organist, and was assisted by the following soloists: Dr. J. G. Robinson, Mr. Earl Townshend, and Mrs. C. F. Schroeder, of Grafton, W. Va. Long before the hour set for the beginning the large auditorium of the handsome church which has recently been overhauled and furnished with a new steam heating apparatus, was filled with the cultured citizens of Oakland who came to witness the recital which was to complete the one thing necessary to make this one of the handsomest and best equipped temples of worship in the State.

Great things were anticipated from the renowned organist and to say that he more than captivated his audience and held them almost breathless would be no exaggeration. Many critics pronounced the program to be one of the finest they ever had the pleasure of listening to. His technic was perfect and the combination and tones produced by his skill were marvelous which stamps him as one of the leading organists of the country. It would be almost useless to try and single out which of the numbers given by the master was the choicest, but it might be well to enumerate several which were especially brilliant and pleasing.

The Andantino by Lemare was very fine, bringing out all of the strong points of the organ, showing its quality of tone and power, which was beautifully executed and brought forth great applause. The next selection worthy of special mention was the Spring Song in which was used with remarkable skill the imitation of the warbling of birds. The Vesper Hymn by Buck was most beautifully given wherein a reproduction of the chimes was distinctly audible. One could almost imagine they were listening to the beautiful hymn produced by the chimes themselves so skillful was the selected rendered. It was received with marked appreciation and applause. But by far the best was reserved for the last—Tocatta by Grison. This selection fairly beamed with the beautiful music and the way it was rendered was simply perfect. The Flute Harmonic effect was marvelous and so great and continued was the applause that the performer was compelled to render an encore. So much for the instrumental section.

The third piece on the programme was a solo by Mr. Earl Townshend, a young and gifted musician of, Oakland, who is now attending the University at Morgantown. He sang "The Shadow of the Cross" by Borri in a masterly manner, his tone being pure, clear and beautiful, showing that he has good control and handles his selections perfectly.

The last piece of the first part of the programme was a duet entitled "I Waited for the Lord" by Mendelssohn. This was splendidly rendered the blending of the high tenor of Dr. Robinson with the full round baritone of Mr. Townshend being very fine and elicited much applause.

A solo, the first piece of the second part, being rendered by Mrs. C. F. Schroeder, of Grafton who has so many admiring friends in Oakland that her presence is always enjoyed. She sang "Day of Days" by Ashford, a solo for high soprano and as her clear, beautiful and full tones would soar to the lofty notes every one was captivated by the brilliancy, power and grandeur with which she rendered this most beautiful selection and many were the compliments showered on her as well as applause when it was concluded. May she come back to our city soon again, where she is a welcome visitor.

The next solo was entitled "Fear not ye, O Israel," by Buck and rendered by Dr. J. G. Robinson. It is needless to say the singer simply outdid himself. He has a beautiful voice of rare tone and the beautiful tone and effect he gave his piece was of the first rank. He was the recipient of marked applause.

This closed one of the rarest treats to music lovers ever given Oakland. Many of the audience were heard to remark that they hoped it would not be the last.

This organ is one of the sweetest and yet most powerful for its size that we have ever had the pleasure of listening to and it is made by the most skillful workmen of the very best material and has all the latest improvements.

We congratulate St. Paul's church for having this magnificent instrument and also the city and we would invite everyone to come and hear this beautiful organ which will be used at all the church services.

OAKLAND TO HAVE NEW CITY BUILDING

Location Has Been Selected and Committee Appointed to Buy Land.

WILL BE CONVENIENTLY LOCATED.

Mr. Samuel Ferguson Appointed Weighmaster, thus Relieving Policeman of that Duty—Other Matters.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Town Council held Monday evening of this week there was present all members of that body with Councilman A. G. Ross, president of the Council, presiding. Mayor McComas and Clerk John C. Dunham were also present.

After reading the usual bills for the preceding month and ordering them paid other matters were taken up.

A bill was presented by ex-Policeman Broderick for $67 less certain credits, purporting to be for extra services rendered the town while he was in its employ, was refused payment by Council at this time and was filed.

The position of Weighmaster was tendered Mr. Samuel Furgeson, who accepted it, thus relieving the policeman of that duty who has for several months filled the dual offices of policeman and weighman.

An order was passed appointing three members of the Council to confer with Mr. George W. Legge concerning the purchase from him of a triangular piece of land lying at the intersection of First and Liberty streets which is proposed to be utilized for the site for a new and more commodious council chamber and town lock-up. The plans for the building have not yet been determined upon nor will they be drawn until the site is secured, but it is contemplated by the town officials should it be possible to secure the land to erect a two-story structure of sufficient dimensions to meet with the requirements of the public service. The present structure, while comparing very favorably with the county jail, has for many years been wholly inadequate for public purposes.

A number of important questions were discussed by the Council, among them being the feasibility of draining the "dead" pond and thus lessening the liability of persons residing in properties adjacent to it contracting diseases which are liable to have their origin in stagnant water.

The improvement of streets and sidewalks in various sections of the town was also discussed but nothing definite was done.

An order was issued to liquidate one of the thousand dollar bonds which becomes due this month and also to pay the semi-annual interest on outstanding bonds.

COMPLIMENTARY TO PROF. M'BEE.

Prof. Waitman Barbe, of Morgantown Says Something Nice About One of Oakland's Educators.

In the current issue of the West Virginia School Journal, published at Morgantown, West Va., by Prof. Thomas C. Miller, State Superintendent of Public Instruction in West Virginia, and Prof. Waitman Barbe, one of leading educators of that state, the latter of whom paid a visit to Oakland recently and who visited the public school while here, says the following concerning Prof. McBee and his method of teaching:

"A teacher and a pupil fond of each other, both fond of the subject being studied, the teacher leading the pupil on until both teacher and pupil were glowing with interest and inspiration—this is an example of genuine teaching. The teacher in this case was Mr. Frank McBee, principal at Oakland, Md., the pupil was a bright and handsome lad in the high school, and the subject a construction in geometry. To be privileged to observe such a scene was a delight."

The pupil referred to was Master Philip Peddicord, son of Mr. and Mrs. James C. Peddicord.

MET THE CONSTABLE

Man Charged With Larency Arrested By Telephone.

Wm. L. Atkinson, of Frostburg's vicinity, was arrested by Constable Owen England Friday on a warrant charging him with stealing turkeys and chickens in Garrett county.

The constable called up Atkinson by telephone and told him he had a warrant for him and to meet him at the 8 o'clock car. When the car arrived the prisoner was there and Mr. England brought him to jail. Through Attorney Watson Atkinson applied for writ of habeas corpus and asked to be released on the ground that the warrant was defective Judge Henderson heard the case and passed an order directing the sheriff to take the prisoner before a magistrate and have him dealt with according to law.—Cumberland Times.

The Cinderella Of the Flat

By ZOE ANDERSON NORRIS

Copyright, 1905, by Zoe Anderson Norris

TOTO'S mother had hardly gone on her shopping expedition when Jean Farley came from across the court, where he lived in the opposite flat.

"I'm just beginning my dishes," said Toto, stooping to put a saucer of milk under the table for the cat. "I'm awfully busy."

"Don't let me bother you," said Jean suavely, seating himself on the tubs and watching first the cat softly lapping the milk and then Toto, her plump arms bare to the elbow, deftly scraping the dishes and arranging them in neat rows of cups and saucers and plates. "I'll sit here a minute and keep you company."

But he sat there an hour.

"You must go now," insisted Toto at the end of that time, "and let me go to work."

He went reluctantly, returning again and again to remind her of this thing and of that.

"Don't forget, Toto," he told her at last, "to hang out the tea towel on the fire escape at 8 o'clock exactly. I'll be at my window then to wave you good night."

Left alone, Toto turned out the gas under the simmering teakettle and was about to pour the water in the pan when the bell rang. No, it wasn't the dumb waiter. It was the front door bell. And the dishes not yet washed!

She pretended not to hear. It rang again and again persistently; evidently a visitor determined not to be ignored. Toto took off her apron, rolled down her sleeves and went to the door.

A young man stood there, tall, broad shouldered and of a rich, fresh color indicative of a life in the country.

"I am Frank Daviess," he explained, handing her his card as if she were the maid, an error to which Toto had at last become reconciled. "My father was an old friend of Mr. Rawlins"—Toto's father. "He has given me a letter of introduction to him."

"DON'T LET ME BOTHER YOU."

A wheezing sound of difficult breathing disclosing the presence of Toto's father, a helpless victim to asthma, there was nothing for it but to usher the young man into the front room where he was and hand him the card, which Toto did.

He advanced in a brisk and unaffected way that had the effect of bringing a breeze from the west into the atmosphere of the stuffy and crowded flat.

Toto left the two together and went back to her dishes. She hummed a tune as she poured the hot water into the pan and soused a bit of soap about to get up the proper suds. She was not a melancholy Cinderella. Her three sisters, expert stenographers, worked hard downtown to support the family. She therefore uncomplainingly accepted their left over finery, washed the dishes and mopped up the floors. Cheerfully and with little merry tunes she performed, for the privilege of living, arduous labor for which in the family of a stranger she would have received good pay.

She had washed a cup and saucer and wiped them when a footstep came down the hall, and the face of the stranger looked in at the door. It was followed by the length of him.

"Your father said I might come and talk to you," he explained. "I think he got tired of me."

Toto placed him a chair.

"I can't stop my dishes," she smiled, "but I can talk to you while I wash them just the same. Don't step on the cat."

Daviess vaulted out of the way of the cat.

"I won't sit down," he declared, "while you stand. Let me help you with the dishes. I often help my sisters at home. They do the work most of the time. You can't get a girl in a western town for love or money—that is, one that will stay. Whose apron is this? Tie it around me. There! That's a little too tight. Now, we'll have this dishwashing over and done with before you can say Jack Robinson."

"It isn't just the dishes," objected Toto ruefully. "There are a thousand other things to be done."

"Never mind," encouraged he. "I will help do them."

This was how it happened that her work was finished in a manner so expeditious that when the dishes were put away in the tall closet in the dining room, the floor swept and the chairs dusted Toto found time to sit down by the window, with Frank opposite, and talk to him awhile of the things that interested her most before it was time to begin the work of getting supper.

They were trivial things, things of little import, for Toto had been too busy since she could remember washing the dishes and cleaning the flat to learn much of anything else. She had not read books, as her sisters had done, or gone deep into the history of things other than the making of beds and the dusting of the furniture, but her talk so interested the young man from the west that he begged permission to call on the following afternoon and help with the dishes again.

"What sort of looking young man was he?" asked Marion, the eldest sister, when the trio came home hungry for the supper that Toto had cooked for them.

"Tall, handsome, with blue eyes and light hair," answered Toto, issuing from the kitchen with the last steaming dish for the table.

"A fine young man," put in her father between long and difficult breaths. "His father made money in real estate out there in the west. From what I can understand he is rich."

The three girls exchanged glances. Then Marion got up and looked in the glass.

"I don't know," she murmured, "whether it is the best plan, after all, to study stenography and peg out one's life in a downtown office. Toto stays right here in the kitchen and catches all the beaus."

"She has too many," muttered her father, who wheezed in the parlor the livelong day and consequently knew. "There's that Jean Farley, an artist with no prospects, no money. He's here all the time. He comes in so quietly I believe he climbs up the fire escape."

Marion was still absorbed in contemplation of her features.

"I'm thirty-two," she remembered. "If I get much older they'll be looking out for a younger stenographer."

Sadie observed her critically.

"You've lost one tooth," she commented. "If you lose another I see your finish."

Marion turned sharply upon her.

"You are neither so beautiful," she snapped, "nor so young as you used to be"—

"Children!" corrected the mother. "Sit down and be quiet. It's a fortunate thing you are away from home all day or there 'd be no living with you."

"For that matter," panted the father, "the only one of you who is not past her first youth is Toto, and she is not beautiful."

The mother came to the rescue of her Cinderella of the flat.

"But she has winning ways," she asserted, "and that is half the battle."

Toto tossed her a grateful glance as she circled the table passing the cups of tea.

"I suppose," brooded Marion, "that while we are working our finger ends off pounding typewriters Toto will snap up this prince from the west and marry him."

"It's the way of all Cinderellas," the mother nodded, for in spite of the fact that she owed her bread and butter to the three stenographers it was the youngest born who remained with her close to the radiator that she loved best of all.

"And we three," finished Marion moodily, "will pound typewriters till the end of time and die at the desk."

"You can't all be dishwashers," reasoned the mother, "or take the chunks of ice from the dumb waiter to put them in the refrigerator or answer the ring of the milkman when he comes so much earlier in the morning than you want him to come."

"But one of us might stay at home now and then on a week's leave, say, and answer the doorbell when western princes come wooing," said Frances, the youngest and prettiest of the three.

"I WILL HELP DO THEM."

Sadie tucked back a curl.

"If he saw one of us," she suggested, "we might cut Toto out."

The mother shook her head.

"I'm not sure," she demurred. "Toto isn't so beautiful, but she has winning ways. Besides, the kitchen becomes her."

For a month and a day the young prince from the west helped Toto with her dishes. Then he suddenly shook the dust of the flat from his feet, and it knew him no more.

The family had risen from a silent supper table, at which Toto humbly, with an air of apology, had served. They marched single file—the hall was too narrow to do otherwise—into the front room, where they presently sat in solemn conclave.

"I never heard anything equal to it!" stormed Marion, with a toss of an indignant head.

"Nor I!" chimed in Sadie.

"If I could only have had a week's vacation," commented Frances, "all might have been different. A young man, rich and handsome! It's incomprehensible!"

"She's a little idiot!" wheezed the father from his chair in the corner. "She should have been made to see her duty and to do it."

"Many a girl has married for the sake of her family!" cried Marion. "What if she didn't love him? Do we work morning, noon and night for love of it? No. But we work just the same. Father is right. She should have been made to see her duty and to do it."

"NEVER MIND, DEAR," SHE WHISPERED.

They looked around for the approval of the mother, but she was not to be seen. She had crept back to the kitchen, where Toto stood washing the dishes alone, tears dripping slowly one by one into the dish pan.

She put her arms around her.

"Never mind, dear," she whispered. "You were right to refuse him if you didn't love him. But love might have come."

Toto shook her head.

"No," she sobbed quietly, "it couldn't have come; never!"

The mother took out her handkerchief and wiped away the tears.

"Why, sweet?" she asked.

"It's Jean that I love," the girl made answer brokenly. "He asked me to marry him a long while ago, and I promised him I would."

Saved by His Manners.

The superintendent of the National Zoological park at Washington tells of an amusing act of apparent politeness on the part of a monkey that had a most peculiar effect upon a dog belonging to the superintendent.

The official in question says that one day while he was walking down Pennsylvania avenue, accompanied by his favorite fox terrier, an Italian street piano player with a trained monkey pulled up at a cross street and began to play.

The monkey was attired in the regulation jacket and cap and seemed to be an unusually bright little fellow. While the man was grinding out the music the monkey hopped down from the piano where he had been sitting.

This was enough for the fox terrier. He immediately made a dash for the monkey, which awaited the onslaught with such equanimity that the dog halted within a few feet of him, evidently to reconsider. Both animals gazed long and steadily at each other; then, with a sudden movement, the monkey raised his paw and gracefully saluted the enemy by raising his cap.

The effect was magical. The dog's head and tail dropped, and he retired in confusion.

General Lee and Reconstruction.

General Robert E. Lee's most significant utterance after the war is given in "Recollections and Letters of General Robert E. Lee," by his son, Captain R. E. Lee. The general said:

"I believe it to be the duty of every one to unite in the restoration of the country and the re-establishment of peace and harmony. These considerations governed me in the counsels I gave to others and induced me on the 13th of June to make application to be included in the terms of the amnesty proclamation."

Again he said:

"I have thought from the time of the cessation of hostilities that silence and patience on the part of the south was the true course, and I think so still. Controversy of all kinds will, in my opinion, only serve to continue excitement and passion and will prevent the public mind from the acknowledgment and acceptance of the truth. These considerations have kept me from replying to accusations made against myself and induced me to recommend the same course to others. As regards the treatment of the Andersonville prisoners, to which you allude, I know nothing and can say nothing of my own knowledge."

Fans in the Time of the Pharaohs.

Fans were used by the pharaohs as standards in battle. They appear on the tombstones of Thebes, and Terence, the dramatist, who lived in the second century B. C., makes one of his characters say, "Take this fan and give her thus a little air." Fans have played their part in political history. In 1827 the dey of Algiers in an altercation with the French consul struck him with a fan which he carried. The circumstance was reported to Charles X., his sovereign, and the result was an expedition to Africa, the end of which was the deposition of the dey and the annexation of Algiers and its adjacent territory as a colony of France.

Sympathy, Conversation and—Society

By Mrs. FRANK LESLIE

SYMPATHY is undoubtedly one of the most sweetly expressive words in our language. What is conversation—of the true, ideal, delightful kind—if not an interchange of sympathies through the medium of tactful AND WELL CHOSEN words? Through it manners are expressed and the most intimate qualities as well as defects of the heart transpire. It is the most important social accomplishment. From a merely selfish point of view it is a sine qua non of WORLDLY success, and the really successful conversationists are those who talk not to please themselves, BUT THEIR LISTENERS.

To polite society conversation is what atmospheric air is to the animal and plant life of the world. In it we live, move and have our being; without it we should languish, disintegrate AND DIE. Like the air, it is susceptible of sudden and rapid changes in temperature, being successively hot and cold, heavy and exhilarating, stifling and stuffy, or at certain elevations TOO RAREFIED FOR COMFORT. Under its propitious smile the individual character bourgeons and blooms forth in most advantageous manifestation, but let the wind change AND THE SKIES CLOUD OVER and the same human sensitive plant shrivels up into silent insignificance.

There is a fanciful theory as ancient as Plato and as modern as Dr. Holmes which supposes our spirits susceptible to certain influences mutually diffused, after the manner of streams or currents, by persons visibly or audibly in each other's presence, into the air around, acting, in the case of sensitive natures, LIKE POTENT MATERIAL ESSENCES. Have you never yourself felt the influence of something like this peculiar spell? I am sure I have, and the conclusion to be drawn from the experience is, it seems to me, that the real art of conversation, in so far as it is an art to be studied and acquired, consists in making an apt start—in pressing the right button, so to speak, and so turning on the PARTICULAR current which is to congenially pervade the circle.

Making allowance for the superficial differences due chiefly to racial temperament which characterize respectively English and American, Teutonic and Latin peoples, it is safe to say that the FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES of conversation hold good UNIVERSALLY. If your conversational manner has proved effective in New York it will not fail in San Francisco or St. Petersburg or on board the ocean steamer in the course of your trip around the world.

IN ALL THESE PLACES YOU WILL FIND THE SAME SOCIAL TRAITS UPON WHICH TO PLAY AND, ALAS, THE SAME OBSTACLES TO ENCOUNTER.

Men's Breakdown Often Caused by the Abuse of the Eyes

By Dr. CHALMERS PRENTICE of the Illinois Optical Society

MEN come from the farm to the city and break down BECAUSE OF THE STRAIN UPON THEIR EYES. In the country their eyes are accustomed to long distances. They go on until middle age without confining themselves to an office. Then suddenly they come to a city. After that their eyes must be used in work that is confining.

The result is that THEY BREAK DOWN PREMATURELY. People wonder what caused it. They are right when they attribute it to the sudden change in the mode of life. But it is the unusual test upon the eyes that causes the snap.

Men who break down and die of heart disease and apoplexy are often the victims of their own shortsightedness. They have not treated the eyes properly. The test is too severe.

THE EYES RESPOND BY UNDERMINING THE INTEGRITY OF THE BRAIN. A BREAKDOWN, ACCOMPANIED BY A FATAL STROKE OF APOPLEXY, IS THE PENALTY.

Foreign Appreciation Of America

By President HARPER of Chicago University

MORE distinguished foreigners have visited the United States this year than ever before, and I attribute the fact to A GREATER INTEREST IN AMERICA which prevails abroad, not only because of the recognition of the country's greatness, but because of a dawning conviction that individuals over here really MUST AMOUNT TO SOMETHING. What we want is a sort of mingling of peoples in order that there shall be a general broadening of view. This is what makes me think that world's fairs are beneficial. ANYTHING is good which will get a man out of his own country.

I WISH SOME AMERICAN OF BROAD IMPULSES WOULD DO FOR EUROPE WHAT CECIL RHODES HAS DONE FOR AMERICA IN THE ESTABLISHMENT OF SCHOLARSHIPS.

America and the Zionist Movement

By ISRAEL ZANGWILL

JEWISH charity in America is the most generous AND BEST ORGANIZED in the world. But how can the United Hebrew Charities of New York cope with an immigration of 89,442 Hebrews in a year, 64,662 of whom REMAIN IN NEW YORK CITY?

The American stands morally AT THE HEAD of the Zionist movement. Our suffering brethren are beginning to turn to America, not merely as of old, for a place of refuge, but as a center of political force for the solution of the Hebrew question.

WHEN THE UNITED STATES WERE FORMING, A HEBREW STATE MIGHT HAVE BEEN AMONG THEM. NOW IT IS PROBABLY TOO LATE.

The Land of Didn't-Mean-To.

I CAN'T see why it is that when I do Things which I didn't mean to—when I break
My sister's arm or throw a snowball through
A window pane or tear my clo's or make
My parents mad some other way
They won't believe me when I say
I didn't mean to.

In school, when I upset my ink or hold
My pencil so when some one turns their face
They'll get a punch beside the nose, I'm told
That I'm a little savage and disgrace.
And when school's out I have to stay—
They don't believe me when I say
I didn't mean to.

Once when I got pa's razor out and tried
To shave my brother and cut through his ear,
And there was blood all over and he cried,
They hammered me to death—or pretty near!
They never even stopped that day
To let me have a chance to say
I didn't mean to.

Last night, when I upset the lamp because
I'd clum up on the table and it tipped,
I hardly could remember where I was
When pa got through with me! Wish he'd get whipped
The way he laid it on, some day,
Before he had a chance to say
He didn't mean to.

I hope that when I'm dead and get my wings
And go to be an angel in the sky
They'll not jump on a boy for doin' things
He didn't know would happen. When I die
I don't care where I go if they
Will stop and listen when you say
You didn't mean to.

Rogers has a small grandson, of whom he is very fond. The boy one day last week espied in a toy shop a savings bank in the form of a rooster gayly painted in yellow and red. He asked for and obtained from his grandfather the coveted toy. Before dropping his pennies in the slot made to receive them in the back of the toy he examined it critically and inquired:

"Do the pennies go straight into the rooster's stomach?"

His nurse replied, "I think they do."

Willie had a lively remembrance of an inadvertent spoonful of ice cream which he had once swallowed too hastily. A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind. So he said:

"They're so cold! I'll warm them first before I drop them in." Which he proceeded to do. His grandfather upon hearing of the boy's solicitude for the comfort of the rooster was highly amused and said to him:

Final Attack on Fort Fisher

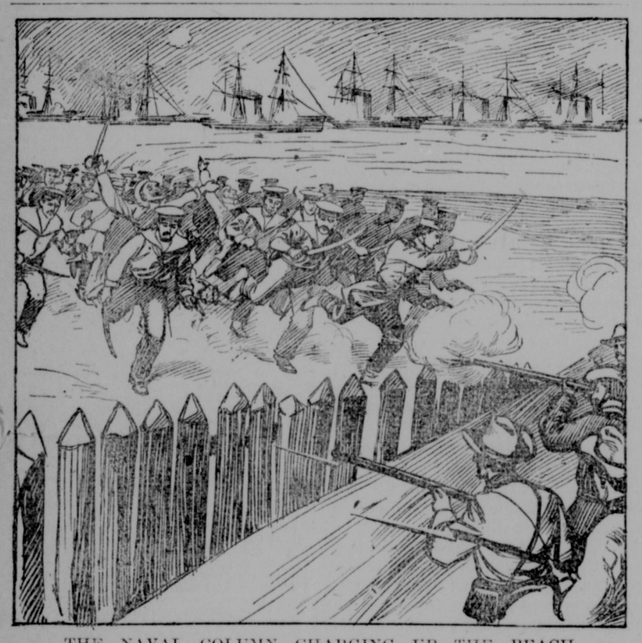
A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

January 15, 1865

[Copyright, 1905, by G. L. Kilmer.]

FORT FISHER, N. C., the most powerful earthwork in the Confederacy, was carried by a bold assault on Jan. 15, 1865, after a heavy naval bombardment. The Federal transport fleet sailed from Fortress Monroe Jan. 6. The force was led by Major General Alfred H. Terry and numbered 8,000 men. Terry's orders were sealed and were to be opened when he was out at sea. His destination was not known to any one in the army or navy, except those who had to know it. Terry himself was ignorant of it until he broke the seals of his instructions out at sea. In these instructions he was told to communicate freely with Admiral D. D. Porter, commander of the fleet which was to cooperate in the attack, and seek to have entire harmony between the army and navy in the expedition.

Porter had a total of forty-eight vessels, which he formed in three lines, with a reserve. During the night they anchored off Fort Fisher, and on the morning of the 13th the New Ironsides ran up to within 1,000 yards. Some of the ironclads reached as near as 700 yards and got into position under a heavy fire. The landing of Terry's men was covered by several vessels not engaged in the bombardment. The troops went ashore on the seabeach about five miles above the fort and between it and the intrenched camps of General Bragg's Confederate army of Wilmington. By 2 o'clock p. m. the Federal troops and stores were safely landed, and General Paine's colored division pushed forward to Cape Fear river, the other side of the peninsula. Here a line of defenses was begun in order to repel any advance of the Confederates from Wilmington. It was seen that the fire from the navy was doing much damage, and an assault was determined upon for the afternoon of the 15th. Terry was to send in three brigades in columns of a brigade front to storm the land side, while 2,000 sailors and marines should assail the works on the sea side.



THE NAVAL COLUMN CHARGING UP THE BEACH.

The Confederate garrison of the fort numbered 1,500 men. General Whiting, Confederate commander of the department of North Carolina, had entered the fort from Wilmington on the 13th, after the hostile armada and troops appeared, and had told the commandant, Colonel Lamb, that he and his command were to be left to their fate, for General Bragg was looking for a position to which to retreat and would not aid in defending the fortress.

The preparations for assault were discovered in the fort, and an attempt was made to confuse the Federal columns by firing grape, but the storms of shot that swept the works from navy guns cut down the Confederates' cannoneers at an appalling rate, and it was evident that the danger could only be averted by hand to hand struggles on the walls. At 3 o'clock promptly the signal for assault was given by the noise of more than fifty steam whistles of Porter's fleet, and the land column sprang forward to the charge.

General N. M. Curtis' brigade had the lead in the charging line and pushed forward to the northwest bastion, near the river. The Confederates were seen to man the parapets the moment the naval fire ceased, which was done to allow the Federal troops to move up. Colonel Lamb judged by the soul stirring whistles that the hour had come, and he desired to receive the assailants on his torpedoes as soon as they reached the walls. Leaving instructions with the commander of the northwest front, he went to the angle of the works where the naval column had been sighted, fearing that that was the vital point. The sailors had landed successfully and halted beyond rifle range under cover of the sand hills that formed the surface of the beach. The men were in one long line and made a formidable show, deceiving the enemy into the belief that this was the main assault and dividing his garrison. At the signal the sailors moved down the beach, sheltered by a line of sand hills, and then turned squarely upon the fort. But the batteries farther down the Confederate line could sweep the stretch of beach, which at that point was nearly half a mile wide, and the muskets in the fort did terrible execution. Three cannon in the fort poured canister into the assailants, and both General Whiting and Colonel Lamb stood on the parapet cheering the men at their work. The foremost body of sailors was nearly annihilated. The present commander of the north Atlantic squadron, Admiral Robley D. Evans, was an ensign at the head of sixty-four men. He was wounded four times, and all but ten of his followers were killed or wounded.

The sailors were unaccustomed to land maneuvers and very soon showed the seriousness of this defect. Their officers, among them the gallant Lieutenant W. B. Cushing, rallied and led them as well as possible, but the forward columns halted under the walls of the fort, lying down to escape the fire from above, and the rear columns on closing up did the same. The delay thus caused was fatal. The Confederates were cheered by the sight of a sort of panic that had seized these novices in war and turned away to receive the land column, which was announced to be close at hand by the sharp musketry and the booming of grape shotted guns on the north front. Simultaneously Whiting and Lamb saw in that direction three of General Curtis' battleflags on the ramparts adjoining the northwest bastion.

Curtis' advance had not been without difficulty. At places the hollows in the sand were filled with water, and this had to be waded through, at some points waist deep. The fire from the fort was scattering, but when the palisades were reached they could not be scaled and had to be cut away. When Curtis' flags crowned the breastworks the division commander, General Ames, who was up at the front, immediately ordered Colonel Pennypacker's brigade to his support, for the first success was no more than a lodgment. The stronghold was in the shot proof chambers, where every foot of ground could be disputed, and to the defense of them the Confederates rallied. General Whiting, moving down the line from right to left, had led some men to the first chamber, held by Curtis, and succeeded in recovering that and the adjoining parapets, although he received wounds that cost him his life.

Colonel Lamb had gone outside the parapets in order to get a view of the distant parts. He found the front covered with assailants and also discovered that his torpedo wires had been destroyed by the navy shots that had plowed the sand many feet deep, and these terrible weapons were useless. But the garrison was fighting bravely, and Lamb cheered them with the hope that the fort could be held until dark, when Bragg would come to their aid from Wilmington. His sharpshooters cut down all the Federal color bearers, and the hostile flags vanished from the outer walls. The traverses which intersected the parapets every few yards now became barricades, over which the combatants fought, often at arm's length.

The Federal naval column was out of the fight entirely, and the guns on the vessels kept up a steady fire along the sea face wall, where the sailors had been repulsed. Gradually taking a wider target, they poured their shots into the active Confederate batteries. This greatly demoralized the garrison, and the assault was rapidly pushed by the remainder of General Ames' division. Some of the sailors on leaving the ground where they charged on the sea face had gone north into the works of the land column. Here they were formed into parties to defend the trenches against a rear attack on Ames, and all of the troops of the army were sent down to the fort. A desperate struggle over the parapets and traverses was maintained until 10 o'clock at night, the Confederates making a heroic defense until overpowered. The concluding features of this remarkable fight will be described in a succeeding article.

Doninthorne's Model

By A. M. DAVIES OGDEN

Copyright, 1904, by A. M. Davies Ogden

It was varnishing day, and Piccadilly was crowded with the throngs pouring into Burlington House. All smart London was there. Gay chat, bright costumes, the latest gossip, everything rather than the pictures, held the attention of those present. So at least it seemed to a slender girl with a clear cut, attractive face who strolled slowly from picture to picture, lingering to study one here and there, promising herself to come again when there were fewer people.

Then suddenly a little cry escaped her parted lips. Was it possible? She was back in Llandudno again. There was the Irish sea dancing in the sunlight, the green curve of the Great Orme, and surely—surely that figure in white, gazing with shaded eyes out across the water, was herself. Bending closer, she gazed eagerly at the picture. Yes, the face was hers. To a casual passerby perhaps the likeness might not be striking, but to her—the pose, the dress—everything spoke eloquently. How could it have happened? Hurriedly consulting her catalogue, she found the picture. "Hope" it was called, and the artist's name Ralph Lawrence Doninthorne. She knew no one of that name.

SHE STARED AT THE PICTURE.

Slipping into a seat near by, she stared at the picture. Was she really like that? A voice from behind caught her attention.

"It certainly was a great piece of luck to have it accepted. No, I don't know the model's name. I saw her last summer and painted the picture largely from memory. I could never find out who she was and never dared speak. I think I would be bolder now. And somehow I have the feeling that she lives in London."

His friend laughed.

"You expect to meet her in the street, then? And what would you do—just go up and ask her to dine?"

"Perhaps," retorted the artist seriously. The girl, half rising from her seat, hastily pulled off her gloves and drew a ring from her finger, then, after a moment's hesitation, replaced it and turned. The artist was standing alone, his friend having strolled to another part of the room. She lifted tranquil eyes.

"I will accept your kind invitation to dinner with pleasure," she said distinctly. The man, his face flushing, sprang forward.

"You?" he stammered. "You?"

"But we will have to go at once, for I must not be out late," she went on calmly. With an effort the man pulled himself together.

"I am indeed honored," he said, with a bend of his head.

As in a dream he led the way from the building, the girl talking unconcernedly as though it were the most natural thing in the world, and it was not until they were seated at a little table overlooking the busy Strand that he dared draw a long breath. Would she vanish away? The girl leaned back and looked at him.

"And will you please tell me why you did it," she asked—"why you painted my picture in the first place and why you exhibited it in the second?"

His face clouded.

"I hope you are not vexed. But I could not help painting it. To me last summer you seemed the very spirit and incarnation of youth and joyousness. And then, in fear and trembling, I sent it in, hoping, fearing, longing, that through it and somehow I might find a clew, a trace. Judge, then, of my joy when it was accepted. And was I not right?" he cried triumphantly. "Are we not here—together?"

The girl was again slowly pulling off her gloves; his eyes, following her movements, fell upon her left third finger, with its single diamond. The girl nodded.

"Yes," she said, "it's an engagement ring, but because I was interested in the picture I came. It is not likely that we shall ever meet again, so for tonight let us be friends. Tell me all about yourself, your ambitions, your plans," watching him with bright, sympathetic eyes. "I will be glad to listen."

Doninthorne sighed.

"There is not much to tell. I have worked and studied and succeeded a bit, as you see, and now I have managed to get to London. Since the finishing of the portrait I have been toiling over studies for the competition under Sir Anthony Frewell. This morning I was most keen about it; now"— his gaze again resting upon her ring. The girl's eyes widened.

"Sir Anthony Frewell! You mean the president of the academy?"

"Yes. I am asked to a big reception there tomorrow night, but I doubt if I go. I am not much in the society line. Now I have told you all. Will you not in return give me some knowledge of yourself?" he begged. The girl hesitated.

"I—I am a very unimportant person. I am sort of a companion—yes, companion—to an elderly gentleman, and—and I do not know when I shall be married," glancing at the ring. "It is because the gentleman is dining out that I am free tonight. So do let us enjoy it. Ah, here comes our dinner. You will have soup?"

The long English twilight was still lingering when the two issued from the restaurant. The artist, at her request for a hansom, drew his breath sharply.

"And am I really never to see you again?" he demanded. The girl lifted uncertain eyes.

"Is it not best?" she asked. And after a moment he answered to their mute appeal.

"You are right. It is best," he said steadily. The girl's face cleared.

"And—and you will go on and work, make yourself famous," she insisted. "Attend Sir Anthony Frewell's reception tomorrow night."

"If you wish it. And now goodby. Give the man your own address. I will not listen. And if ever I do accomplish anything remember that it is first of all due to you. Goodby."

As Doninthorne next evening entered Sir Anthony Frewell's house the blaze of lights and sounds of music fairly dazzled him. At the announcement of his name the "R. A." shook him warmly by the hand.

"I am glad to meet you," exclaimed the great man cordially. "Your work shows remarkable promise, and I think it likely—yes, very likely—that yours may be the prize design in our competition. My little daughter tells me that she has already met you," he continued. "She is not 'out' yet, but begged so hard to be allowed down tonight that I finally consented. You know, these motherless girls usually have their own way," with a smile.

But the artist hardly heard. He was watching a girl, the back of whose head looked oddly familiar. As if conscious of his gaze, she turned, then came slowly forward. Sir Anthony patted her hand.

"This is my madcap, and she does not deserve to be here after the naughty way in which she ran off from poor Miss Finch yesterday."

The girl, her mouth curling mischievously, glanced up at the artist.

"I certainly played truant," she admitted. "Come, Mr. Doninthorne, can I not present you to some of these pretty girls?"

Doninthorne, doggedly persistent, drew her into the conservatory.

"Why—why did you do it?" he demanded. Miss Frewell laughed.

"Because I pleased and because—I knew you all the time and—and wanted to see if I would like you."

"And you decided"—coming dangerously close. The girl's breath quickened.

"I—I haven't decided yet," she responded lamely. Doninthorne, touching the now ringless hand only half concealed by its lace mitt, gazed inquiringly.

"And this?"

She had the grace to flush.

"That was my chaperon. It is an engagement ring, my mother's, which I always wear, though not always on that hand."

Doninthorne's clasp tightened.

"Ah, and when you have decided about me, when the success that seems about to be achieved shall have definitely crowned my work, may I, dare I, hope that you will wear another ring—mine?" He was holding both hands now unrebuked and bent lower to catch her answer. "May I put one on the proper finger, dear?" The girl, her lashes fluttering, dropped her head.

"Perhaps some day," she whispered.

Dining With John Adams.

In the year 1818 Henry Bradshaw Fearson, an Englishman, dined with John Adams, second president of the United States, at the Boston home of the fine old statesman, then eighty-four years old. The Sunday dinner was as follows: First course, a pudding made of Indian corn, molasses and butter; second, veal, bacon, neck of mutton, potatoes, cabbages, carrots and Indian beans; madeira wine, of which each drank two glasses. "We sat down to dinner at 1 o'clock. At 2 nearly all went a second time to church. For tea we had pound cake, sweet bread and butter and bread made of Indian corn and rye. Tea was brought from the kitchen and handed round by a neat white servant girl." Fearson says further, "The establishment of this political patriarch consists of a house two stories high, containing, I believe, eight rooms, of two men and three maid servants, three horses and a plain carriage."

An Ancient Irish Custom.

In the district known as "the barony of Forth," in County Wexford, Ireland, is to be found a race of hardworking, industrious peasants, living in thatched cottages with clean, whitewashed walls, which by their perfect whiteness at once arrest the attention of the visitor. These people differ in many respects from the inhabitants of the other parts of the same county and have habits and customs peculiar to themselves. When a funeral takes place two wooden crosses are provided. On the way to the cemetery a halt is made at a certain spot by the side of the road. Here prayers are said for the deceased, after which one cross is deposited in a hawthorn bush or under it. The procession then goes on its way, and after the interment the other cross is fixed at the head of the grave. This strange custom dates from time immemorial, as the great pile of crosses by the roadside indicates.

SOME REASONS WHY PEOPLE ARE SETTLING IN MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA.

Because it is the best country known to the man of moderate means.
Because you will find a country of rich soil awaiting the settler.
Because there are uplands, prarieland, and alluvial river bottoms.
Because you can be certain of profitable returns from whatever you put into the soil.
Because the winter does not consume what the summer produces.
Because there are more and better opportunities for deversified farming than elsewhere.
Because the seasons are regular and no fear of crop failure.
Because the country is never scourged by cyclones and devastating storms and blizzards.
Because everything grown elsewhere can be produced here more abundantly.
Because truck farming is a success; products being early on the market obtain high prices.
Because no better fruit country is known, oranges, plums, peaches, pears, apples, grapes, strawberries, figs, pecans and other fully maturing.
Because there are more chances for profitable investment of capital than elsewhere in this country.
Because for healthfulness this section is unequalled on the face of the globe.
Because you have no long winter months to encounter, with no excessive dry heat in summer.
Because the climate is more uniform than elsewhere, no extremes of heat or cold.
Because you will find the as orderly communities as anywhere on this continent.
Because you will find the most open-hearted people on the globe.
Because education is paramount; public schools and churches of every denomiuation are to be found in all communities.
Because the railroad facilities of this section are unexcelled, a double tracked railroad traversing the entire length of both states.
Because really good lands are yet cheap.
Because the geographical location of these states gives them the best markets in the United States.

We secure land for home-seekers or for colonies. Write to-day for full particulars and letters from Northern farmers already located in the South.

THE JAPANESE ARE SUCCESSFUL AT LAST

General Stossel Asked Terms of His Persistant Adversary.

COMMISSIONERS ARE NOW MEFTING

Telegrams Which Passed Between the General in Command of Opposing Force—Garrison to Have the Honors of War.

Port Auther has fallen. Commissioners are now in session to agree on the terms of surrender. The offer to capitulate was received from General Stoessel on Sunday afternoon. It was at once communicated to the emperor and he gave orders to accept the surrender and to extend the honors of war to the garrison and its brave commander. The news of the capitulation was received in the following special:

Tokio, Jan. 2.—Port Arthur has fallen after eleven months of heroic defense on the part of the Russians under General Stoessel and persistent and equally heroic siege on the part of the Japanese under General Nogi. The task has been accomplished. But at what an awful cost.

Thousands of the little brown men have met death and are now sleeping on the slopes bought with their life's blood.

Chain after chain of forts have been taken at the cost of hundreds of lives. The thin ranks have pressed on in spite of reverses and the terrible toll exacted by death. Others have thrown themselves into the gaping lines, which with unwavering courage and devotion have pressed on, to do or die for their beloved Mikado.

So it has gone until the clutch of the besiegers has become so firmly fixed that to continue to expose his men to the siege would be murder pure and simple on the part of the interpid Stoessel.

Yesterday he made his offer to his brave conquerer. The dispatch of General Nogi to his lord is a brief, but eloquent statement, such as might have been expected of a man of his commanding ability and bravery.

His telegraph to the Mikado is as follows:

"At 5 o'clock on January 1, the enemy sent a deputation under a flag of truce with a letter offering to capitulate. It is as follows: 'I find that the positions now held by you render needless any further resistance on my part and wish to open negotiations with you with reference to capitulation. I wish you to appoint commissioners to agree upon the terms after a conference with similar commissioners from myself. Please designate a place and time for this meeting. Accept my assurance of profound respect.

'STOESSEL.'"

To this proposition General Nogi agreed. He at once appointed his commissioners and designated noon today as the time for the meeting. The Japanese will be magnanimous in their hour of victory. General Nogi has answered General Stoessel as follows:

"When I respectfully informed his majesty of your offer he commanded me to compliment you and your brave garrison on the wonderful defense you have made. He bade me to accord to you all the honors of war in your capitulation.

"NOGI."

During the past few weeks the plight of the garrison has been pitiable. The 40,000 men in the fortress at the beginning of the siege has been reduced to but 5000 fit for duty. The rest are either killed, wounded or sick.

Tokio has been the scene of jubilation since the news was received this morning. The streets have been filled with thousands of people who have been shouting and rejoicing over the success which has met their arms. There is an undercurrent of sadness on account of the vast number of relatives and friends who have sacrificed their lives for their country, but the religio-patriotism of the country has overwhelmed and subdued this feeling until it has no outward expression.

The news that the Russian forces at Port Arthur have been reduced to such a strait that at last the heroic commander has been forced to propose surrender, follow upon a month of reverses. The siege began almost with the first gun in the war, now nearly eleven months ago, and when perhaps the greatest stronghold in the world was garrisoned by 40,000 Russians soldiers, supported by a formidable squadron of modern battleships, cruisers and torpedo boats.

These warships have been destroyed or dispersed until but a few torpedo boats remain in the harbor. The garrison, at latest accounts, had been reduced to about 15,000 men.

On December 4, 203 Metre Hill was captured by the Jepanese after a severe fight, in which the loss on both sides was enormous. It was from this time that the death blows were dealt.

On December 19 the East Kekwan fort was taked by the Japanese, affording them another advantageous position from which to assail. Mining and sapping were important factors in the capture of this position, as they were also in the fall of the Rihlung fort on December 29.

All those achievements served to isolate Liaotie fort, destined to be "the last ditch" of the defenders.

On December 31 Sungshu mountain fell into the hands of the besiegers, and only a few hours later the H fort, another strong position, was captured.

The report that the non-combatants of Port Arthur had been accorded asylum behind Liaotie mountain may have been an indication that the Japanese commander foresaw that the surrender of the Russians within a very brief time was assured.

Jeremiah H. Enlow.

The death of Jeremiah H. Enlow, of Sang Run, occurred very suddenly at his home on last Saturday, the cause being heart failure. Mr. Enlow was seventy-two years of age and all his lifetime was a resident of Garrett county. He leaves besides his wife two daughters, Mrs. John Bowman and Mrs. Hilleary Johnson, and one son, Mr. Rufus Enlow.

The following tribute to the memory of this most excellent man has been contributed to these columns:

Oakland, Md., Jan. 2, 1905.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Just now my sense of friendship and kindly feeling is chilled by the sad intelligence of the sudden and unexpected death of a true and esteemed friend and a lifelong neighbor, Jeremiah H. Enlow, of Sang Run.

From childhood it has been my fortune to be personally acquainted, and often intimately associated with Mr. Enlow. As a neighbor he was faultless, as a citizen he was honest and reliable; as a christian his life was an exemplary one, and as a host in his modest and unpretentious little home he was agreeable and entertaining.

He had a sweet and naturally a charmingly voice and in his kindness often sang, for the entertainment of his friends, many of the old old songs. My favorite and one which he often sang for me when I was a boy, and during the year of our more intimate associations, was, "Twenty Years Ago" many many times, in his home and in ours, he sang this old song at my request. These kind acts, his sweet voice and the charms of music may to some extent account for our unbroken friendship.

Not long ago in conversation with an uncle of mine he enquired of my whereabouts and said that if he ever met me again he would volunteer to sing for me once more "Twenty Years Ago." Very recently I met him in the road near my home.

He said to me "Ed, I've promised myself that if I ever met you again I was going to sing for you your old favorite."

Turning his horse a little in the road, clearing his throat and with myself, the trees and the shining beams of the moon (for it was after night) as his audience he sang seemingly, more sweetly than before.

Scarcely had he uttered the last note, when he again turned his horse saying "Ed, I am so glad I met you Good-by," and rode away in the darkness. Mr. Enlow lived to the ripe old age of about 72 years. He was always bright and cheerful. His absence in the community will be truly lamented by the many friends that followed his remains to the grave with the submissive wish that

Bright be the place of thy soul:
No lovlier spirit than thine
E'er burst from its mortal control
In the orbits of the blessed to shine.

E. A. B.

Cyrus H. Shreve.

Died, at his home near Deer Park, on December 5th, at 2.10 A. M., after an illness of less than one week, Mr Cyrus H. Shreve, aged 64 years. Deceased leaves a devoted and loving wife, and two children, a son Mr. Walter Scott Shreve and a daughter, the wife of George P. Marley, to mourn the loss of a kind husband and a loving father.

Mr. Shreve was a veteran of the Civil war and was a member of Co. G. and C. of the 23rd Illinois Vol. Infantry, and was honorably discharged at the close of that terrible strife. After spending some time in the west he returned to his native home in Pendleton county, W. Va., in 1866 where he married and in 1882 removed to this county and purchased a farm of Hon. Henry. G. Davis, where he resided until his death.

The writer has known this kind friend for twenty two years, and can truthfully say he was a kind neighbor and a most hospitable man to the poor and no one was ever turned from his door hungry.

The funeral services were conducted from the home by Rev. W. H. Faust and Rev. Robert A. Smith, of Texas.

The funeral will be preached later by Rev. W. H. Faust, the Baptist minister of this place.

All that was mortal of Cyrus H. Shreve was laid to rest in the Deer Park cemetery followed by a large number of relatives and friends. The pall bearers were S. Hinebaugh, John W. Ours, John W. Landes, M. V. Flanigan, William Mumaw and W. D. Hoye.

To the bereaved ones we extend our heartfelt sympathy in this the saddest hour of their earthly experience and trust they may look to a Higher Power for consolation. We close by saying: "Peace to his ashes."

A. FRIEND

Mrs. Aaron Boyer.

Of peritonitis, at Accident, on Dec. 30, 1904, Mrs. Phoebe Catharine Hinebaugh Boyer, aged 59 years, 7 months and 26 days. Her maiden name was Hinebaugh, a sister of Daniel Hinebaugh of near Oakland, and was married to Aaron Boyer March 24th, 1863.

To this union were born twelve children. Four preceded the mother to the spirit land. Of the eight children living six were present at the funeral services, the three daughters and the three younger sons. The two older sons being in California could not reach home in time for funeral services.

Mrs. Boyer was born near Accident and lived there her whole life time. She was a faithful member of the Lutheran church for about forty-five years.

Mrs. Boyer was a lady whom to know was to admire, to love and highly esteem. So industrious, so cheerful, so full of sunshine, always carrying with her a smile—a smile which even death itself could not efface. She was a devoted companion, a kind and loving mother, a helpful neighbor and a true friend.

A very large concourse of people attended the funeral services, the pastor of St. Mark's Lutheran church of Oakland officiating.

Her remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Accident on New Year's day. A sorrowful New Year's day for the family, but we believe a very happy one for her. During her sickness she said: "This has been a sad Christmas to me but I hope to spend a happy New Year's day."

Solomon Tasker.

Solomon Tasker, aged about 67 years, died at Blaine, W. Va., on Saturday last, after an extended illness. He was a veteran of the war of the sixties and a pensioner. For a number of years Mr. Tasker's mind was at times affected, but aside from this he was an extremely well preserved man. His funeral took place on Monday, the interment being made in the Hamill cemetery at Blaine.

BITTINGER.

The good year 1905 began under most delightful weather conditions, cloudless skies from which the midwinter sun shone forth with a warmth in her smile seldom felt at this season. This we accept this glad bright New Year as a pleasant and refreshing oasis in the midst of dreary winter.

Mr. J. H. Warnick, of the Backwoods settlement, who has been man-of-all-work for Mr. C. E. Ellithorpe during the latter's illness, returned to his home last Sunday.

Mr. Jacob Gortner, of Gortner, Md., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Lohr this week.

County Commissioner Stephens and Mr. Thomas Broadwater were entertained last Sunday evening at the hospitable home of Mr. Thomas B. Wiley.

A small dog owned by neighbor Jonas Bittinger was with the rabies one day last week, and was promptly shot.

Miss Ruth Shoup arrived here from Fitzgerald, Ga., last Friday and will spend the winter here with her father, Rev. J. B. Shoup.

Mr. G. W. Engle, wife and daughters leave for Baltimore this week, where they will reside for the winter. Miss Shoup will have charge of Mr. Engle's store during their absence.

HUTTON

B. C. Scott and family are spending a week with friends in Fairmont.

Mrs. Clarence Bittinger, who has been on the sick list for a week or ten days, is well again.

Frank Swindler is carrying his arm in a sling the result of too severe work.

C. H. Siler is laid up with a very severe attack of rheumatism.

This town learned with sorrow of the death on Sunday at Terra Alta of Mrs. White, widow of the late Garrett White, who lived here for half a century.

Will Pendergast and B.& O. Agent Norris were in Rowlesburg Monday evening taking in the entertainment.

Lutheran Church Services.

In St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, Oakland, services will be held Sabbath morning and evening at the usual hours. Preparatory services will be held in the church Saturday evening beginning at 7.30 o'clock. Communion on Sabbath morning.

DEER PARK JOTTINGS.

After a silence of some weeks in the closing events of 1904, we again resume our scribbling in the new year of 1905, and hope that nothing may happen in the days and weeks of this year to mar the pleasure of our citizens as the weeks and months pass by, and that the future may be as bright to our young folks as the past joyous season has been to the many that have been feasted and entertained by so many hospitable homes of this place, viz: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. W. Hennen gave a pleasant entertainment at their beautiful home and was followed by socials at the homes of Rev. and Mrs. Wm. H. Clary, Mayor and Mrs. E. F. Droege, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Thrasher, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Engle, Postmaster and Mrs. L. D. Thrasher, one for each night of the past week; and social good cheer was indulged in at all these pleasant homes.

Our young friend, Mr. Charles A. Jones, son of Merchant W. C. Jones, spent the Christmas holidays at home and returned to his school near Dayton, Ohio, on Monday last. We are always glad to meet this studious and model young man and bespeak for him a bright future, either in law or journalism, his future preference as a profession.

Mr. Howard C. Thrasher, a student of the Agricultural College at College Park, Maryland, spent his vacation the past Christmas week at the home of his father, Mr. F. H. Thrasher, and was the recipient of many congratulations for the flattering record he has made at this noted college.

We were glad to meet and greet our friend of years standing, Mr. W. B. Hutson, of near Sunnyside, who broke bread with us and tarried for the night on Tuesday last. The evening was spent recalling the good fellowship of the twenty-five or more years that we have known, and appreciated this cultured gentleman. We have so often been entertained at his and his good kind wife's at their hospital home in years of the past, that it is at all times a pleasure to meet this genial friend.

Miss Nellie Hoye, sister of Mrs. John Felty, Jr., of your city, is spending a few days at this place visiting relatives and friends, where she spent her girlhood days, being the youngest daughter of the late Samuel C. Hoye deceased.

Rev. Wm. H. Faust filled the Lutheran pulpit on Sunday last for Rev. E. Manges, who was called to Accident to hold the last sad rites over the remains of that grand christian lady, Mrs. Aaron Boyer, who died at her home near Accident. Mrs. Boyer was the youngest sister of the late William Hinebaugh and is remembered as much like her devoted brother, by her gentle and kindly courtesy to all friends who visited her at her sumtuous home. To the bereaved husband and family we extend sympathy in the loss of the most devoted friend they have in this world, but feel sure your loss is her eternal gain and that she is now reunited with that brother who was so devoted in this life.

A party of young friends of Prof. Bert Browning, drove down to Mr. Browning's father's, Mr. Thomas R. Browning's, on Friday last and were sumptuously entertained by Mr. and and Mrs. Browning and report a joyful, pleasant day and jolly outing.

Miss Lulu Marley, of this place, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Marley, is visiting her sister Miss Irza, at Wheeling, W. Va., and will be absent some weeks much to the regret of her many young friends and "Vimps" society of which she is a member.

Mr. Sebastian Hinebaugh, of near this place was unfortunate enough to loose a valuable horse a week ago by slipping on the ice during the heavy sleet, and was so badly injured that it died in a few hours. This horse cannot be replaced for less than $125 and we certainly feel grieved as it breaks a valuable team, and will be more keenly felt when spring work comes.

We are glad to report that our friend Mr. J. L. Wheeler is out again after a serious illness of some three weeks, but his faithful assistant on the R. F. D. route in the person of his son Gay attended to the duties of this position to the satisfaction of all patrons. This young man is one of the best young men of this town and bids fair to be a comfort to his good kind father and mother.

With greetings to the Editor for a prosperous year in his journalistic work, we are,

Fraternally,

MORE ANON.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Our public school opened again on Tuesday morning when all the teachers were present and a large attendance of pupils. Before the grades were sent out to their rooms Principal Culp gave a very appropriate address and then introduced the M. E. pastor, Rev. W. M. Lister, who also gave a short address. We somewhat pride ourselves on having one of the best graded and most efficiently managed schools in the county.

Miss Bessie Friend has returned to her duties as teacher in our school, having spent her holidays out of town.

Last Sunday was quarterly meeting day in the M. E. church, when Presiding Elder R. B. Ward preached both morning and evening. His sermons were finely illustrated and delivered in an eloquent manner.

Since the rains and melting of the snows we have plenty water in the river and other streams and wells.

Mr. John T. Dixon and Miss Bessie M. Riley were married at the M. E. parsonage on the evening of Dec. 31st, by their pastor Rev. W. M. Lister.

Mrs. Friend, the mother of Rev. D. A. Friend, has not been very well for some days past. She is 82 years old.

Miss Cora Fike, the daughter of Thomas Fike, was buried from her late home Dec. 28th. She was a good christian girl, twenty-two years old and had been a member of the M. E. church for a number of years. Services were held in the M. E. church in charge of her pastor who preached the sermon. Short addresses were made by Revs. Donikie and A. D. Friend. The body was intered in the family burying ground at Mill Run.

Mr. John Fearer, who has been sick for a long time, does not seem to get much better and his friends have but little hope for his recovery.

The services of the M. E. church next Sunday (the 8th) will be class meeting at 10.30 a. m.; Sabbath School at 2 o'clock; Epworth League meeting at 6.30 and preaching by the pastor at 7 o'clock.

Mrs. A. D. Friend was a caller at the M. E. parsonage on Monday.

Another snow storm visited us last Tuesday, the first since the big snow melted.

A bulletin board will soon be placed at the M. E. church announcing the regular church services.

Mr. Orvil Welch gave a very interesting talk on the Sunday school lesson in the M. E. church last Sunday.

Mrs. Frazee led a very successful Epworth League service last Sunday evening.

Mr. D. S. Custer and Clarence Guard attended the meeting of the directors of the Garrett County Telephone Company held at Hoyes last Monday. They meet again on Saturday, Jan. 14th.

The Denver Express.

No play has been produced in years that possesses the numerous elements of success contained in the Denver Express, opening among the snow capped hills of Colorado, among the Indians and outlaws it then takes the audience to Hiram Garvey's home in the rude mountain hut, then to Lord Tynemouth's beautiful country place near Frisco, leaving which you follow the last flying Denver Express to the union depot at Denver, then to the Palace Hotel where the storm clouds that have so thickly shadowed the lives of the hero and heroine are swept away, the villian brought to justice, and all ends to the entire satisfaction of the audience. This great scenic play will be at the Oakland opera house on Wednesday evening next.

Board of County Commissioners In Session.

The Board of County Commissioners have been in session at the court house since Tuesday morning making appointments of road supervisors for the ensuing year, making settlements with the financial officers of the county and transacting routine business. The list of supervisors will be published in these columns next week.

THE JAPANESE ARE SUCCESSFUL AT LAST

General Stossel Asked Terms of His Persistant Adversary.

COMMISSIONERS ARE NOW MEFTING

Telegrams Which Passed Between the General in Command of Opposing Force—Garrison to Have the Honors of War.

Port Auther has fallen. Commissioners are now in session to agree on the terms of surrender. The offer to capitulate was received from General Stoessel on Sunday afternoon. It was at once communicated to the emperor and he gave orders to accept the surrender and to extend the honors of war to the garrison and its brave commander. The news of the capitulation was received in the following special:

Tokio, Jan. 2.—Port Arthur has fallen after eleven months of heroic defense on the part of the Russians under General Stoessel and persistent and equally heroic siege on the part of the Japanese under General Nogi. The task has been accomplished. But at what an awful cost.

Thousands of the little brown men have met death and are now sleeping on the slopes bought with their life's blood.

Chain after chain of forts have been taken at the cost of hundreds of lives. The thin ranks have pressed on in spite of reverses and the terrible toll exacted by death. Others have thrown themselves into the gaping lines, which with unwavering courage and devotion have pressed on, to do or die for their beloved Mikado.

So it has gone until the clutch of the besiegers has become so firmly fixed that to continue to expose his men to the siege would be murder pure and simple on the part of the intrepid Stoessel.

Yesterday he made his offer to his brave conquerer. The dispatch of General Nogi to his lord is a brief, but eloquent statement, such as might have been expected of a man of his commanding ability and bravery.

His telegraph to the Mikado is as follows:

"At 5 o'clock on January 1, the enemy sent a deputation under a flag of truce with a letter offering to capitulate. It is as follows: 'I find that the positions now held by you render needless any further resistance on my part and wish to open negotiations with you with reference to capitulation. I wish you to appoint commissioners to agree upon the terms after a conference with similar commissioners from myself. Please designate a place and time for this meeting. Accept my assurance of profound respect.

'STOESSEL.'"

To this proposition General Nogi agreed. He at once appointed his commissioners and designated noon today as the time for the meeting. The Japanese will be magnanimous in their hour of victory. General Nogi has answered General Stoessel as follows:

"When I respectfully informed his majesty of your offer he commanded me to compliment you and your brave garrison on the wonderful defense you have made. He bade me to accord to you all the honors of war in your capitulation.

"NOGI."

During the past few weeks the plight of the garrison has been pitiable. The 40,000 men in the fortress at the beginning of the siege has been reduced to but 5000 fit for duty. The rest are either killed, wounded or sick.

Tokio has been the scene of jubilation since the news was received this morning. The streets have been filled with thousands of people who have been shouting and rejoicing over the success which has met their arms. There is an undercurrent of sadness on account of the vast number of relatives and friends who have sacrificed their lives for their country, but the religio-patriotism of the country has overwhelmed and subdued this feeling until it has no outward expression.

The news that the Russian forces at Port Arthur have been reduced to such a strait that at last the heroic commander has been forced to propose surrender, follow upon a month of reverses. The siege began almost with the first gun in the war, now nearly eleven months ago, and when perhaps the greatest stronghold in the world was garrisoned by 40,000 Russians soldiers, supported by a formidable squadron of modern battleships, cruisers and torpedo boats.

These warships have been destroyed or dispersed until but a few torpedo boats remain in the harbor. The garrison, at latest accounts, had been reduced to about 15,000 men.

On December 4, 203 Metre Hill was captured by the Jepanese after a severe fight, in which the loss on both sides was enormous. It was from this time that the death blows were dealt.

On December 19 the East Kekwan fort was taked by the Japanese, affording them another advantageous position from which to assail. Mining and sapping were important factors in the capture of this position, as they were also in the fall of the Rihlung fort on December 29.

All those achievements served to isolate Liaotie fort, destined to be "the last ditch" of the defenders.

On December 31 Sungshu mountain fell into the hands of the besiegers, and only a few hours later the H fort, another strong position, was captured.

The report that the non-combatants of Port Arthur had been accorded asylum behind Liaotie mountain may have been an indication that the Japanese commander foresaw that the surrender of the Russians within a very brief time was assured.

Jeremiah H. Enlow.

The death of Jeremiah H. Enlow, of Sang Run, occurred very suddenly at his home on last Saturday, the cause being heart failure. Mr. Enlow was seventy-two years of age and all his lifetime was a resident of Garrett county. He leaves besides his wife two daughters, Mrs. John Bowman and Mrs. Hilleary Johnson, and one son, Mr. Rufus Enlow.

The following tribute to the memory of this most excelient man has been contributed to these columns:

Oakland, Md., Jan. 2, 1905.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Just now my sense of friendship and kindly feeling is chilled by the sad intelligence of the sudden and unexpected death of a true and esteemed friend and a lifelong neighbor, Jeremiah H. Enlow, of Sang Run.

From childhood it has been my fortune to be personally acquainted, and often intimately associated with Mr. Enlow. As a neighbor he was faultless, as a citizen he was honest and reliable; as a christian his life was an exemplary one, and as a host in his modest and unpretentious little home he was agreeable and entertaining.

He had a sweet and naturally a charmingly voice and in his kindness often sang, for the entertainment of his friends, many of the old old songs. My favorite and one which he often sang for me when I was a boy, and during the year of our more intimate associations, was, "Twenty Years Ago" many many times, in his home and in ours, he sang this old song at my request. These kind acts, his sweet voice and the charms of music may to some extent account for our unbroken friendship.

Not long ago in conversation with an uncle of mine he enquired of my whereabouts and said that if he ever met me again he would volunteer to sing for me once more "Twenty Years Ago." Very recently I met him in the road near my home.

He said to me "Ed, I've promised myself that if I ever met you again I was going to sing for you your old favorite."

Turning his horse a little in the road, clearing his throat and with myself, the trees and the shining beams of the moon (for it was after night) as his audience he sang seemingly, more sweetly than before.

Scarcely had he uttered the last note, when he again turned his horse saying "Ed, I am so glad I met you Good-by," and rode away in the darkness. Mr. Enlow lived to the ripe old age of about 72 years. He was always bright and cheerful. His absence in the community will be truly lamented by the many friends that followed his remains to the grave with the submissive wish that

Bright be the place of thy soul:
No lovlier spirit than thine
E'er burst from its mortal control
In the orbits of the blessed to shine.

E. A. B.

Cyrus H. Shreve.

Died, at his home near Deer Park, on December 5th, at 2.10 A. M., after an illness of less than one week, Mr Cyrus H. Shreve, aged 64 years. Deceased leaves a devoted and loving wife, and two children, a son Mr. Walter Scott Shreve and a daughter, the wife of George P. Marley, to mourn the loss of a kind husband and a loving father.

Mr. Shreve was a veteran of the Civil war and was a member of Co. G. and C. of the 23rd Illinois Vol. Infantry, and was honorably discharged at the close of that terrible strife. After spending some time in the west he returned to his native home in Pendleton county, W. Va., in 1866 where he married and in 1882 removed to this county and purchased a farm of Hon. Henry. G. Davis, where he resided until his death.

The writer has known this kind friend for twenty two years, and can truthfully say he was a kind neighbor and a most hospitable man to the poor and no one was ever turned from his door hungry.

The funeral services were conducted from the home by Rev. W. H. Faust and Rev. Robert A. Smith, of Texas.

The funeral will be preached later by Rev. W. H. Faust, the Baptist minister of this place.

All that was mortal of Cyrus H. Shreve was laid to rest in the Deer Park cemetery followed by a large number of relatives and friends. The pall bearers were S. Hinebaugh, John W. Ours, John W. Landes, M. V. Flanigan, William Mumaw and W. D. Hoye.

To the bereaved ones we extend our heartfelt sympathy in this the saddest hour of their earthly experience and trust they may look to a Higher Power for consolation. We close by saying: "Peace to his ashes."

A. FRIEND

Mrs. Aaron Boyer.

Of peritonitis, at Accident, on Dec. 30, 1904, Mrs. Phoebe Catharine Hinebaugh Boyer, aged 59 years, 7 months and 26 days. Her maiden name was Hinebaugh, a sister of Daniel Hinebaugh of near Oakland, and was married to Aaron Boyer March 24th, 1863.

To this union were born twelve children. Four preceded the mother to the spirit land. Of the eight children living six were present at the funeral services, the three daughters and the three younger sons. The two older sons being in California could not reach home in time for funeral services.

Mrs. Boyer was born near Accident and lived there her whole life time. She was a faithful member of the Lutheran church for about forty-five years.

Mrs. Boyer was a lady whom to know was to admire, to love and highly esteem. So industrious, so cheerful, so full of sunshine, always carrying with her a smile—a smile which even death itself could not efface. She was a devoted companion, a kind and loving mother, a helpful neighbor and a true friend.

A very large concourse of people attended the funeral services, the pastor of St. Mark's Lutheran church of Oakland officiating.

Her remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Accident on New Year's day. A sorrowful New Year's day for the family, but we believe a very happy one for her. During her sickness she said: "This has been a sad Christmas to me but I hope to spend a happy New Year's day."

Solomon Tasker.

Solomon Tasker, aged about 67 years, died at Blaine, W. Va., on Saturday last, after an extended illness. He was a veteran of the war of the sixties and a pensioner. For a number of years Mr. Tasker's mind was at times affected, but aside from this he was an extremely well preserved man. His funeral took place on Monday, the interment being made in the Hamill cemetery at Blaine.

BITTINGER.

The good year 1905 began under most delightful weather conditions, cloudless skies from which the midwinter sun shone forth with a warmth in her smile seldom felt at this season. This we accept this glad bright New Year as a pleasant and refreshing oasis in the midst of dreary winter.

Mr. J. H. Warnick, of the Backwoods settlement, who has been man-of-all-work for Mr. C. E. Ellithorpe during the latter's illness, returned to his home last Sunday.

Mr. Jacob Gortner, of Gortner, Md., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Lohr this week.

County Commissioner Stephens and Mr. Thomas Broadwater were entertained last Sunday evening at the hospitable home of Mr. Thomas B. Wiley.

A small dog owned by neighbor Jonas Bittinger was with the rabies one day last week, and was promptly shot.

Miss Ruth Shoup arrived here from Fitzgerald, Ga., last Friday and will spend the winter here with her father, Rev. J. B. Shoup.

Mr. G. W. Engle, wife and daughters leave for Baltimore this week, where they will reside for the winter. Miss Shoup will have charge of Mr. Engle's store during their absence.

HUTTON

B. C. Scott and family are spending a week with friends in Fairmont.

Mrs. Clarence Bittinger, who has been on the sick list for a week or ten days, is well again.

Frank Swindler is carrying his arm in a sling the result of too severe work.

C. H. Siler is laid up with a very severe attack of rheumatism.

This town learned with sorrow of the death on Sunday at Terra Alta of Mrs. White, widow of the late Garrett White, who lived here for half a century.

Will Pendergast and B. & O. Agent Norris were in Rowlesburg Monday evening taking in the entertainment.

Lutheran Church Services.

In St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, Oakland, services will be held Sabbath morning and evening at the usual hours. Preparatory services will be held in the church Saturday evening beginning at 7.30 o'clock. Communion on Sabbath morning.

DEER PARK JOTTINGS.

After a silence of some weeks in the closing events of 1904, we again resume our scribbling in the new year of 1905, and hope that nothing may happen in the days and weeks of this year to mar the pleasure of our citizens as the weeks and months pass by, and that the future may be as bright to our young folks as the past joyous season has been to the many that have been feasted and entertained by so many hospitable homes of this place, viz: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. W. Hennen gave a pleasant entertainment at their beautiful home and was followed by socials at the homes of Rev. and Mrs. Wm. H. Clary, Mayor and Mrs. E. F. Droege, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Thrasher, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Engle, Postmaster and Mrs. L. D. Thrasher, one for each night of the past week; and social good cheer was indulged in at all these pleasant homes.

Our young friend, Mr. Charles A. Jones, son of Merchant W. C. Jones, spent the Christmas holidays at home and returned to his school near Dayton, Ohio, on Monday last. We are always glad to meet this studious and model young man and bespeak for him a bright future, either in law or journalism, his future preference as a profession.

Mr. Howard C. Thrasher, a student of the Agricultural College at College Park, Maryland, spent his vacation the past Christmas week at the home of his father, Mr. F. H. Thrasher, and was the recipient of many congratulations for the flattering record he has made at this noted college.

We were glad to meet and greet our friend of years standing, Mr. W. B. Hutson, of near Sunnyside, who broke bread with us and tarried for the night on Tuesday last. The evening was spent recalling the good fellowship of the twenty-five or more years that we have known, and appreciated this cultured gentleman. We have so often been entertained at his and his good kind wife's at their hospital home in years of the past, that it is at all times a pleasure to meet this genial friend.

Miss Nellie Hoye, sister of Mrs. John Felty, Jr., of your city, is spending a few days at this place visiting relatives and friends, where she spent her girlhood days, being the youngest daughter of the late Samuel C. Hoye deceased.

Rev. Wm. H. Faust filled the Lutheran pulpit on Sunday last for Rev. E. Manges, who was called to Accident to hold the last sad rites over the remains of that grand christian lady, Mrs. Aaron Boyer, who died at her home near Accident. Mrs. Boyer was the youngest sister of the late William Hinebaugh and is remembered as much like her devoted brother, by her gentle and kindly courtesy to all friends who visited her at her sumtuous home. To the bereaved husband and family we extend sympathy in the loss of the most devoted friend they have in this world, but feel sure your loss is her eternal gain and that she is now reunited with that brother who was so devoted in this life.

A party of young friends of Prof. Bert Browning, drove down to Mr. Browning's father's, Mr. Thomas R. Browning's, on Friday last and were sumptuously entertained by Mr. and and Mrs. Browning and report a joyful, pleasant day and jolly outing.

Miss Lulu Marley, of this place, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Marley, is visiting her sister Miss Irza, at Wheeling, W. Va., and will be absent some weeks much to the regret of her many young friends and "Vimps" society of which she is a member.

Mr. Sebastian Hinebaugh, of near this place was unfortunate enough to loose a valuable horse a week ago by slipping on the ice during the heavy sleet, and was so badly injured that it died in a few hours. This horse cannot be replaced for less than $125 and we certainly feel grieved as it breaks a valuable team, and will be more keenly felt when spring work comes.

We are glad to report that our friend Mr. J. L. Wheeler is out again after a serious illness of some three weeks, but his faithful assistant on the R. F. D. route in the person of his son Gay attended to the duties of this position to the satisfaction of all patrons. This young man is one of the best young men of this town and bids fair to be a comfort to his good kind father and mother.

With greetings to the Editor for a prosperous year in his journalistic work, we are,

Fraternally,

MORE ANON.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Our public school opened again on Tuesday morning when all the teachers were present and a large attendance of pupils. Before the grades were sent out to their rooms Principal Culp gave a very appropriate address and then introduced the M. E. pastor, Rev. W. M. Lister, who also gave a short address. We somewhat pride ourselves on having one of the best graded and most efficiently managed schools in the county.

Miss Bessie Friend has returned to her duties as teacher in our school, having spent her holidays out of town.

Last Sunday was quarterly meeting day in the M. E. church, when Presiding Elder R. B. Ward preached both morning and evening. His sermons were finely illustrated and delivered in an eloquent manner.

Since the rains and melting of the snows we have plenty water in the river and other streams and wells.

Mr. John T. Dixon and Miss Bessie M. Riley were married at the M. E. parsonage on the evening of Dec. 31st, by their pastor Rev. W. M. Lister.

Mrs. Friend, the mother of Rev. D. A. Friend, has not been very well for some days past. She is 82 years old.

Miss Cora Fike, the daughter of Thomas Fike, was buried from her late home Dec. 28th. She was a good christian girl, twenty-two years old and had been a member of the M. E. church for a number of years. Services were held in the M. E. church in charge of her pastor who preached the sermon. Short addresses were made by Revs. Donikie and A. D. Friend. The body was intered in the family burying ground at Mill Run.

Mr. John Fearer, who has been sick for a long time, does not seem to get much better and his friends have but little hope for his recovery.

The services of the M. E. church next Sunday (the 8th) will be class meeting at 10.30 a. m.; Sabbath School at 2 o'clock; Epworth League meeting at 6.30 and preaching by the pastor at 7 o'clock.

Mrs. A. D. Friend was a caller at the M. E. parsonage on Monday.

Another snow storm visited us last Tuesday, the first since the big snow melted.

A bulletin board will soon be placed at the M. E. church announcing the regular church services.

Mr. Oryil Welch gave a very interesting talk on the Sunday school lesson in the M. E. church last Sunday.

Mrs. Frazee led a very successful Epworth League service last Sunday evening.

Mr. D. S. Custer and Clarence Guard attended the meeting of the directors of the Garrett County Telephone Company held at Hoyes last Monday. They meet again on Saturday, Jan. 14th.

The Denver Express.

No play has been produced in years that possesses the numerous elements of success contained in the Denver Express, opening among the snow capped hills of Colorado, among the Indians and outlaws it then takes the audience to Hiram Garvev's home in the rude mountain hut, then to Lord Tynemouth's beautiful country place near Frisco, leaving which you follow the last flying Denver Express to the union depot at Denver, then to the Palace Hotel where the storm clouds that have so thickly shadowed the lives of the hero and heroine are swept away, the villian brought to justice, and all ends to the entire satisfaction of the audience. This great scenic play will be at the Oakland opera house on Wednesday evening next.

Board of County Commissioners In Session.

The Board of County Commissioners have been in session at the court house since Tuesday morning making appointments of road supervisors for the ensuing year, making settlements with the financial officers of the county and transacting routine business. The list of supervisors will be published in these columns next week.

GARRETT COUNTY FARMERS' INSTITUTE

Will Be Held in the Court House Here On January 16th and 17th.

A VERY INTERESTING PROGRAM

For the Two Days Session Has Been Prepared by the Director Who Will Be Assisted by Men of National Reputation as Farmers.

Prof. William L. Amoss, Director of Farmers' Institutes for the State of Maryland, has forwarded to this office for publication a copy of theprogramfor the Farmers' Institute which will be held in the Court House in Oakland on Monday and Tuesday, January 16th and 17th. The sessions begin on Monday afternoon at 1.30 o'clock and last until four o'clock. On Tuesday the sessions will be held morning and afternoon, beginning at 10.30 and ending at 4 p. m. The morning sessions are more especially for breeders while the afternoon sessions are for everybody interested in agriculture. The admission will be free and a special invitation is extended to the ladies to be present.

The program will be as follows:

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

"Some Facts for the Farmer and Teacher," Dr. H. P. Miller.

"Care of the Flock," Edward Van Alstyne.

TUESDAY MORNING

"Some Common Ailments of our Animals and Their Treatment," Dr. H. P. Miller.

"Principles of Potato Growing," Edward Van Alstyne.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON

"Crops That Improve the Soil," Dr. H. P. Miller.

"Care of the Orchard," Edward Van Alstyne.

To meet popular demand the above program may be changed.

Evening lectures, if it should be deemed prudent to hold such, will be announced at the close of the afternoon sessions.

Many workers, both local and from a distance, whose names do not appear above, will read papers before the Institute, give their practical experiences and otherwise assist in demonstrating how the results of scientific research can be applied to everyday life.

Questions will be answered through the question box at the opening of each session.

In connection with the program aboye printed Director Amos in a letter to the editor, says:

"Herewith I hand you our Farmers' Institute program for your county. We regset very much this could not be sent to you before. Being in charge of the Agricultural Exhibit at St. Louis, for this State, your Director could not so divide his time as to make it possible to announce our meeting before the present date. It is our intention hereafter to give to the mountain counties the advantage of an increase in our annual appropriation, by Summer and Fall meetings, with quite an extension in methods, as well as in effort to meet demands from sections off of the railroads.

"We beg indulgence at this time, believing that by the delay in this season's opening the work of the Department has not suffered, as the men engaged are above the average in ability as Institute workers, and the meetings will be more than ever beneficial to those who can attend.

"The gentlemen who will attend your Institutes are all practical men and large operators.

"Mr. Edward Van Alstyne is a large fruit-grower (I saw him harvesting 2000 barrels of apples) as well as a dairyman, sheep and swine feeder.

"Dr. H. P. Miller is a practicing Veterinarian, a stock breeder, and editor of the Ohio North American Farmer.

"They will be assisted by men from our Horticultural Department, and every effort known to us willbe made to get the farmers to ask questions, that we may help them.

"We are sending to every patron who give his name and address, a card with the program. About 400 of these will go out in your county, direct to those who have attended before."

SUDDEN DEATH OF EX-GOV. LOWNDES.

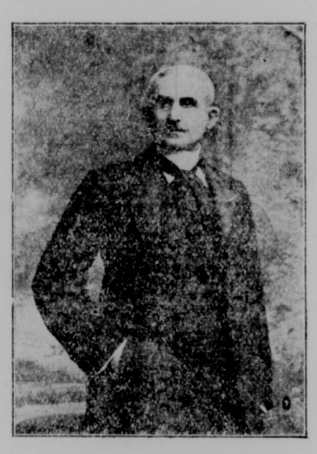
Distinguished Marylander Stricken With Appoplexy While Taking Bath Sunday Morning.

HIS DEMISE A SHOCK TO PEOPLE OF ENTIRE STATE

Was Descendant of Prominent Maryland Family ---Was Born in Clarksburg, West Virginia, and Has Been a Resident of Maryland Since the Year 1867.

The Angel of Death, whose visitation, so mercilessly unexpected as to have caused a most severe shock, not only to the community which had know and loved him best, but to the whole commonwealth of Maryland, whose destinies as it's chief executive he had once so ably and honestly directed, Sunday morning removed from his sphere of earthly usefulness, Hon. Lloyd Lowndes, an attack of apoplexy having precipitated transition from terrestrial trials to that realm of eternal joy.

No premonition came to the deceased of impending dissolution, and save the fact that for a few short hours he had incurred the discomfort of insomnia, there was naught else to indicate death's near approach. Gov. Lowndes retired about midnight, having spent the evening with his family and a few friends, including Miss Nelson, of Virginia, and Miss Ruth Gerstell, who were being entertained as guests of Gov. and Mrs. Lowndes. Throughout the evening Gov. Lowndes preserved his cheery manner and corteous hospitality and if he suffered in the slightest degree, he told not of it.



EX-GOV. LLOYD LOWNDES

Upon arising at nine o'clock Gov. Lowndes proceded to take his morning bath, and having concluded his ablutions, was being attended by his faithful servant, Brown, when without even a sigh, he fell prostrate and expired. Heroic efforts were made not only by the members of the family but by Drs. Johnson and Hawkins, who were hurriedly summoned, to bring about resuscitation, but the spark of life had fled. Such were the final moments of a progressive, successful, philanthropic Christian man, whose life stands out in bold relief in the history of Maryland.

Gov. Lowndes was a descendant of a distinguished Maryland family. Richard Lowndes, of Bostock House, Cheishire England, was his great-great-grandfather. His great grandfather, Christopher Lowndes came from England and was a successful merchant at Bladensburg before the National Capital was located at Washington.

Gov. Lowndes was born February 21, 1845, in Clarksburg, Harrison county, Virginia, and laid the foundation of his early education at the academy in his native town. In early life he developed those qualities of mind and character which gave him marked success at the bar, in politics, in business and in social life. When 16 years of age he entered Washington College at Washington, Pa., where he remained for two years. He finished his education Allegany College, Meadville, Pa., graduating with distinction in 1865, when only 20 years of age. As he had chosen the profession of law, he set about preparing himself for the bar. Richard L. Ashhurst, of Philadelphia, was his preceptor. While pursuing his legal studies with this distinguished lawyer he attended the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania, and graduated therefrom in 1867. He at once settled in Cumberland, Maryland, where his father had begun business. He married Elizabeth T. Lowndes. His force of character, energy, talents and probity won him almost immediate recognition and success. In the midst of a practice which almost immediately demanded a great part of his time, his ambition and tastes led him to the broader field of politics and statecraft.

Public affairs tending to the advancement of the community in which he lived secured his early and eager attention, and gained him opportunity for that distinction which he had since achieved.

In politics, as well as business life, he so on took a prominent part. He was a Republican of earnest convictions, and forcible and aggressive in their expression. In 1872 he was nominated for Congress, his district at that time being largely Democratic, with but a single Republican county in the district. So rapidly had he advanced in public favor that he carried the district by 1,700 majority against the Hon. John Ritchie, of Frederick county, who had carried it by over 1,500 majority two years before. A very spirited canvass followed Mr. Lowndes' nomination, and in his election he was the first to change its political complexion since the Hon. Francis Thomas had represented the district. His election was the reversal of 3,200 votes.

Mr. Lowndes was only 28 years of age when he entered the Forty-third Congress, and was its youngest member. He served on some of its most important committees during the sessions of that Congress. His courage in maintaining his convictions had a striking illustration in his vote upon the Civil Rights Bill. He lived in a district where there was a large colored constituency, who were directly affected by the bill, but believing the measure to be unconstitutional, which view was subsequently endorsed by the Supreme Court of the United States, he refused to give the measure the sanction of his vote. Out of the six Republicans who voted against the measure, he was the only one whose political fortunes it jeopardized.

He was delegate at-large to the Republican National convention at Chicago in 1889. In 1895 he was nominated by the Republican convention at Cambridge, Maryland, for governor, and was elected by the unprecedented plurality of 18,767, having received the united support of the Republicans of the state and thousands of independent Democrats.

In addition to his successful public life, he filled various positions of trust and honor in the business world. Since 1873 he had been president of the Second National Bank, of Cumberland, one of the largest financial institutions of Western Maryland. He was largely interested in the Black-Sheridan-Wilson Company, the Union Mining Company, the New York Mining Company, and the Mt. Savage Fire Brick Company. He was a director of the Cumberland and Elk Lick Coal Company. He was a member and vestryman of the Episcopal Church, from which he had frequently been a delegate to the Diocesan conventions, and no man in this section of the state had contributed more generously to public and private enterprises than Mr. Lowndes. His means were very large and were freely expended in developing the city of Cumberland and Allegany county. Besides his large financial, coal and manufacturing interests, he turned his attention somewhat to farming and owned and directed one of the most fertile estates in the county, upon which he raised the choicest breeds of cattle.

His course as governor was conservative and wise, and he gave to the state a clean and honest administration of its affairs, fulfilling in letter and spirit the pledges made to the people before election.

The deceased's immediate relatives consist of a wife, and the following children: Richard T. Lowndes, jr., merchant of Clarksburg, W. Va., and Lloyd Lowndes, jr., attorney, of Cumberland, these brothers being twins: W. Bladen Lowndes, superintendent of the Union Mining Company, Mt. Savage, of which his father was president: Maj. Charles T. Lowndes, who is at Colorado Springs for his health: Tasker Lowndes, a student of Yale, who is now at home, and one daughter, Miss Elizabeth Lloyd Lowndes.

LUTHERANS WILL REBUILD CHURCH

To Replace Structure Burned on Last Thursday Afternoon

SITE NOT YET DECIDED UPON.

A Number of Locations Are in View—Matter to be Settled at Congregational Meeting to Be Held Tuesday Evening.

Since the destruction by fire on last Thursday afternoon of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church the regular Sunday and week-day services have been conducted in the Garrett Memorial church which was kindly placed at the disposal of the Lutheran congregation by the Presbyterians who have been occupants of the Memorial church since it was built.

On Tuesday evening of this week at a meeting of the Lutheran congregation held in the above-named church official action was taken for the use of the edifice when it was unanimously decided to accept the courteous offer and hold the regular services therein until a new building can be erected.

At the meeting Tuesday evening it was also decided to rebuild. A number of locations are in view, among them being the Delawder lot adjoining the school house property, the McComas lot adjoining the Browning hotel on Second street, Bishop lot directly opposite the Egger lot at the corner of Oak and Fifth streets, any one for which will be ideal for the purpose.

The matter will be definitely determined, however, at another meeting of the congregation to be held on Tuesday evening of next week when bids for the purchase of the old church lot will be considered and reports of the committee appointed Tuesday night on a new site for the building will be received and acted upon.

An offer of $3000 has already been made for the original church lot which will probably be exceeded at the Tuesday evening meeting.

Lutheran Services at Deer Park.

Rev. E. Manges, the pastor, will preach in the Deer Park Lutheran church on Friday and Saturday evening of this week, followed on Sunday by preaching and communion at 11 o'clock a. m., preaching in the evening at 7.30 o'clock.

... OFFUTT'S ...

WE always strive to reduce all stocks to the minimum point just before inventory—and in furtherance of this object, therefore greatly reduced prices on all lines of goods throughout the entire store, for we well know nothing will so quickly convert merchandise into cash as decimated prices.

So, between this stock-taking movement and our sale now in progress the first days of the new year should be among "the big store's" most successful. At no time in our entire business career have we offered the buying public better opportunities for money saving on worthful merchandise for the person and home than at the present time.

A New Year's Story

By HOWARD FIELDING

Copyright, 1903, by Charles W. Hoolic

GORDON PALMER raised his glass and heartily wished me a happy new year. He was in excellent spirits. His kindly blue eyes were frank and bright and eager as a boy's. He seemed to see and cheerily to greet the coming year. Well, I saw it coming quite as plainly as he did, but it looked to me like the car of Juggernaut, and I was in a mood to lie down and let it run over me. I almost resented my friend's good wish. My ears twisted it into a bad joke, and, though nothing could have been more obvious than Palmer's sincerity, I returned him a bitter smile across the table.

"You really are down on your luck, aren't you?" said he.

"Why not?" said I. "Why should I welcome the new year? What did the last one do to me over there in England? My friend, I came home second class in a cheap boat, and you may be aware that my tastes are somewhat luxurious."

"Well," said he, "you lost your money. That's too bad. But think what fun you'll have making some more."

"I'm more likely to make a hole in the East river," I replied.

He regarded me for perhaps half a minute in silence, and I found it difficult to meet his eyes. I felt cowardly, envious and dishonest, the last because I wanted Palmer to give me a lift and was not open enough to ask him to do it. My glance shifted here and there in the room, and its quiet magnificence irritated me. We had it all to ourselves, for his father and mother were dining out that evening, and therefore Palmer himself seemed to be the more closely identified with this home of luxury.

"Billy," said he, waving his hand toward a door, "do you happen to know what's in that room?"

I shook my head.

"But you're not afraid of it?" he asked.

I perceived his meaning.

"If this room were full of terrors," said I, "I might infer that the other was no better."

"But this room is full of things to eat and drink," said he, "yet you don't infer that it's so with the other one."

"Oh, I'll admit that I'm more ready to fear than to hope, if that's what you're after," said I. "Yet," having seen a part of this house, I'd agree to pay $1,000, if I had it, for the contents of that unknown room, and I'd expect to make several hundred per cent."

He laughed with great enjoyment.

"You'd lose every penny," he said. "The room is absolutely bare. We had a bit of a fire there, and we've taken everything out and even ripped up a part of the floor. Now, Bill," he continued, "you might get just as badly stuck if you should buy my future and pay your own for it. Mine may be bare and yours may be furnished with every luxury."

"I guess not," said I.

"It's amazing what changes a year may make in a person's fortunes," said he. "And that reminds me to tell you a story. It's the sort of story that I think will do you the most good, for it shows what may happen. Anything may happen, Billy, and that's why Hamlet's words—the greatest line ever written—make the best possible toast for New Year's. 'The readiness is all,'" he added, raising his glass again.

"But here's my story," he continued. "It's absolutely true, of course. There was a girl who lived in a town in South Dakota. Her name was Sylvia Kendall. Her parents had been fairly well to do, but their fortunes gradually declined. The girl had managed to get a very good education, and she felt able to accomplish something in the world, but she hadn't much chance in her native town. Yet she couldn't get away, for she was necessary to her mother, who had become quite feeble. So the years slipped away, and the girl found mighty little happiness in them despite the fact that she has a [illegible]erfulness which amounts to [illegible]lent.

[illegible]he was nineteen she became [illegible]o a man who—well, I guess [illegible]e was a right nice fellow, but he would not be her choice today. You see, she developed wonderfully. Her mind reached up and out. If she outgrew this man that's not to say that he was dull. At the best he had not much chance, for his health failed, and he began to fight a losing battle with physical weakness. By and by the doctors told him that he must go to another climate, and he went to southern California. The engagement continued. There would have been a marriage but for the man's nobility of spirit, which would not accept the sacrifice.

"Yet, upon the other hand, Miss Kendall would not break the engagement, and so she remained bound to him, and they were thousands of miles apart, and the years drifted away. Twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four—I tell you, those birthdays meant something to Sylvia Kendall. All her glorious youth was ebbing away; her beauty was wasted; her toil and self denial seemed to benefit nobody, for it is very hard to give one's youth and beauty and strength to those one loves and yet to see them ever less hopeful and happy.

"That was what Miss Kendall had to bear, and I judge she bore it well, yet not without the mark. In her twenty-fifth year her mother, her father and that poor fellow out in California died, and I think it must have been a release for them all, and not a thing to grieve for. Yet, of course, it left her dreadfully alone, because the incessant labor of the home had held her to the narrowest sort of life, and her love had been the sorriest tragedy.

"To cap the climax, unexpected debts against her father's estate appeared and swallowed up her home and everything upon which she might have depended for a new start in life. I understand that she had about $50 and no prospect of more—nothing, indeed, that could be called a means of livelihood—one year ago this night.

"There was a man in Chicago who was running a little weekly paper—advanced thought and that sort of thing. Somehow a copy of it had drifted out to Miss Kendall's home, and she had taken an interest in it, writing gratuitous contributions, which had been thankfully received. A correspondence had sprung up between her and the Chicago editor, and in her emergency she wrote to him and asked whether he could pay her a living salary if she would go to work regularly upon his staff. He offered her $20 a week, and it looked to her like wealth.

"She went to Chicago at once and began to work for that paper, and sometimes she got her $20 and sometimes she didn't.

"She must have been direfully unhappy during those months in Chicago, yet she wrote the cheerfulest stuff for that little paper. It was her forte. Her writings had the ring of laughter. Really the girl was a genius in her way.

"By and by the paper began to founder in its past obligations. It promised to do fairly well, but the man who ran it did not know how to make promise pay old debts, and, to make a long story short, he went under. He owed Miss Kendall quite a bit of salary, but of course she could have no hope of getting it. She tried to secure work on the daily papers, and I think she might have succeeded, but the emergency was too pressing. She was absolutely without money. She was face to face with actual starvation.

"At this crisis she received a letter from Curtis Graham. You know him. He wrote as managing editor of the Chronicle and offered Miss Kendall a small sum for a certain number of paragraphs every week for the Sunday edition. He had noticed her work in the little weekly paper and obtained her address from the editor. Miss Kendall sent some paragraphs immediately, with a letter disclosing her utter poverty. Graham promptly telegraphed her some money, for which may heaven forgive him all his sins. He also raised the rate for the paragraphs.

"Thus encouraged, Miss Kendall saved her pennies until she had enough money to come to New York, and then she came. And what joy do you suppose it was that awaited her here?"

"Gordon," said I, "I know what it might have been, but I hope it wasn't. Somehow you've stirred up my interest in this poor girl. Don't, for pity's sake, tell me that she fell in love with Curtis Graham."

"Graham has improved since you knew him," said Palmer. "He is much steadier."

"He is the most erratic, unreliable, unbalanced creature that ever existed," said I; "brilliant, I grant you, and quite the sort of man to win a woman's love. Yet I'd rather see Sylvia Kendall without a penny or a hope of one than married to Curtis Graham."

"I think you do him an injustice," said Palmer, "and yet he is erratic. And my story will prove it. When Miss Kendall reached New York she found that Graham had had a row on the Chronicle and had resigned, and his successor calmly informed the young lady that her services were no longer required."

"That girl and I must have been born under the same star," said I.

"Wait a bit," said he. "While Miss Kendall was staggering under this unexpected blow—for, of course, she didn't know that New York papers change their managing editors as a man might change one hat for another—an office boy gave her a note from Graham. It told her to cheer up and that he would be responsible for the continuance of her salary as a matter of plain business honor."

"Yes," said I, "I can fancy what sort of note Curtis would write. She must have thought him the finest fellow in the world. And I suppose he went to Patagonia the next day, didn't he?"

"No, sir, he didn't," replied Palmer. "By the way, have you seen this?"

He crossed the room and took a copy of a little magazine from a table. It happened that I had already seen this publication. It was a new one and was devoted to fiction and plain common sense.

"Yes," said I. "It looks like a mighty good thing. Who's back of it?"

"I am," replied Palmer, "though that's confidential. Graham suggested it to me and told me that Miss Kendall's work alone would make it pay. It has—well, perhaps not alone, for we've printed some other good stuff, and the business end has been managed rather well."

"It has if you've managed it, Gordon," said I sincerely.

"Well, I have given considerable attention to it, thank you," said he, "and—well, the long and short of it is that we're making quite a bit of money already, though we've been out less than three months. But Miss Kendall's work has been the big hit. We're paying her an enormous salary."

"THE FUTURE IS A GREAT TREASURE HOUSE."

He rubbed his hands and smiled.

"She has an interest, too," he added. "Graham had one, but he sold out to me."

"Sold out?"

"Yes; he's going to San Francisco with an idea of his own."

I got up on my feet.

"Gordon," said I, "did she—did she refuse him?"

"He did not ask the question," replied Palmer quietly.

"Because he knew what the answer would be," said I. "Well, I'm sorry for him, if he loved her, but for her I'm glad"—

The tears suddenly came into Palmer's eyes.

"Not for her," said he, "for me!"

I leaned across the table, staring at him, the handsomest and the finest fellow that I have ever known; a man whose honor took the helm when he was a mere boy and has guided his course ever since, endowed with great wealth and with the infinite, unfailing kindliness that could make it worth so much to her. And the girl's story rushed over me, the poverty and unvarying disappointment, the bitter mockery of love, the unrewarded toil—all destined to end in personal success that must renew her value to herself and in a love so fortunate.

"In one year!" said I.

"In one year!" he returned. "Billy, I tell you that the future is a great treasure house; it holds everything we wish for. You would have called me happy a year ago, when neither of us knew the treasure that the future held for me. So brace up on your own account"—

He was interrupted by the opening of a door, and his mother looked into the room.

"Home so early!" he cried, but she pointed to the clock as she came across to give me greeting. It was after 10.

"Sylvia is in the drawing room," said Mrs. Palmer, "ready to watch the new year in with us."

"Come along," said Palmer to me. "I've been waiting for her. I want her to help me persuade you to step into Graham's shoes. There's money there, my boy, and a chance to make a name. I tell you the new year looks bright for all of us."

Coming Apart.

Unfortunately for Jomes, Mrs. J. is not the most careful of women. In fact, she is the kind of person who would fill the sugar basin with starch and wonder how the tea came to taste so curious. The other day she had been doing some fancy work, and, as usual, not having her work basket by her, she just put the ball of silk she had been using into a tumbler.

James was rather later than usual that night, and as he had been staying overtime licking stamps for circulars it will be easily understood that he was thirsty.

Of course he chose the tumbler with the ball of silk in it to fill with water. It was emptied with two gulps, but there was something in the taste of the last one which made him think all was not as it should have been. Then he felt a tickling at the back of his throat.

"That's mysterious," he said, placing his finger and thumb inside his mouth.

He caught hold of the end of silk and pulled it.

The tickling sensation was worse than ever, and James' expression as he kept on pulling and accumulating yards of silk was quite awful to see.

"Wife, wife," he cried, "send for Dr. Squalls this instant! I'm unravelin'!"

How Suffering Benefits Humanity

By .... HALL CAINE, Author of "The Christian," "The Prodigal Son," Etc.

THE system of future rewards and punishments which came with the sublime theory of another AND IMMORTAL life must have been the grandest and most precious gift which had been offered to suffering man. The grand conception of ANOTHER WORLD that was to right the wrongs OF THIS ONE helped mankind to bear the heavy load of life.

All this, no doubt common to every faith which accepted the theory of the immortality of the soul, was lifted to a still grander altitude in the gospel of Christ. The Founder of Christianity went further than Brahmanism, Buddhism and Confucianism. He not only told mankind to be indifferent to suffering and temporal loss, BUT TO GLORY IN IT, to count it as gain and as the firmest assurance of blessedness in the life to come. He seems to tell man not only that he must suffer because he sins, but that he will sin IF HE DOES NOT SUFFER.

But what is the solution of the problem of suffering for all earnest and believing souls? TO WHAT PURPOSE are we sent into the world to endure its evil and wrong? The only answer I can see to these questions, which have been the subject of eternal dispute, is that suffering is good for us, that it is good for the world that pain and sorrow should exist in it and that God uses sin and suffering to his own great ends. TAKE SUFFERING OUT OF THE WORLD and what is left of the great human virtues? What of heroism, courage, patience and self sacrifice? Is it not a fact that without suffering none of these virtues would be called into being? When, therefore, we ask ourselves why man suffers, always has suffered and will always suffer, is it not sufficient to say that IT IS IN ORDER THAT HE MAY ATTAIN TO THE HIGHEST?

The pilgrimage of man on this earth may be said to resemble in its multitude of troubles the struggle of a swimmer against a powerful tide. It is natural that the swimmer should ask himself why the tide is against him, but when he reaches the place of safety he knows that the struggle for life has developed his muscle, his brain and ALL THE FINEST FACULTIES of his body. Then may it not be that the fight of man against the suffering of this life is meant to develop the muscles of his soul?

Therefore, if in a last word I am asked the question, "Do we get our deserts?" I will boldly answer, "No, we don't, AND WE NEVER SHALL, speaking of humanity as a whole and taking account of the preponderating multitudes to whom life is only another word for misery."

BUT IF I AM ASKED, "DO WE GET WHAT IS BEST FOR US?" I SAY, "YES, ALWAYS AND EVERYWHERE, TAKING OUR LIVES THROUGH AND THROUGH AND HAVING ACCOUNT NOT MERELY FOR OUR MATERIAL, BUT ALSO FOR OUR SPIRITUAL, WELFARE."

The Present Outlook In China

By Dr. W. E. MACKLIN of Nankin, China

I THINK the Chinese nation has a great future. The Chinese are a very laborious people and are hard workers. They are physically hardy, and scholars in this country consider them SUPERIOR TO THE JAPANESE. The Chinese are not aggressive, and I do not think that there is very much to be feared from them.

I would like to see England and America open up China and develop the country. Japanese professors are being secured in the new universities, and I would rather see westerners AND WESTERN IDEAS implanted instead.

I DO NOT THINK THAT THERE WILL EVER BE A BOXER UPRISING IN CHINA WHICH WILL ENDANGER THE FOREIGNERS IN THE COUNTRY TO ANY GREAT EXTENT.

The Boxer trouble was caused by the calling down of the wrath of the gods and dead rulers upon the foreigners to drive them out of the country. The uprisings could have been stopped at any time by the government, BUT THE GOVERNMENT WAS BACK OF IT. It is not likely that the government will undertake another Boxer movement.

The greatest opposition the government has to contend with at present is the collection of the indemnity on account of the Boxer troubles, and the officials collect a house tax of two or three times the amount of that supposed to be levied by the government AND POCKET THE SURPLUS. The government is rotten to the core.

CHINESE SCHOLARS SAY THAT CHINA WILL EVENTUALLY BE A CHRISTIAN NATION, ALTHOUGH IT MAY TAKE CENTURIES TO ACCOMPLISH IT. HOWEVER, A GREAT MANY CHINESE ARE CHRISTIANS NOW.

Crowded Centers And the Suburbs

By PERCIVAL CHUBB, Prominent Sociologist

AT present our children are the victims of a civic atmosphere tainted by political corruption, by lawlessness, by gambling and intemperance, and of general surroundings which lack—in the poorer districts, at least—any ELEVATING and CIVILIZING beauty. The task of providing adequate open spaces, healthy tenements and wholesome opportunities in overcrowded cities for recreation and exercise is going to be enormously costly, AND IT IS WORTH WHILE. The alternative policy is to give the city over TO TRADING and to transplant its population to the suburbs.

IF ONLY THE SUBURBS COULD BE PLANNED AND BUILT UP IN THE RIGHT WAY, WITH PROVISION FOR ALL THE NECESSITIES OF REFINED BUT PLAIN LIVING, THE IDEAL SOLUTION WOULD BE FOUND.

How Little Dorothy Studies In School

"I THINK I shall take Muriel out of school and teach her myself this winter," said young mother No. 1. "There must be something defective about the public school system, for she doesn't know how to read yet."

Young mother No. 2 smiled reminiscently. "I tried that with Dorothy last year," she said.

"With what success?"

"Well, we got on very well until we came to double letters. There the child balked, for she couldn't seem to learn to spell the word without repeating the letter twice. 'You mustn't say b-e-l-l, Dorothy,' I insisted. 'Spell word b-e-double l.'

"Finally I succeeded in drilling the doubling process into her head only too thoroughly, as I found one day when I wanted to show her father how she had progressed under my tuition. I pointed to a lesson which began, 'Up, up, Mary, the sun is high,' and told her to read it. She looked at it for a moment with a puzzled frown, then she began confidently:

"'Double up, Mary, the sun is high!'

"At her father's suggestion she returned to school next day."—New York Press.

He Lost His Nickel.

"What's the matter, bub?" queried the kind hearted old man who saw a newsboy looking around in front of the Union station the other evening as if in search of a lost article.

"I'll git licked when I git home," sniffled the body in reply.

"Who'll lick you?"

"Me fadder."

"What for?"

"For 'osin' a nickel."

"Sure you lost it around here?"

"Dead sure, and me fadder won't take no excuse."

"He won't, eh? Well, we must see what we can do about it. You appear to be a very nice boy, and I don't want you to be licked for an accident."

"Den you'll gimme de nickel, will you?" asked the lad as a grin lurked at the corners of his mouth.

"I'll do better than that, bub—a heap better. Here are my spectacles. Put them on and look around again, and you may find two nickels instead of one. If you do, I won't ask you to divide."—Chicago News.

Ungrateful.

"Say, that little Frenchman who came into the saloon the other night where we were all drinking and asked for help was the most ungrateful little wretch in the world. Did you hear what he called us when he was leaving?"

"No. What?"

An Epitaph.

His ankles are weary.
He's footsore and lame;
Sensations of woe
Rise all over his frame.
He is dizzy and faint
With the roar of the throng—
His wife went out shopping
And took him along.

She is fragile and fair,
He is lusty and tall,
Yet she's blithe as a bird
And enjoying it all.
He says for his tombstone
These words won't be wrong:
"My wife went out shopping
And took me along."

Ben Butler at Fort Fisher

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

December 24-25, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

DEC. 24, 1864, was the date of the first attack on Fort Fisher, N. C. This famous stronghold was located on the peninsula of Federal point and was the largest earthwork in the Confederacy. Previous to July, 1862, the defenses of the Confederacy at this place had consisted of some small detached breastworks and one inclosed battery, where four guns were mounted. A new commandant, Colonel William Lamb, was appointed in 1862, and he at once set to work to construct an elaborate system of parapets and casements to shelter soldiers and cannon during battle. When completed according to plan, the defenses would extend 4,000 feet along the sea front and about 1,500 feet across the peninsula. The long sea face was intended to guard against an attack from the beach by columns approaching in boats, and the land face would defend against a column approaching from the mainland.

There was also a detached battery, Fort Buchanan, located down at the point and commanding New inlet, the channel to Cape Fear river and the port of Wilmington. The main parapet of Fort Fisher was twenty-five feet thick and was sodded at the outside with marsh grass. The positions for the cannon were protected by traverses or side walls extending twelve feet above the parapet and thirteen feet back from it, thus forming a series of inclosed chambers, having the three exposed sides guarded.

The land face had twenty guns in position, and some distance out from the parapet there was a line of torpedoes buried in the sand, with electric wires to the commander's quarters, to enable him to explode the murderous machines whenever a hostile force should venture to the works. On the sea face there were twenty-four cannon in strong batteries, and offshore was a system of submarine torpedoes, connected with the fort by electric wires.

The fort had not been completed when, in 1864, the Federal authorities determined that its capture was a pressing military necessity. After the closing of the port of Mobile by Farragut in August of that year Wilmington, on Cape Fear river, just above Fort Fisher, was almost the sole depot for traffic between the Confederacy and the outside world. During the fifteen months from October, 1863, to December, 1864, nearly 400 blockade running attempts at this point were successful, and only about fifty attempts failed.

THE NEW IRONSIDES BOMBARDING FORT FISHER.

Some Confederates considered Wilmington more important than any other port, not excepting Charleston, and even of more value to the life of the Confederacy than the possession of Richmond. With Wilmington and the Cape Fear river open, the supplies that would have reached the Confederate armies would have enabled them to maintain the contest for years. The blockade was a failure, and Fort Fisher, by its commanding position and great strength, effectually barred the way against the Federal navy, and without a naval armament in the harbor Wilmington, if taken by Federal forces, could not have been held. Fort Fisher was the key, for it guarded Wilmington both from land and naval attacks, and up to December, 1864, the north made no serious attempt to close the famous port by seizing the land defenses and occupying the harbor. When, however, Lee's army was at bay on James river, and it was seen that a nearby port was essential to him to supply the munitions of war, Wilmington became an object, and the active military and naval as well as the administrative authorities began to plan for an attack.

Finally an idea adopted by General B. F. Butler and approved by the war and navy departments for a combined movement of naval and land forces was authorized by General Grant, and Butler and Admiral D. D. Porter were selected to lead. A feature of the attack was the explosion of a floating mine of a couple of hundred tons of powder near the walls of the fort, the expectation being that the walls of sand and logs would be jarred down by concussion, and the alarm and confusion to follow would paralyze the garrison, and a prompt advance from all points would enable the assailants to secure the works.
